Mr. REED. Mr. President, on that point I simply call the attention of the Chair to the fact, although it is immaterial now, that we proceeded this morning with the roll call, after which the chairman of the committee asked that the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts be laid before the Senate, and that was done. In my judgment that is the transaction of business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair does not find it necessary to rule on that point now.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, the point was that the Senate met after a recess and the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts was already the pending amendment, and, therefore, it was not necessary to lay it before the Senate again.

Mr. REED. It is utterly immaterial at this time.

Mr. President, I was inviting attention to the character of this tax. The proposed amendment, after the fight against the repeal of the tax upon corporations had been started upon this side of the Chamber, was brought in, we understand, at the instance of the so-called agricultural bloc; but I call attention to the character of this tax. The language of the amendment is:

> Every domestic corporation shall pay annually a special excise tax with respect to carrying on or doing business.

It is a tax upon the right of a corporation to do business. The amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts is a proposition to exempt a corporation doing business from that tax on the ground that it is a holding company and holds the stock of other corporations. That may be true; but it is still a corporation doing business and it ought to pay an excise tax, because it does business the same as any other corporation. Any corporation that can not afford to pay to the Federal Government $1 each year on each $1,000 of the actual value of its capital stock had better go out of business.

Let us see for a moment how this amendment will work out in actual practice. Enterprising gentlemen conclude to gain control of a large number of corporations and put them under one central control. Accordingly they proceed, by various devices which are too numerous even to pause to dwell upon, to acquire control of 51 per cent of the stock of each of a number of various other corporations. That may leave 49 per cent of the stock utterly protesting against the control of the company being taken over by a central or holding organization and protesting against such combinations, which we all understand are made for the purpose of restraining trade, for ninety-nine times out of one hundred there are two reasons for these consolidations: One is to restrain trade, to control prices, to limit output; and the other reason is that those who organize the holding company expect to make large profits speculating in its stock.

The history of this country is replete with the story of this class of corporations, and they have been one of the means employed to wreck honest going competitive corporations and to enrich the stock jobber and the stock gambler. It has come to a point so low and so utterly at war with the welfare of this country that in many instances it has amounted to a public scandal.

Let us take, for instance, the holding companies which were organized to take over the Rock Island road and certain other roads and combine them, contrary to the real spirit of the Sherman Antitrust Act. A few years ago I had that story at my fingers' ends, but I am able now only to give it in its broadest details.

Some three or four railroads existed as separate institutions. A holding company was organized. The majority of the stock in these railroads was turned over or swapped to that holding company for a part of its stock, and thus a combination was effected and an immense sum of money realized to those who had promoted this scheme. Under the bill as proposed, that holding company organized by these stock jobbers and stock gamblers will be allowed to deduct from the total of its capital stock the aggregate of the capital stock of the subsidiary companies that it took over, and thus reduce the tax upon its stock, although it has all the benefit of being a corporation, and although it must bring a particular and peculiar benefit, or it would not exist.

That is not the end of that story. A holding company was then organized for the holding company, and this bill would in like manner allow the holding company of the holding company to escape its taxes to the extent I have already stated.

That was not the end of this scheme. There was a holding company organized for the holding company, and again a holding company organized for the holding company of the holding company. Five times, if my recollection serves me rightly, this scheme was worked. Five times, according to the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts, these stock jobbers and gamblers, these men who promote combinations in restraint of trade, these individuals who seek to gather within a single control vast properties and to destroy competition, would have been exempted or relieved from taxation under this amendment.

Mr. President, let me call attention to the way this will work: I am informed that, although the chairman of the committee called this matter up especially this morning and asked to have it acted on, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], who is the author of the amendment, is ill and can not be at the Senate, and has sent a request that the amendment be passed over until he can be at the Senate. Under those circumstances, I will bring my remarks to a speedy conclusion.

The United States Steel Corporation will afford a splendid example of how this amendment will work; and I shall reserve my further remarks in regard to the matter until the Senator from Massachusetts can be present, or until the chairman of the committee again asks that this amendment be laid before the Senate.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, my attention was diverted. I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri what his suggestion was concerning this matter?

Mr. REED. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] came to me while I was talking and stated that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] was ill and could not be present, and that they desired to have this amendment passed over. The Senator's attention was directed somewhere else, and he did not hear me.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I understand that the Senator from Massachusetts proposes to modify his amendment. In view of that fact, as the amendment can not be offered in his absence because it is in the third degree, and no doubt the bill can not be finished to-day, I think it would be well to have the amendment passed over until he can be here.

Mr. PENROSE. The arrangement is entirely satisfactory. I simply wanted to know what it was.

Mr. CURTIS. I understood that the Senator from Indiana had talked to the Senator from Pennsylvania about it.

Mr. PENROSE. Only in a very general way. All right, Mr. President; then let the further consideration of the amendment go over until Monday, when the senior Senator from Massachusetts, who is absent on account of illness, can be present to submit his modification, and let us go on with the balance of the bill. Is that satisfactory?

Mr. REED. It is perfectly satisfactory to me. I am giving way out of courtesy to the Senator.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to passing over temporarily this amendment? The Chair hears none, and it will be passed over. The Secretary will state the next amendment passed over.

The READING CLERK. The next amendment passed over is, on page 239, in the paragraph beginning with line 1, down to and including line 19, passed over at the request of the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER]. In line 12, after the word "cents," it is proposed to insert a colon and the following proviso:

Provided, That where a premium is charged for the issuance, execution, renewal, or continuance of such bond the tax shall be 1 cent on each dollar or fractional part thereof of the premium charged.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the next amendment passed over.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, may I call the Senator's attention to the fact that, as I understand, a substitute amendment is to be offered for this whole section; and if that is the case there is no necessity now of agreeing to this amendment or any amendment to the schedule.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, my understanding is exactly the same as that of the Senator from Utah.

Mr. REED. May I inquire what the substitute is?

Mr. SMOOT. It is a different way of imposing a tax upon bonds; also the insurance provisions generally.

Mr. REED. Who is getting it up?

Mr. SMOOT. I think the chairman of the committee will offer the amendment.

Mr. REED. Is he prepared to offer it now?

Mr. SMOOT. I do not know whether he is ready or not.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, does the committee propose to stand by the amendment, No. 64, in this printed list of amendments, that has been suggested to this section on page 239? If so, I do not see that any provision with reference to life insurance and other companies has any connection at all with this.

Mr. MCCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. MCCUMBER. It seems to me that we can settle this matter very quickly, as there is an intention to substitute amendment No. 32, which is printed on page 6 of the proposed amendments. That is the amendment which goes back to page 107 and introduces a new method of taxation of these insurance companies, which, of course, will take the place of some of these stamp taxes.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I do not understand that that has anything to do with the surety company premiums. This has to do with the tax on insurance companies, found in section 246. The amendment to which the Senator refers covers insurance companies, but it has not anything to do with taxing surety companies on the premiums that are paid. It seems to me that no matter what you do with amendment No. 32, you do not reach No. 64 at all. They are separate matters.

Mr. MCCUMBER. If amendment No. 32 is agreed to, then the committee proposes to strike out entirely the portion on page 239. As this is a substitute, it will come before that. The latter amendment relates to stamp taxes. So we would have to adopt No. 32 first and then strike out the language on page 239; but if we do not adopt No. 32 as a substitute we want to keep it in.

Mr. FLETCHER. Does the Senator mean that if we do not adopt No. 32 we will adopt No. 64?

Mr. MCCUMBER. Yes; we will strike out the language on page 239.

Mr. FLETCHER. I really see no connection between the two; but I have no objection to adopting No. 32.

Mr. SMOOT. The connection is this: We want to impose the same sort of a tax upon all the insurance companies.

Mr. FLETCHER. I understand that we want to tax the insurance companies alike, but this surety company tax is on the premiums. That is not affected by the tax on insurance companies.

Mr. SMOOT. The insurance companies would pay it.

Mr. FLETCHER. I know that; but it is a different tax. I understand it is proposed now to deal with No. 32.

Mr. MCCUMBER. Yes; I ask unanimous consent that we go back to page 107 for the purpose of offering amendment No. 32.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will state the proposed amendment.

The READING CLERK. On page 107 strike out lines 13 to 22, inclusive, and in lieu thereof insert two new sections, as follows:

SEC. 246. (a) That, in lieu of the taxes imposed by sections 230 and 1000, there shall be levied, collected, and paid for the calendar year 1922, and for each taxable year thereafter, upon the net income of every insurance company (other than a life insurance company) a tax as follows:

(1) In the case of such a domestic insurance company the same percentage of its net income as is imposed upon other corporations by section 230;

(2) In the case of such a foreign insurance company the same percentage of its net income from sources within the United States as is imposed upon the net income of other corporations by section 230.

(b) In the case of an insurance company subject to the tax imposed by this section—

(1) The term "gross income" means the combined gross amount earned during the taxable year from investment income and from underwriting income as provided in this subdivision, computed on the basis of the underwriting and investment exhibit of the annual statement approved by the National Convention of Insurance Commissioners;

(2) The term "net income" means the gross income as defined in paragraph (1) of this subdivision less the deductions allowed by section 247;

(3) The term "investment income" means the gross amount of income earned during the taxable year from interest, dividends, and rents, computed as follows:

To all interest, dividends, and rents received during the year add interest, dividends, and rents due and accrued at the end of the taxable year, and deduct all interest, dividends, and rents due and accrued at the end of the preceding year;

(4) The term "underwriting income" means the premiums earned on insurance contracts during the taxable year less losses incurred and expenses incurred;

(5) The term "premiums earned on insurance contracts during the taxable year" means an amount computed as follows:

From the amount of gross premiums written on insurance contracts during the taxable year, deduct return premiums (or, in the case of mutual companies, dividends or unabsorbed premiums returned or credited to the assured) and premiums paid for reinsurance. To the result so obtained add unearned premiums on outstanding business at the end of the preceding taxable year and deduct unearned premiums on outstanding business at the end of the taxable year;

(6) The term "losses incurred" means losses incurred during the taxable year on insurance contracts, computed as follows:

To losses paid during the taxable year, add salvage and reinsurance recoverable outstanding at the end of the preceding taxable year, and deduct salvage and reinsurance recoverable outstanding at the end of the taxable year. To the result so obtained add all unpaid losses outstanding at the end of the taxable year and deduct unpaid losses outstanding at the end of the preceding taxable year.

(7) The term "expenses incurred" means all expenses shown on the annual statement approved by the National Convention of Insurance Commissioners, and shall be computed as follows:

To all expenses paid during the taxable year add expenses unpaid at the end of the taxable year and deduct expenses unpaid at the end of the preceding taxable year. For the purpose of computing the net income subject to the tax imposed by this section there shall be deducted from expenses incurred as defined in this paragraph all expenses incurred which are not allowed as deductions by section 247.

SEC. 247. (a) That in computing the net income of an insurance company subject to the tax imposed by section 246 there shall be allowed as deductions:

(1) All ordinary and necessary expenses incurred, as provided in paragraph (1) of subdivision (a) of section 234;

(2) All interest as provided in paragraph (2) of subdivision (a) of section 234;

(3) In the case of mutual marine insurance companies, unless otherwise allowed, amounts repaid to policyholders on account of premiums previously paid by them, and interest paid upon such amounts between the ascertainment and the payment thereof;

(4) Taxes as provided in paragraph (3) of subdivision (a) of section 234;

(5) Losses incurred;

(6) Bad debts in the nature of agency balances and bills receivable ascertained to be worthless and charged off within the taxable year;

(7) The amount received as dividends from corporations as provided in paragraph (6) of subdivision (a) of section 234;

(8) The amount of interest earned during the taxable year which under paragraph (4) of subdivision (b) of section 213 is exempt from taxation under this title, and the amount of interest allowed as a credit under subdivision (a) of section 236;

(9) A reasonable allowance for the exhaustion, wear and tear of property, as provided in paragraph (7) of subdivision (a) of section 234;

(10) In the case of such a domestic insurance company, the net income of which (computed without the benefit of this paragraph) is $25,000 or less, the sum of $2,000.

(b) In the case of a foreign corporation the deductions allowed in this section shall be allowed to the extent provided in subdivision (b) of section 234.

(c) Nothing in this section or in section 246 shall be construed to permit the same item to be twice deducted.

Mr. SMOOT. I am informed by the expert that there is to be a change made in the proposed amendment. There was an error discovered as to one or two items in it, and in order to have it conform with the plan agreed upon, I ask that the amendment may go over and that we proceed with the amendment on page 239 of the bill—the bonds, indemnity, and surety provision.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah propose that the entire amendment numbered 32 shall go over?

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that it be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I thought we were going to act on this amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. I have just stated that in reading it more closely it was found that there are one or two amendments which must be made to it. I ask that amendment No. 32 go over for the present until we can rewrite it and cover the two items I have spoken of. I ask now that we proceed with the amendment on page 239.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have no objection. I just wanted to understand the procedure.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and amendment No. 32, proposed by the Senator from North Dakota, will be passed over.

Mr. SMOOT. Now, I propose amendment No. 64, on page 239, to strike out lines 1 to 19, both inclusive.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah want the proposed amendment divided? As it is before the Chair, it is a single amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. That is right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Beginning with the title "Amendment No. 64." Does the Senator from Utah offer that as an entire amendment?

Mr. SMOOT. I can offer it as an entire amendment.

Mr. REED. I hope the Senator will not. It is entirely too cumbersome to handle in that way, and I hope he will offer it by lines.

Mr. SMOOT. Then we will take each item up and offer it item by item. The first amendment, then, will be to strike out lines 1 to 19, both inclusive.

Mr. REED. I ask the Senator from Utah briefly to explain to the Senate the purpose of the amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. Under title 5 of the bill, the taxes on premiums of insurance companies are abolished entirely. If this provision which we ask to have stricken out is agreed to, all insurance companies will be put on one basis and under one form of taxation, and that is the object of this amendment.

Mr. REED. Where is that form provided for?

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator will look at amendment No. 32, which I have just asked to have go over, he will find the form in that amendment; but, as I stated, there will have to be two or three amendments made to amendment No. 32 in order to perfect it.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I put the question to the Senator from Utah in all fairness, whether we ought to strike out the present substantive law until we know what is proposed to be substituted for it, and whether we should not adopt the new matter before we strike out the existing law? I would be entirely in the dark. I may be quite agreeable to all these changes; but I do not know what it is proposed to substitute.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say to the Senator, briefly, that the insurance companies of the United States have felt that the existing law is rather cumbersome and in some cases unfair. They are not asking for any decrease in the amount of tax to be collected. In fact, the plan which has been agreed upon will raise more revenue than the existing law; but it simplifies it, and all companies are treated alike. All the companies in the United States, as far as I know, have agreed to the new form of taxation.

Mr. REED. But here is the situation we will be in if we are not careful. We will strike out the present law, and that is what we are about to do now. Then there will be no law. Then the question will be, Will the new proposition, which we have not yet seen, be acceptable or not? It might not be accepted at all by the Senate. It might be modified in such a form that the Senate would prefer the existing law. Therefore the proper way to proceed is to bring forward the new proposition and move it as a substitute for the language which is to be stricken out.

Mr. SMOOT. This is a part of the plan. We have already abolished Title V, covering insurance and transportation. In doing that we must insert in the bill a new provision which we intend to do as soon as amendment No. 32 is perfected.

Mr. REED. But the Senator is undertaking to do it backward.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think there is some confusion as to what we are doing now. What we may do hereafter is another thing, but what is proposed to do now, I wish to say to the Senator from Missouri, is simply to strike out a section, which relates only to stamp taxes on certain bonds, indemnity, and insurance, and on certain premiums. It is merely a stamp tax with which the amendment deals.

I wish to ask the Senator from Utah if in abolishing the stamp taxes imposed in this paragraph of the section he proposes anywhere else to impose stamp taxes or any other kind of taxes in lieu of the stamp taxes?

Mr. SMOOT. No; I will say to the Senator that we do not.

Mr. SIMMONS. I supposed the Senator did not.

Mr. POMERENE. Under the bill as reported to the Senate, while checks and drafts which are payable on demand are not to be stamped, those that are payable in future are to be stamped, I understand.

Mr. SMOOT. That is the present law.

Mr. POMERENE. What amount of revenue is derived from that source?

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, we can not state exactly as to each item, but I will say that the change in the form of taxation which has been agreed to by all the insurance companies will bring us more revenue than the present law. The insurance companies are perfectly willing to pay it. They say they will gladly pay it, because of the fact that everybody will be treated alike. It simplifies the form and is much preferable to the present plan.

Mr. POMERENE. But the Senator is addressing himself now to insurance papers. The Senator said something about stamp taxes generally, and I was addressing myself to the general subject. I would like to see the stamp taxes on all checks and drafts removed.

Mr. SMOOT. The very amendment I am asking the Senate to consider removes the stamp taxes on those bonds.

Mr. SIMMONS. It only removes them on indemnity and surety bonds and upon premiums.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, that is the section or paragraph which is under consideration now.

Mr. FLETCHER. They have already been removed on other documents of the same kind.

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes; of the same kind, but there are many other stamp taxes contained in the bill which are not repealed.

Mr. SMOOT. I thought the Senator from Ohio had reference only to indemnity and surety bonds.

Mr. SIMMONS. What we are dealing with now is only the stamp tax on bonds and premiums.

Mr. SMOOT. Bonds, indemnity and surety, and premiums.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I understand the striking out of paragraph 2, on page 239, means that there shall be no tax whatever upon surety bonds.

Mr. SMOOT. That is correct.

Mr. KING. There is no provision contemplated in the amendments hereafter to be offered which will supersede or take the place of paragraph 2?

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, it is all included in the premium tax that will be paid by all insurance companies of every kind and nature.

Mr. KING. There will be a premium tax paid, and it is contemplated that that tax will raise more than the smaller taxes derived from insurance premiums, and so forth.

Mr. SMOOT. In the past we have not placed a tax upon incomes of insurance companies. Now, we are going to place a tax upon the incomes of insurance companies the same as we do on all other companies, and that tax upon the incomes of insurance companies will amount to more money than the present form of taxation.

Mr. KING. I understand that.

Mr. SMOOT. The amendment we offer is simply to bring that about.

Mr. KING. I am aware of that, and it is my understanding that a general tax will be levied upon those insurance companies which will supersede this small tax.

Mr. SMOOT. That is correct.

Mr. KING. This is what I was about to ask my colleague: What will be the result of bonds, surety bonds or otherwise, which are furnished where the sureties are individuals rather than insurance companies? I suppose no tax will be imposed upon them.

Mr. SMOOT. Whatever gains there may be from any kind of business of that sort will have to pay a tax just the same as a company.

Mr. KING. As the Senator knows, in private business very often individuals obtain their bonds from other individuals, from friends.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator means by individual signatures and personal responsibility?

Mr. KING. Yes; personal surety bonds. There is no purpose to tax them?

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, the revenue from that source would be almost negligible; it is insignificant.

Mr. KING. Absolutely, and if we exempt insurance companies from taxation upon surety bonds furnished obviously private individuals who may furnish surety bonds ought not to be taxed. I am assured that the pending bill does not tax them, and no amendment is contemplated by the committee that would impose a tax upon private individuals for furnishing indemnity or surety bonds.

Mr. SMOOT. The only amendment contemplated by the committee is that hereafter the tax upon all kinds of insurance companies will be based upon their income and not stamps upon premiums.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the only objection I have to the amendment is the method of procedure. The Senator refers to the amendment proposed by the committee. The amendments which he speaks of are not amendments that were proposed by the committee.

Mr. SMOOT. That is true.

Mr. REED. They were proposed by a majority of the committee without consultation with the minority, and the minority does not know what is in them. They are not even here now for our inspection, and, I understand, are not fully completed. With that state of affairs we are asked to strike out the substantive law now existing, which will leave us without any law, and then we will hereafter be presented with something. It may be entirely acceptable to every Member of the Senate, it may be utterly rejected by the Senate, or it may be so modified that it will not be the kind of proposition which the Senator has in mind. Under those circumstances the Senate will be left in the position of having stricken out the present law.

Mr. FLETCHER. It is not the present law. It is in the text of the House bill.

Mr. REED. It is stricken out of the text of the House bill. I think it is the present law, is it not?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; it is the present law.

Mr. REED. We will be left without the present law before us. It will be repealed, wiped out, and we may be left to confront a proposition that we can not accept.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to call the Senator's attention to the fact that we have already stricken out Title V, which is the premium tax on insurance companies. I recognize the fact, of course, that it would be more logical to wait until amendment 32 is acted upon before we take up this title. But even though we did not act upon amendment 32 after abolishing Title V, we ought to strike out this section.

Mr. REED. But we ought not to strike it out until we know what is to be put in place of it.

Mr. SMOOT. There will be nothing put in the place of it, because this is a stamp-tax provision, and it will go out, as we have abolished Title V, the premium tax.

Mr. REED. Then I was misled by the Senator's remark that he had something to propose in substitution for it.

Mr. SMOOT. That is in amendment numbered 32. The Senator from Missouri will remember that when the act of 1918 was under consideration this very plan was agreed to, not only by the full committee but by the Senate at that time.

Mr. REED. Which plan?

Mr. SMOOT. The plan we proposed to adopt, but which went out in conference.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is true. The statement the Senator is making is correct.

Mr. REED. What conference?

Mr. SMOOT. The conference between the House and the Senate.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator will pardon me, in 1918——

Mr. REED. Oh, the Senator is speaking of some other year?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes. In 1918 the committee undertook to rewrite the insurance provision of the 1917 act and place it upon a different principle. We did rewrite it and it was adopted by the Senate, but in conference it was stricken out. Now the committee this year readopts the plan that passed the Senate before and was stricken out in conference.

Mr. REED. The Senator means the majority members of the committee?

Mr. SIMMONS. No; I mean the whole committee.

Mr. SMOOT. The whole committee, and at that time the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] was chairman of the committee. That committee unanimously agreed that the plan of collecting taxes from insurance companies should be changed, and we agreed upon the plan of placing a tax on the incomes of all insurance companies instead of the tax that was imposed upon the premiums.

I will state one of the reasons for that, and there are dozens of other reasons. The old line companies that had been in operation for a long time, their business well established, had every advantage of the new company that entered the field and had to secure all new business. It was for that reason that the Senate decided in 1918 to make the change, and it is for that reason now that the committee wish to make it again. We think that we can convince the House of Representatives now that the policy is right.

Mr. SIMMONS. Will the Senator from Utah let me ask one question? I understand perfectly well that the committee agreed to report substantially the same provisions with reference to insurance that the committee reported in 1918——

Mr. SMOOT. That is correct.

Mr. SIMMONS. And which were passed by the Senate and stricken out in conference. But I wish to ask the Senator whether, in the amendment which was read from the desk a little while ago and read from the printed sheet of proposed amendments presented by majority members of the committee, there has been any substantial change in the plan that was agreed upon by the full committee in 1918 relative to insurance?

Mr. SMOOT. I think, as far as the life insurance part of the bill is concerned, it is almost identical.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is what I thought.

Mr. SMOOT. I think there is hardly any change. I have not examined it to see whether there was any technical change.

Mr. SIMMONS. We are dealing now only with life insurance.

Mr. SMOOT. May I say to the Senator that if it is not in exact words, the substance of it and the result of it are exactly the same.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have not myself examined it, but I was advised by experts that it was practically the same.

Mr. SMOOT. We could have agreed to that, as I have already said, but there are two or three changes that were made necessary and they are simply minor changes not affecting the principle at all. In order to clear up the doubt of one or two people who claim that there may be a construction put upon it that would be adverse to their particular company and which will make no difference in the plan itself, those minor amendments may be agreed to and, of course, we want to do it. They will be ready in a very little while.

Mr. SIMMONS. My understanding is that as to life insurance the majority members of the committee made no substantial or real change in the action of the full committee which was a tender of the same plan that we adopted in the Senate before and which was stricken out in conference.

Mr. SMOOT. It is just the same as in 1918.

Mr. SIMMONS. The amendments which are offered by the majority of the committee propose a somewhat different method of taxing marine insurance and fire insurance?

Mr. SMOOT. That is true, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Utah will allow these amendments to go over until the language which is to be substituted may be laid before the Senate. That would be the only right way to proceed. I do not think it is vital, and I do not want to take the time of the Senate in insisting upon that course, but I repeat I hope the Senator from Utah will do that. Let us go on with something else. I have an amendment which I can present here at any time.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think that would be the orderly way to proceed anyway.

Mr. REED. Unquestionably that would be the orderly way to proceed.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Missouri will not insist upon that, for if we do not agree upon this amendment, then the excise taxes are to follow immediately, and then we shall not want to consider them. I wish to assure the Senator from Missouri that this is not a new scheme on the part of the Senate. This whole proposition is virtually what the committee, both Democrats and Republicans, unanimously agreed to in 1918.

Mr. REED. But 1918 is a long time ago.

Mr. SMOOT. I plead with the Senator from Missouri to let this amendment go in, and then if at any time he desires to ask that the vote whereby it was agreed to may be reconsidered, so far as I am concerned, I shall be glad to grant the request.

Mr. REED. If the understanding is that if we allow these amendments to go in and hereafter the Senator from North Carolina or some other member of the Committee on Finance upon this side shall ask for a reconsideration the question shall be reopened, I shall not object.

Mr. SMOOT. I will agree to that as to this amendment. Of course, I should not like to have such an understanding as to other amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. PENROSE. The suggestion of the Senator from Missouri is entirely acceptable, I think, to the majority of the committee, and not only as to this matter but as to nearly every other matter of importance. The committee does not want to be unreasonable.

Mr. REED. I am perfectly willing to take the assurance of the chairman of the Committee on Finance and of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT].

Mr. PENROSE. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. REED. I simply ask that we proceed slowly enough with the other amendments, so that we may get an idea of what they are.

Mr. SMOOT. Let me explain them to the Senator, and I think he will consent that all of the amendments with the exception of the last one be agreed to en bloc.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that under the order of the Senate already made the Secretary has authority to renumber the subsections.

Mr. SMOOT. I think that is true, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, that will be the order.

The Chair is informed that the committee amendment on page 237, line 24, has already been agreed to. Without objection, the vote by which the amendment was adopted, for this purpose only, will be reconsidered. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 237, in line 24, of the committee amendment, which has been now reconsidered, it is proposed to strike out "3, 4, and 5" and to insert in lieu thereof "2, 3, and 4."

Mr. SMOOT. That is only a changing of the numerals, I will say to the Senator, because of the amendment previously adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment is agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next amendment passed over will be stated.

Mr. PENROSE. Now, Mr. President, it will be in order to go to page 125 of the bill and proceed to the consideration of section 257, which follows the subhead "Returns to be public records." That section was passed over at the request of the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], and I think if he is ready to go on with the discussion the Senate ought to hear him.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, there is some misunderstanding. I understood that we had agreed thus far to the first line of amendment 64, which was to "strike out lines 1 to 19, both inclusive, on page 239. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania understand that we agreed to all of the clauses in amendment numbered 64?

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator from Missouri that by unanimous consent the Secretary was instructed to change the figures where there is an amendment which necessitates such a change.

Mr. REED. Is that all that is involved in it?

Mr. SMOOT. That is all there is in it.

Mr. REED. Very well; let the Secretary proceed. I beg pardon of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I ask the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Finance, and request unanimous consent to recur to the provision at the foot of page 193 relative to the matter of exemption from taxation of admissions to agricultural fairs, and so forth. I have an amendment at that point, to which I think there will be no objection, to be inserted on the top of page 194, in line 2, before the word "maintenance," so that it will include not only maintenance but improvements which may be made in connection with agricultural fairs, such, for instance, as additional sheds for cattle and other buildings.

I think there will be no objection to the amendment, and I ask unanimous consent that I may offer it.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, the amendment intended to be proposed by the Senator from Minnesota will be accepted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 194, in the House text of the bill, before the word "maintenance," in line 1, it is proposed to insert the word "improvements" and a comma.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to. The Secretary will state the amendment passed over on page 125.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I think I had better suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] wishes to be heard, and he is not in the Chamber.

Mr. PENROSE. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Glass	McLean	Smoot
Brandegee	Hale	McNary	Spencer
Broussard	Harris	Nelson	Stanley
Bursum	Harrison	New	Sterling
Capper	Heflin	Newberry	Sutherland
Caraway	Hitchcock	Nicholson	Swanson
Culberson	Jones, N. Mex.	Norris	Townsend
Cummins	Kendrick	Oddie	Trammell
Curtis	Kenyon	Overman	Wadsworth
Dial	Keyes	Page	Walsh, Mass.
Dillingham	King	Penrose	Warren
Edge	Ladd	Phipps	Watson, Ga.
Fernald	Lenroot	Poindexter	Watson, Ind.
Fletcher	McCormick	Pomerene	Willis
France	McCumber	Reed
Frelinghuysen	McKellar	Sheppard
Gerry	McKinley	Simmons

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Sixty-five Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present. The question is on agreeing to the amendment found on page 125, beginning with line 1 and ending with line 11 on page 126.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, this portion of the bill went over at the request of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE]. He has just informed me that he will not press any request of this kind, but that he will look after whatever matters he may have in mind in this connection when the bill goes into the Senate. He practically informed me that it would be entirely satisfactory to him for the Senate to go on and take action on the paragraphs either agreeing or disagreeing to them. I therefore ask that the question be put and that the Senate may vote on the question at this time.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I know that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] was in that frame of mind. I had a talk with him, however, and I understood that he was going to his office, and that he expected to return.

So far as I am concerned, regardless of the attitude of the Senator from Wisconsin, I am not satisfied with this proposition as it now stands.

The section provides—and I will say, for the benefit of Senators who may not have the page, that I am referring to section 257, printed at page 125 of the bill—

> That returns upon which the tax has been determined by the commissioner shall constitute public records, but they shall be open to inspection only upon order of the President and under rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary and approved by the President.

Under that language, if the Congress wanted these records for any purpose, even though it proposed to treat them as highly confidential, it could not secure them unless two things concurred: First, that the President should issue his order; and, second, that the Congress should use the records in the manner and form prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury. My opinion is that that sort of restriction upon the right of Congress is wholly unjustifiable, and it might work infinite harm.

The Congress can be trusted to handle with propriety these returns just as well as the Secretary of the Treasury. I am not in favor of putting into the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury or the President of the United States the authority by law to deprive Congress of information, and yet that is exactly what this amendment does.

Mr. President, there was a contention, which may or may not have been well founded, to the effect that all tax returns should be made absolutely public, so that anybody could go down and look at the books and publish the returns to the world. There is much to be said in favor of that proposition. Because a corporation makes a return to the Federal Government, why should that return to the Federal Government be kept secret any more than the return of any taxpayer to his county officers? If I make a return upon my personal property or upon my income under the laws of my State, I am not entitled to have that kept a secret. There are many arguments in favor of removing all secrecy. For instance, suppose that I am a tax dodger. Suppose that I make a return of only a small part of my property, and suppose that that record can be examined by the public generally, and it comes to the attention of some citizen that I have not made a correct return. That citizen thereupon is in a position to lay the facts before the tax officers and see to it that I am compelled to bear my just share of the tax burdens. The matter could properly be presented to a grand jury for the purpose of indicting me for a false return.

That is true in most States as to city taxes, as to county taxes, and as to State taxes; but when a concern makes a return to the Federal Government we are told that that return shall be a secret, sacredly kept, not by the Government but by a small part of the Government officers down here in the office of the Secretary of the Treasury, and that even the Congress of the United States can not secure that information unless the President graciously grants to Congress the privilege of inspecting a record which this bill declares to be a public record, and unless, in addition to that, Congress shall receive it under rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury and approved by the President.

Let us assume a case. Let us assume that some great corporation or some extremely wealthy individual or a large group of them are habitually defeating the purposes of the law, and are not making just returns. Let us assume in addition to that, if you please, that the officers of the Government at the other end of the Avenue are not doing their duty, and are not compelling these institutions to pay what is justly due to the Government. You say that is a violent presumption. I reply that all of the public business has to be done upon the presumption that occasionally some public officer will fail to do his duty by the public, and even upon the presumption that some public officer may become a member of a conspiracy having the purpose of defrauding the Government. It has occurred in the past, and it has reached into very high places once or twice in the past. It is a matter, I grant you, of rare occurrence; nevertheless, the occurrences do come. I think I may say that there was one member of a Cabinet, at least, who at one time was lashed from office by public indignation because he was alleged, at least, to be a party to a conspiracy to defraud the Government.

Therefore, a situation may arise where the Congress would desire to investigate the operations of the Treasury Department itself. It is conceivable that a situation might arise where even the Secretary of the Treasury—almost unthinkable and certainly unspeakable as it is—might be a party to a conspiracy to loot the Government; and yet we propose to say that the Congress can not send its proper request for these records and have the records brought before a committee of Congress to be treated as the Congress may deem proper.

Of course, there are a lot of people—and some of them occasionally get into executive departments—who think that Congress would not know how to handle information of this kind and to do so with a due regard for the rights of the citizen; but I do not entertain that view regarding Congress. I think it is quite as trustworthy and quite as discreet and quite as safe a body as any of the officials who may be connected with the executive departments; and I say that with all respect for the officials of the executive departments.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. This provision is practically existing law, is it not?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; word for word.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Even if it is, it does not detract at all from the point the Senator is making; but, in view of the statement he has just made, I will ask him whether he would be satisfied with the provision if it were amended so as to provide that these records should be confidential except in the instances cited in the provision and unless their production was required by Congress?

Mr. REED. I was about to suggest an amendment, to insert, after the word "only," in line 5, the words "at the request of a committee of Congress or," so that the language would read:

That returns upon which the tax has been determined by the commissioner shall constitute public records; but they shall be open to inspection only at the request of a committee of Congress or upon order of the President.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, should it be "at the request of a committee of Congress," or "at the request of Congress"?

Mr. REED. I think it should be "at the request of a committee of Congress," because if you said "at the request of Congress," you would have to have a bill passed.

Mr. SMOOT. It could be an order of the House or an order of the Senate.

Mr. REED. That would not be the request of Congress.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator think that any committee of the House or any committee of the Senate ought to have the right to request it?

Mr. REED. Unquestionably, I think so. I say to the Senator that I think the Finance Committee of the Senate—and I do not speak of it because I happen to be a member—the Judiciary Committee of the Senate, or any of the other committees, can be trusted quite as well as the clerks employed in the office of the Secretary of the Treasury; and I do not in any way reflect upon them by that statement.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. To add to the force of what is being said by the Senator from Missouri, I will tell the Senate that I know of my own personal knowledge that ex-Senators are here at work in the departments trying to aid corporations in escaping their income taxes, and necessarily those attorneys must have some access to those returns, and those returns, of course, must be the first source of information. If lawyers—ex-Senators and ex-Representatives—can have access to those records, we Senators ought to have access to them.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator think any attorney can go to the department and see the return of any corporation?

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I do think so.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the Senator is mistaken.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I do not see how they obtain them, then.

Mr. SMOOT. Attorneys have a perfect right to go to the department and discuss the question as to how the tax was imposed and the disputed items, and they do that. They have a right to construe the law in their own way and present their construction to the department, but I doubt whether an attorney ever saw the sworn statement of a corporation filed in the department.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, it resolves itself to this: How can an attorney present his case without knowing the facts?

Mr. SMOOT. He has to answer the complaint made by the Internal Revenue Bureau, which claims that his client deducted so and so, and that under the law it was not deductible. The only questions they bring to his attention are the ones in dispute, but not the whole return. I know that I would not be permitted to see one.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. No; you are not an ex-Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think the Senator from Georgia would be allowed to see one.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I am sure I would not.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not believe an attorney was ever allowed to see a completed return of any corporation in the United States.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I do not question for a moment the sincerity of the Senator from Utah, but I know that ex-Senators are making a good living by doing that very thing.

Mr. SMOOT. I know they are here in the National Capital and I know they are giving special attention to such cases as those referred to by the Senator, and I think they are getting all the information they can from any source, but I think if an official or employee of the Government should show an attorney a sworn return of any corporation or any individual he would be violating the law, and he ought to be dismissed at once.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, we know that many returns have been made, and the Government has charged upon some of them undue taxes; that is to say, it has misconceived the law, and has imposed taxes in excess of what the person ought to pay. I can not believe there is any wrong, if the Senator from Georgia believes that he has been unduly taxed, in employing a person to go to the department with him, with a view to having the account rectified and justice done. I can not see any injustice in the department permitting the Senator from Georgia, if he is the complainant, to examine his own sworn return, with a view to securing justice, and I can see no injustice or wrong in the Senator from Georgia being permitted to have an attorney with him, and that attorney examining the return, because the Government is there called upon to pass upon the question in a judicial way, and obviously the matter can not be presented to the Government unless the Senator from Georgia and his attorney have a full knowledge of the return which has been made.

But may I say to my friend from Georgia that in a number of cases which I have heard about, the individuals or corporations kept copies of their returns; they were familiar with the returns and their attorneys were familiar with the returns, because of the copies which they retained. I have no doubt that every man of any means retains a copy of the return which he makes, so that his attorney may get full information from the return which he has filed. If a man has lost his return, I see no impropriety in his demanding the right to see his own sworn return, where he is a litigant contesting the claim of the Government, and I see no reason why the Government may not permit his attorney also to examine the return.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, it will occur to every lawyer here that the case has been surrendered. If anyone can see his return, everybody can see it, and exactly what the senior Senator from Utah said could not happen is constantly happening, according to his colleague.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment, which I think may meet the approval of the committee. I will offer it now. I move to insert after the word "President," in line 7, the following proviso:

Provided, That said returns shall be open to inspection by any committee of Congress, but shall be retained in confidence unless the Senate or House of Representatives shall otherwise by resolution direct.

Mr. PENROSE. Will the Senator from Missouri yield to me for a moment?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. PENROSE. Does the Senator from Missouri contemplate getting the name of the taxpayer, or only the facts as to a certain return?

Mr. REED. I contemplate getting full information, to be treated in confidence, unless the Senate or the House shall by resolution remove the confidence.

Mr. PENROSE. For instance, my information and experience are that all this data can be obtained at any time by a committee of Congress, or perhaps by an individual Senator or Representative, in confidence, but without conveying the name of the taxpayer.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. This applies only to corporations, I understand.

Mr. PENROSE. I call a corporation a taxpayer.

Mr. REED. The Senator is correct. We have been able to get a statement made to us that there are certain returns by corporation 1, corporation 2, corporation 3, or corporation 4 or individual 5, 6, or 7, without having the names furnished. It deprives us in some instances of the very thing we want. It leaves us in the dark. I insist that a committee of Congress ought to have the right to get this information, to treat it in confidence, unless, the matter being laid before either body, a resolution is passed to remove the confidence. I do not think there ought to be serious objection to that.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator really believe that if a committee of Congress should ask for the information and it was sent to that committee it would be kept secret overnight? The Senator knows the executive sessions we hold are supposed to be secret, but before morning what takes place is known to all the world, even more in detail than the proceedings of the open sessions. I really think that if we want to make the returns public we ought to make them public, out and out, to everybody, rather than have the information given to a committee having no jurisdiction over the subject matter whatever, simply asking for this information for purposes not disclosed.

Mr. PENROSE. I had the idea that the Senator from Missouri yielded to me to make an inquiry.

Mr. REED. I did.

Mr. SMOOT. I beg the Senator's pardon; I thought he was through.

Mr. PENROSE. I had not gotten through. This matter was thoroughly discussed on the floor of the Senate when the present law was under consideration, and I was one of those who expressed entire willingness to have all tax returns published, and I do not know but that I am still willing. I think the former Senator from Georgia, Hoke Smith, and others were among those who opposed such publicity, in the interest of the small storekeeper and merchant. I do not know but that the great concerns can stand the publicity fully as well as the little concerns, or better, if there is any question of anyone having anything to stand. I have no authority to accept the amendment, but personally I am pretty nearly willing to accept any publicity amendment. However, I have no authority to do it and will not do it.

Mr. REED. If that is the feeling of the Senator, and I think he is right that these companies ought to make full returns, and individuals ought to, as a matter of dealing with the public, and if that is the feeling on the other side of the Chamber, I will withdraw the present amendment and propose——

Mr. PENROSE. Before the Senator goes on, I want to say that all the great corporations of the country, of the octopus type, which the Senator from Missouri delights in dilating upon, are fully exposed, I suppose, in Moody's Manual, and in other manuals, and nearly all of them have been investigated, and many indicted. Whether any further publicity could be obtained I am not altogether sure. If it can be, let us have it.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, in view of that statement, in order to test the sentiment of the Senate——

Mr. PENROSE. I have no authority to speak for the committee.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I trust that the Senator from Pennsylvania will not make the statement on the part of the committee that he favors universal publicity.

Mr. PENROSE. I expressly disavowed that; but the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD will show the statement I made on the floor of the Senate in a brief colloquy with Senator Smith of Georgia when the present law was under discussion.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I know that the Senator has far greater authority to represent the committee in this matter or any matter than I have, and——

Mr. PENROSE. I have no authority to represent the committee in this matter.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I am opposed to this proposition for reasons which are as obvious as they are numerous. I need not state them; they are reasons with which we are all familiar. As far as I as a member of the committee am concerned, I am opposed to the amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. As a member of the committee, I certainly would not accept the amendment. I think nothing but harm could come from it. I do not see one particle of good that could come from it, but I can see harm untold. I do not think the Senator from Missouri wants to do a thing like that.

Mr. REED. I hope I do not want to do any great harm, Mr. President.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from Missouri remembers that three years ago Congress asked for such information as we have been discussing, and there was a report sent to us by Mr. McAdoo, the then Secretary of the Treasury, giving information, but he did not give the names of the corporations; he gave symbols. I tried to get the same information last year. The Senate passed a joint resolution which I introduced, and the Ways and Means Committee recommended it, but the House failed to pass on it. I was anxious for the information, we need it here in discussing the tariff and revenue legislation, and I was anxious for the country to know the profiteers.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I can tell a very good reason for this. We have been having hearings before the Finance Committee on a tariff bill. We have had a large number of gentlemen before us who complained to us that their business would be ruined unless certain taxes were levied for their protection. We have asked some of the advocates of those high tariffs, who declared that their businesses would be ruined unless a heavier tax were laid, what their profits were last year, and we have been told by those gentlemen that they do not propose to tell us. We asked them other questions, what salaries they were paying, and such questions as that, and they have declined to tell us.

It would be exceedingly illuminating, when a gentleman appears before that committee and asks that a tax be imposed in order that his business would not be destroyed, if we had before us a balance sheet showing just how that business had prospered, and therefore could determine from the facts whether or not the statement that an additional tax is necessary is a correct statement.

Now, Mr. President, that is one use that certainly Senators can not say is an improper use of the information. We likewise, in sitting down as a Committee on Finance, seeking to determine what taxes are necessary to protect American industries, would find it not only useful but absolutely vital to have before us the facts with reference to the condition of that business, how much money it had made. We might find with that information before us that some of the taxes are too high, we might find that some of the taxes are too low. I am referring now to taxes upon imports. Again, we might find that this information would be useful to us for the purpose of determining how much domestic tax or income or corporation tax could be justly laid upon a particular line of business.

What is the objection on the other hand? Boiled down, it is that if corporation A makes a return showing that it is either losing money or making money, that fact may be of use to competitor B; but that argument applies to every return that is made to a local tax gatherer, and it applies to the reports that all these individuals and corporations of any magnitude make to Dun and Bradstreet and similar institutions, because they are all subscribers, and being subscribers they can obtain information with reference to other subscribers. Why this refusal to allow the inspection of a record of a public fact, of a public act?

But, Mr. President, I am anxious to speed the bill along and, therefore, instead of proposing the broader question, I have proposed the amendment, and I ask the Secretary if he will kindly report it. I think there is a change I wish to make in it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will report the amendment as requested.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 125, line 7, after the word "President" it is proposed to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That said returns shall be open to inspection by any committee of Congress——

Mr. REED. Insert the word "proper" before the word "committee."

Mr. PENROSE. May I inquire what would be an improper committee of Congress?

Mr. REED. I mean a committee having jurisdiction of the subject matter that made it competent to investigate the question. That is my idea. In other words, I would not think the Committee on the Library had any business investigating this question.

Mr. PENROSE. Had not the Senator better say "any committee of Congress having jurisdiction of the questions concerned," or language to that effect?

Mr. REED. "Any properly authorized committee of Congress."

Mr. PENROSE. Of course, they are all properly authorized.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Missouri pardon me?

Mr. REED. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. Would this meet the Senator's wishes? I do not desire at all to intrude upon a field which he is occupying so splendidly, but may I be permitted to suggest this language:

Provided, That any committee authorized by either House of Congress shall have the right to inspect said returns, and the Secretary of the Treasury shall afford full opportunity for such inspection.

Mr. REED. The Senator had better add to that language "and said returns shall be held in confidence, unless otherwise ordered by the Senate or House of Representatives."

Mr. KING. I have no objection, but I supposed the other provisions of the statute relative to secrecy would cover the inspection or the use by the committee of such records.

Mr. REED. Will the Secretary state the amendment as now presented?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The modified amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 125, after the word "President," insert:

Provided, That any committee authorized by either House of Congress shall have the right to inspect said returns, but said returns shall be retained in confidence, unless the Senate or House of Representatives shall otherwise by resolution direct.

Mr, REED. "But such information shall be retained in confidence, unless the Senate or House of Representatives shall by resolution otherwise direct." That would be the better language. I am sorry to present an amendment in this form, but I did not know the matter was coming up this morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the amendment as now modified.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

Provided, That any committee authorized by either House of Congress shall have the right to inspect said returns and the Secretary of the Treasury shall afford full opportunity for such inspection, but such information shall be retained in confidence, unless the Senate or House of Representatives shall otherwise by resolution direct.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I do not think the amendment ought to prevail. The provision that information when so furnished to an entire committee shall be kept in confidence, when it is furnished in connection with a matter of great importance to the country, will be nugatory. As the Senator from Utah has said, the proceedings of the executive sessions of the Senate are generally known to the public the next morning, although the rule of the Senate puts Senators upon their honor to regard them as confidential.

It is well known that we can not have a committee of 16 Senators who are taking different views of a question which they are investigating and then get information before that committee of the entertaining character that this information always is to outsiders and third parties and have it considered confidential. It does get out. No one can then do anything about it or punish anybody or find out who it was that has given it out. No Senator would take it upon himself to go around to the other 15 members of the committee and denounce them as having violated a confidence which had been placed in them by law. The result is that there is no confidence in such a communication.

These records and returns either ought to be private or they ought to be public. The policy adopted by the Congress under existing law, as it is repeated in the pending bill, is that the returns shall be confidential and not subject to inspection except by order of the President and under rules and regulations prescribed by the Treasury Department. I think that is ample provision for every public purpose for publicity or for the information of Congress. If the Finance Committee, which would be more interested, perhaps, in view of its jurisdiction in the returns made under this provision that we are discussing, felt that they needed to inspect the returns of a company or corporation, I can not conceive that the President of the United States would not immediately issue an order to the Secretary of the Treasury upon the request of the committee to furnish those returns to the committee for inspection. I can not conceive that the President would deny such an application. But to say that any committee of Congress might request them, whether the returns related to any matter within the jurisdiction of any committee of either House of Congress, would be to destroy all confidence pertaining to the returns.

Inasmuch as the provision of the bill as it now stands states how the returns may be inspected, I would suggest that the same uniform language be preserved. I think instead of the amendment as proposed by the Senator from Missouri, if we should insert after the word "President," in line 7, page 125, the words "or at the request of either House of Congress," every legitimate purpose of Congress for investigation and legislation would be accomplished. Then the provision would read as follows:

That returns upon which the tax has been determined by the commissioner shall constitute public records; but they shall be open to inspection only upon the order of the President and under rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary and approved by the President, or at the request of either House of Congress.

Any committee of Congress then which has a subject matter before it upon which one of these returns is relevant may come here upon the floor through its chairman and introduce a Senate resolution, or if it is in the House a House resolution, requesting that the returns be placed before the committee for inspection, and, of course, the Senate or the House would pass the resolution. I think that would accomplish every object the Senator has in view. At any rate, I think it is better and wiser and safer to try that first. Then if there is any trouble about it we can always amend and throw it open to wider inspection and more publicity.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think that is what the last amendment offered does and nothing more, as I understand it.

Mr. REED. Which amendment?

Mr. SIMMONS. The one offered by the Senator from Utah and accepted by the Senator from Missouri with certain modifications.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. If it does, I think what I have suggested does it in fewer words and in more uniformity with the existing draft of the bill.

Mr. REED. If the Senator will pardon me, there is this distinction between the two. In case the amendment which I have proposed is accepted, then the Finance Committee, for instance, could pass a resolution asking for the information. It would receive it and would be compelled to treat it as confidential unless released by resolution of the Senate, but the committee would have the information. Under the proposition offered by the Senator from Connecticut it would be necessary first to come to Congress and procure a resolution from the Senate or House of Representatives requesting the information.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. But let me put it straight to the Senator. If it were limited to the Committee on Finance, I would not have a word to say; there is no question about their jurisdiction attaching to this line of subjects; but if any committee of Congress could make such a request, upon the mere vote of the committee, the Committee on Patents, the Committee on Agriculture, the Committee on Indian Affairs, or any other committee could ask for all these tax returns. They ought not to be given that broad power in advance. If the Senate wishes to confer it upon them in a particular state of facts, it can always be done by a Senate resolution.

Mr. REED. The Senator from Connecticut is so near the point at which I am driving that I am willing to accept his suggestion as my amendment or let him offer it himself as an amendment, whichever he may prefer.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It is immaterial to me.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment as modified will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 125, line 7, after the word "President," it is proposed to insert the words "or at the request of either House of Congress."

Mr. REED. I withdraw the amendment heretofore offered and substitute the amendment suggested by the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. PENROSE. I have no objection—and I think I am authorized to speak for the committee—to the acceptance of the amendment, Mr. President.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah suggests that there ought to be added to the amendment the words "but each House shall regard the same as confidential."

Mr. REED. We must leave that to the judgment of the respective Houses.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not myself think there would result any breach of confidence, but I do not object to the proposed modification of the amendment.

Mr. REED. I think that the respective Houses should determine that matter, and I should not be willing to accept that modification of the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, last evening I gave notice that I would move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment offered by the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] was agreed to. I am not sure that his amendment as originally presented would put a tax on medicines that have vinous liquors in their composition. I do not think the Senator intended to tax medicines. In order that there may be no doubt about it I move to reconsider the vote by which that amendment was agreed to, and if that motion prevails I shall move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment to his amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Alabama, that the vote by which the so-called Wadsworth amendment was adopted be reconsidered.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I know that the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] has a substitute amendment to offer for the amendment referred to by the Senator from Alabama, and I have sent word for him to come to the Chamber, he being temporarily called away for a little while. I do not believe the action suggested by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] should be taken in his absence.

Mr. HEFLIN. I saw the Senator from South Dakota in the Chamber just before I made the motion, and so I thought he was still in the Chamber.

Mr. SMOOT. I have sent for the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. HEFLIN. Then, Mr. President, I will withdraw the motion until the Senator from South Dakota returns.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I will take advantage of the opportunity to offer an amendment to the pending bill, which I ask to have lie on the table, to be taken up later.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New Jersey will lie on the table and be printed. The next amendment passed over will be stated.

The next amendment passed over was, on page 126, after line 11, to insert:

PUBLICATION OF STATISTICS.

SEC. 258. That the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, shall prepare and publish annually statistics reasonably available with respect to the operation of the income, war-profits, and excess-profits tax laws, including classifications of taxpayers, and of income, the amounts allowed as deductions, exemptions, and credits, and any other facts deemed pertinent and valuable.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STERLING entered the Chamber.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I see the Senator from South Dakota has returned to the Chamber. I desire to say that I understand he has an amendment which will cure the defect in the amendment which was adopted by the Senate last night. I therefore renew my motion to reconsider the vote by which the so-called Wadsworth amendment as amended was agreed to.

I understand that the Senator from South Dakota has written an amendment which makes it clear that medicines are not to be taxed by this provision.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WILLIS in the chair). The question is on the motion of the Senator from Alabama to reconsider the vote whereby the so-called Wadsworth amendment as amended was adopted. Is there objection to such reconsideration? The Chair hears none. Is there objection to the reconsideration of the vote whereby the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] to the amendment of the Senator from New York was adopted? The Chair hears none. The question now is on the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota to the amendment of the Senator from New York.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, as stated last evening when this matter was before the Senate, it was not the intention to put any tax upon medicinal preparations, but the language of the amendment I offered to the amendment submitted by the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] was at least ambiguous in that regard, and perhaps would have imposed a tax upon such preparations. That is not the intention. I now offer a substitute amendment for section 601.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. After the numerals "601" it is proposed to strike out all of the section and insert the following:

That upon all vinous liquors, including such vinous liquors as are used in those medicinal preparations which are authorized to be manufactured under the regulations of the Treasury Department pursuant to the national prohibition act, and which liquors are hereafter produced in or are imported into the United States, there shall be levied, collected, and paid when sold or removed for consumption a tax of $1.20 per wine gallon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I wish the Senator from South Dakota would state to the Senate, so that the record will be clear upon this point, that the medicines which are made out of vinous liquors will not be taxed.

Mr. STERLING. Certainly. That is the intention of the amendment. It is designed to clear up all doubt on that point which existed under an amendment previously offered; to show there is no doubt that medicinal preparations themselves are not to be taxed, and to show further that there is to be but the one tax upon vinous liquor.

Mr. HEFLIN. Which is a flat tax.

Mr. STERLING. Yes; a flat tax of $1.20 per wine gallon.

Mr. HEFLIN. And medicines which are composed in part of such vinous liquors are not in any way to be taxed?

Mr. STERLING. That is correct.

Mr. HEFLIN. Some Senators from the reading of the proposed amendment fear that it still contains provisions that will tax medicines of that character.

Mr. STERLING. It can not tax medicinal preparations by its very terms. It is confined to vinous liquors, and is couched in such phraseology that there can be no mistake about it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from South Dakota to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, just one moment. Several Senators desire to examine the amendment. Personally, I think if there is anything in the world that ought to be tax free it is medicine of all kinds. I am opposed to taxing anything that goes into medicine because the price of medicine is increased to the unfortunate person who may be sick.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, did I understand the Senator to ask whether there was any tax upon vinous liquors that go into medicinal preparations?

Mr. HEFLIN. I did not ask that question. I said I am opposed to taxing anything that goes into the preparation of medicine, because when you tax medicine you increase its price to the sick and afflicted people of the country. I will ask the Senator, however, what is the tax now on vinous liquor that goes into medicinal preparations?

Mr. SMOOT. If this amendment shall be adopted, the tax will be $1.20 per wine gallon on the amount of the vinous liquors that are contained in the preparation. Of course, the tax will not be levied on the whole of the preparation itself, but merely upon the vinous liquors that are contained in the preparation.

Mr. HEFLIN. And after that tax is paid once on the vinous liquor the man who buys that medicine is not taxed upon the medicine which he buys?

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, no; the tax on medicines of all kinds is stricken from the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from South Dakota to the amendment of the Senator from New York.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, there is one correction I should like to have made in the amendment. As it reads it would permit the use of such vinous liquors as are produced hereafter. As is well known, there are wines now in this country, and there can be no reason why such wines should not be permitted to be used for medicinal purposes according to the regulations and the statutes. I desire to correct the amendment by striking out the word "hereafter," so that it will read "which liquors are or have been produced," and so forth.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota accept the modification?

Mr. STERLING. I think I have no objection to that suggestion, Mr. President. In framing the amendment which I offer now as a substitute for the amendment presented last evening, I followed the language in other respects of the amendment of the Senator from New York, and hence the use of the word "hereafter," but I can see the point of the criticism of the Senator from New York and consent to the modification which he now suggests.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Let the Secretary state the amendment as it has been perfected.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. After "Section 601" it is proposed to strike out the remainder of the section and to insert:

That upon all vinous liquors, including such vinous liquors as are used in those medicinal preparations which are authorized to be manufactured under the regulations of the Treasury Department pursuant to the national prohibition act, and which liquors are or have been produced in or imported into the United States, there shall be levied, collected, and paid, when sold or removed for consumption, a tax of $1.20 per wine gallon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment as it has been stated by the Secretary.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, what objection would the Senator have to making that read "upon the quantity of alcoholic liquors or vinous liquors used therein"?

Mr. STERLING. I think there is no necessity for that amendment. The amendment itself taxes nothing but the vinous liquor; that is all. It taxes the vinous liquor so much per gallon, and it has no reference to the alcoholic content going into the vinous liquor or that which goes into the medicinal preparation. It taxes the vinous liquor as such.

Mr. HEFLIN. There is no doubt but that the amendment agreed to last night would have taxed these medicines, and I am glad to see the matter made clear and such medicines removed from the tax provision of section 601 of the tax bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I offer an amendment and ask that it be printed and lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be so ordered in the absence of objection. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the amendments passed over.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 128, beginning with line 16, the committee proposes to insert the heading:

Retroactive exemption of income from sources within the possessions of the United States.

Continuing the reading:

(3) If, in the case of such citizen, 50 per cent or more of his gross income (computed without the benefit of this section) for such period or such part thereof was derived from the active conduct of a trade or business within a possession of the United States either on his own account or as an employee or agent of another.

(b) In case an amount of tax has been paid under the revenue act of 1918, as in force prior to the passage of this act, in excess of a tax determined with the benefit of this section, the amount of such excess shall be credited or refunded in accordance with section 252 of this act.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I desire to offer a number of amendments to this section, the purpose of which will be to have the section apply to China—not to all of the other countries of the world, but simply to China—on account of the peculiar conditions existing in that country at the present time.

On page 128, line 16, I move to strike out "retroactive exemption of"; and, in line 17, at the beginning of the line, insert "China or."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. In the subheading, strike out the words "retroactive exemption of," and after the word "within," at the end of the line, insert "China or," so that the subhead will read:

Income from sources within China or the possessions of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I shall not interpose any objection at this time to the adoption of that amendment. I want an opportunity to study it somewhat in connection with the provisions on page 128 and page 129 with regard to the Philippines; and, if I desire to offer any modification to it, I can do it when the bill reaches the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. On page 128, line 20, after the word "under," I move to insert "this act and under."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. On page 129, line 3, after the word "within," I move to insert "China or."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I inquire of my colleague—I think I have in mind the point sought to be reached by this amendment—what really is the purpose of the amendment?

Mr. SMOOT. The purpose is to allow American citizens or American corporations doing business in Porto Rico, the Philippine Islands, and China to deduct the taxes that they pay upon the business done in those countries, providing 80 per cent or more of the gross income of such corporation or citizen is derived from business done in those countries.

Mr. KING. Why select China?

Mr. SMOOT. Because of the peculiar conditions existing there. I will say to the Senator that the United States of late has been trying very hard to increase our trade with China. Conditions in China are such that an English citizen or corporation can do business in China and be exempt from the corporation tax imposed by England on the business that is done in China. They have one country's tax to pay, but an American citizen doing business alongside of the English citizen or corporation would be compelled to pay the same taxes as the English citizen or corporation to China, but in addition all taxes imposed by the United States.

Mr. KING. If my colleague will pardon me, I do not understand that these concerns are exempt in the broad sense that that term would imply. Upon the contrary, I understand that they have to pay the tax imposed by the law of Great Britain as residents of Great Britain upon the business which they do in China.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That is absolutely true, as I understand, Mr. President.

Mr. SMOOT. An English firm can organize in China and do business as an English firm and escape all English taxes.

Mr. KING. Let me inquire of my colleague whether they pay any tax at all to China. Do they not pay a tax to the Hongkong government, or to some English dominion or territory, which belongs to China in one sense, and yet over which Great Britain has sovereignty for the purpose of taxation? They do not pay a penny of tax to the Chinese Government, but they may pay to some local government which is an adjunct of the British Government; but they likewise pay a tax to the British Government.

Mr. SMOOT. There are three ways in which a foreign corporation can do business in China and simply pay one tax and that tax to China. One way is that just announced by my colleague. The other way, as I understand, is that they can do business both in England and in China, and the amount of tax that is paid in China is allowed as a deduction from the taxation in England.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I think the senior Senator from Utah is mistaken about that. My understanding is that upon every dollar of business done by any corporation, whether it be organized under the ordinances of the Hongkong colonial government or otherwise, if the net profits of the business are received either by an individual stockholder in the corporation or by the corporation in England it pays its full tax in England, with no deduction made for any tax paid under the organization made in conformity with the ordinances of the Hongkong colonial government.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course this provision does not exempt the taxpayer from taxes.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Or the corporation—I am quite confident about that.

Mr. SMOOT. Where there is a corporation whose headquarters is in England, and it does business in China as well as in England, the amount of money that is sent from China into England is taxed.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. That is so; but if, we will say, the headquarters of the concern is in China it is not taxed. With us it does not make any difference whether the headquarters are in America or China, the American pays a double tax and the Englishman does not. If an American citizen is doing business there, he pays double taxes. He pays not only the tax here, but he pays the tax abroad.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, why does the Senator select China above any other country?

Mr. SMOOT. On account of the peculiar conditions affecting taxes imposed by different countries.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. What corporations is this provision intended to relieve from taxes?

Mr. SMOOT. If a corporation is organized in the United States and 80 per cent or more of its gross income is derived from business in China, then that class of business will be exempt from the corporation tax imposed by the United States.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I understand. What are the companies which come within this category?

Mr. SMOOT. I can not name them, but there are many of them.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Of course, this must be intended, judging from the careful description, to apply to certain corporations; and I am curious to know what they are.

Mr. SMOOT. I think it would apply to nearly every corporation that sells goods to China in the quantity named in the amendment.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Did the committee have evidence on this subject?

Mr. SMOOT. I do not remember any evidence being given as to just what companies it affected.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I think that is a very serious matter. Repeated efforts are made to give exemption to corporations from taxation, and in this case where an exemption is attempted we do not know what the facts are, at least we are not told, we are not told what the amount involved is, and I think it is a dangerous and a bad way to legislate. There may be a reason for exempting from tax American companies doing business in our insular possessions and taxed there, but it seems to me that when it comes to specifying companies in China, we ought to be told frankly what the companies are.

Mr. SMOOT. It is every company. England allows any company to incorporate at Hongkong or Shanghai, and it is exempted from taxation by the home Government. A citizen of the United States, even though he incorporates at Hongkong or Shanghai, if he still retains his citizenship, would have to pay double taxation, not only the tax in China but the tax in the United States. American companies can not compete under such conditions, and I do think we can go this far toward relieving them as to China.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. How can the Senator know that when he is not able to name the companies?

Mr. SMOOT. I have not asked the names of the companies, but it applies to every American company doing business in China whose income exceeds 80 per cent from the business done in China.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Can the Senator name some of them?

Mr. SMOOT. I suppose there may be cotton manufacturers, or a few manufacturers of dyestuff specialties; or the manufacturers of some particular style of goods that are used only in China; there may be grain companies, and dealers in foodstuffs.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Suppose we stop right there. Is it not a fact that there has been an enormous expansion in our exports of dyestuffs, and that the record shows that the dyestuffs industry is enormously profitable?

Mr. SMOOT. It was profitable during the war, Mr. President, but to-day it is not profitable.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. There was a prospectus issued for the year 1920 which showed that it was enormously profitable, and profitable in part on account of its great exports to Asiatic countries.

Mr. SMOOT. I mentioned the exportation of dye specialties, but little business in that line is done in China to-day. Japan is not buying a dollar's worth of synthetic indigo from us to-day. The exportations of synthetic indigo to China last month were not a quarter of what they were in the corresponding month two years ago. I only mention the classes of goods exported because they come to my mind when the Senator asks me to name some of the companies. I might say it relates to every American company doing business in China whose income is derived to the extent of 80 per cent from business done in China.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator has named companies which are notorious for being highly profitable and which have a growing business. It seems to me that unless it can be shown that our business is in a serious condition by reason of the competition he speaks of, they should not be considered. These are paragraphs relating altogether to our insular possessions, and why there should be an exception made of any country I am unable to say, unless there is a tremendous evil, and the fact that the Senator is not able to mention any companies or any testimony before the committee——

Mr. SMOOT. I did not say there was not any testimony before the committee that there was an evil. The testimony before the committee showed that it was absolutely impossible for certain American companies to compete with British companies doing a like business under the conditions existing in China.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Who gave that testimony?

Mr. SMOOT. The experts of the Treasury Department gave it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If the Senator will permit me, there was just that naked statement made, without any facts to support it. Of course, as the bill was reported it provided for exempting American corporations transacting business in foreign countries from taxation when a certain percentage of the income was derived from the foreign business, and that opened up an immense exemption of capital from taxation in this country. The Standard Oil Co., the Tobacco Trust, the packers' organization, the Harvester Trust, under the provisions of the bill as reported, would have escaped taxation on billions of invested capital, I think it is no exaggeration to say.

I am not contending for anything which will place at a disadvantage the capital of this country when it comes in competition, for example, with British capital in conducting a foreign business, and I asked the members of the committee who supported the provision as reported to cite any British statute which would sustain the provisions of the bill as reported, and up to the present hour no provision of English law has been cited which exempts the capital of British corporations in conformity with the provisions as reported in this bill relating to the capital of domestic American corporations.

It is true that there is provision in the ordinances of the colonial establishment at Hongkong under which corporations there evade or escape taxation upon the incomes derived from their business, but I undertake to say that they are in no sense British corporations as our own corporations are recognized as American corporations under our law. They make no report to any stockholder of England or residing outside of the Hongkong colony of income derived from that business. If they do, then they are obliged to pay the income tax of Great Britain on that reported income. If the corporation is a British corporation transacting business in China, or if it be located in Hongkong and organized under the ordinances of the colonial establishment in Hongkong, and reports any of its earnings to stockholders or to a parent organization established in England, it must pay the full income tax upon every dollar of its profits so reported.

That is not the provision which is before the Senate now, and it is not the provision which was presented when this bill was reported from the committee, and there were written into the bill, as reported, provisions that opened wide the door for the escape of vast amounts of income derived from domestic corporations in this country transacting business in foreign countries.

Mr. President, I wish to have an opportunity to examine with some care, as we can not do just at this time, the suggested amendments. If they are to be voted upon at this time I do not care to stand in the way of the Senate acting upon them, but I want to reserve the right to further consideration of them when the bill reaches the Senate, if they are adopted in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Nebraska asked if there had been any information given to Congress in this matter. There is a bill now before the Judiciary Committee relating to corporations engaged in China trade——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Allow me to correct the Senator; it has been reported and is now on the calendar.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Wisconsin corrects me, and says that not only was it referred to the Committee on the Judiciary but it has been acted on favorably by that committee and is on the Senate calendar.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It is a bill simply to provide for the Federal incorporation of organizations to transact business in China under a Federal charter, and that bill as it passed the House of Representatives contained provisions exempting the capital so invested from taxation under our general statutes, but those provisions were stricken out of the bill as reported from the Committee on the Judiciary to the Senate, and there remains nothing in the bill except the provisions providing for incorporation.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, the provisions relating to taxation as it passed the House were stricken out of the bill in the Senate committee at the special request of the Finance Committee of the Senate, conveyed through me as chairman of the committee, to the effect that they could be better dealt with by the Finance Committee and that that committee would take charge of the matter. Hence at the request of Secretary Hoover and Secretary Hughes and chambers of commerce all over the country this provision has been inserted in the revenue bill.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, permit me just to make this correction of the statement made by the chairman of the Finance Committee. The Finance Committee did not take the action he states. I have attended every session of the Finance Committee since this tax bill has been pending before that committee, and the Finance Committee did not act upon those matters at all. The chairman may have suggested that the matter would be taken care of when the tax bill was taken up; and I have some reason to believe that the Judiciary Committee, in reporting that bill, had some understanding with somebody that the exemption of taxation which had been provided in the House bill could be taken care of with less chance of its being defeated if it were incorporated in the general revenue bill than if it were reported in that special bill.

Indeed, there is a possibility that the Senate will not look favorably upon the incorporation of a company under special Federal charter to prosecute trade in China. That all remains to be thrashed out when we come to the consideration of that bill.

This whole subject comes up now for determination as it would have come before the Senate had the bill been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary containing those provisions as passed in the House, and the Senate is confronted with the problem of whether we are to exempt large blocks of capital which are withdrawn from business in this country and invested in foreign countries, where the profits are very large.

I put into the RECORD when this matter was first under discussion a statement from a Chinese publicist showing that the profits made by those companies in China ranged from a hundred per cent to a thousand per cent.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, the report of the Senate Judiciary Committee indicates that the companies affected are some 300 comparatively small concerns engaged in that trade.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That is true, Mr. President; and while the tax provisions were dropped out of that bill, they appeared in this bill so broadened that they can take care of the exemptions from taxation of the Standard Oil Co., the Beef Trust, the United States Steel Corporation, and every other big business organization conducting a large business in foreign countries. In other words, the provision presented to Congress in the bill as introduced in the House to take care of a particular situation in China appears in this Senate tax bill as opening wide the door to a still further exemption of taxes upon immense investments in corporations that are conducting business abroad.

To put it a little differently, we have established the system in this country of protecting by a protective tariff capital that is invested in domestic concerns and domestic business in this country against foreign competition, and now, after those industries have built up to the point where they are able to carry into foreign countries, against the competition of foreign countries with all that that signifies, a prosecution of the mastery of the foreign markets, they are not satisfied to make the profits that they can make and pay their taxes upon those profits in this country under the general provisions of the tax law imposing taxes upon net income and upon profits made by corporations, but after having the benefit of a protective tariff to give them the exclusive markets of this country, with all the profits that they are able to exact from the business of this country, they desire to take the profits they have made in this country, prosecute their trade in foreign countries, and escape taxation upon their investments in that business in foreign countries.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I was going to refer to the House bill, that bill having been passed; I will do so, but briefly at this time. Mr. DYER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, of the House of Representatives, submitted the report, and among other things we find in that report a statement by Mr. Arnold, now and for many years our commercial attaché in China. In his testimony before the Judiciary Committee of the House he made the following statement:

> The 8,000 Americans in China are stanch, loyal American citizens and in no sense wish to evade any responsibilities or duties as American citizens. They do not ask that they be exempt from the payment of their personal income taxes, as our Britishers do who derive their incomes from China sources, but in order that they may continue their business enterprise in China, in order that they may add to American trade and development enterprise in the market of the world's greatest potentialities, and in order that they may advance American prestige throughout the Orient, they ask that they be given equality of consideration with their British competitors in China.

I am not going to read any further along that line. I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the importance of the American trade in China. In 1904 the amount of trade with China was 56,360,000 taels. In 1909 it increased to 65,054,000 taels. In 1914 it increased to 80,643,000 taels. In 1919 it increased to 211,000,000 taels. In other words, that means that the trade between the United States and China has nearly quadrupled in 15 years. On the other hand our trade from China—that is, that we take from China—amounts to $194,906,000, Japan has a trade of $156,832,000, Great Britain has a trade with China of $129,147,000, and France a trade of $45,670,000. So the United States to-day holds the command as the seller of goods to China, but we can not pay double taxation and hold that trade.

Perhaps it will be said that beginning in 1919 we did very well in holding our trade and increasing it, as the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] suggests. Of course we did, because during the war and following the war the other countries were in no condition to supply that trade. But Senators will find in the year 1921 that Germany's trade with China will be not equal to ours nor quite equal to the trade she had before the war, but very nearly so.

The Senator from Nebraska, I think, asked for what reason this amendment was offered. In the report to which I have referred I find examples given as reasons for such legislation, such as the following:

> The difficulties of these American firms now engaged in the China trade may be summarized as follows: China is an extraterritorial country, which means that all foreign merchants doing business in China must, by treaty, do so under their own laws and regulations.
> For example: Americans must do business under American laws; British under British laws; French under French laws; Japanese under Japanese laws; and so on. This is due to the fact that the young Republic of China has not yet codified her laws and modernized her courts to the extent that foreigners may become subject to them. Practically every country interested in the China trade, and this applies especially to our strong competitors, has adapted special laws for the control and promotion of its business in China. America has never done this, and as a result American companies doing business in China are subject to the conflicting corporate regulations of the various 48 States and our Territories. This factor handicaps us specifically as follows:

Then it goes on and gives the handicaps. I shall not take the time to read it, but I ask that it may be inserted in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

> First, there is no uniformity, none of the State laws being adapted to foreign trade purposes, and several of the State incorporation laws being lax, permits the promotion of a great deal of undesirable business, such as fly-by-night promotions that are very damaging to our prestige with the Chinese business men.
> Second, our chief competitors in China are the British, Japanese, and French, the French competition not being so serious. The British, Japanese, and French have enacted special regulations governing their companies in China, exempting them from the operation of home income and excess-profits taxation. This places the American firm at a distinct disadvantage, since it can not build up the necessary reserve to carry over the years of depression and uncertainty. In prosperous years the American firm can meet the competition, but in slack times such as the present the American firms are going bankrupt, while our competitors are going along and getting the business.
> Third, the operations of the home income and excess-profits taxation under the various State regulations upon our companies in China prevents the Chinese business men from forming joint enterprises with American business men. The Chinese are now striving to develop their country industrially and are anxious to cooperate with American merchants who are experienced in the management of industries on a modern basis. Since this Chinese capital coming into an American company is taxed the same as the American capital, the Chinese are thus prevented from cooperating with us and are forced to invest in British and Japanese companies, thus throwing the resulting purchases of equipment and other business to those countries instead of the United States. The British have taken advantage of this desire of Chinese business men for western experience and management and have built up much of their great business in China in this way; that is, by attracting Chinese capital. The lack of a uniform high standard American corporation law governing our business in China debars us from these partnerships with the Chinese, and this cooperation is the outstanding element in the new development of China.
> Hundreds of Chinese young men who have been educated in our colleges and universities and engineering schools are anxious to cooperate with Americans in the development of China, using American materials, but they are debarred by our failure to enact legislation providing the machinery for cooperation. In short, we have educated these young men in our ways of doing business, but when it comes to actually doing the business we shortsightedly permit them to go to the British and Japanese.
> Since China is the only country where we operate to any great extent under extraterritorial treaties, a general law will not and can not solve the problem of American business development in China. Furthermore the present period of depression combined with famine conditions in China will not permit delay if we are to hold our position and take advantage of Chinese friendship for Americans and American institutions. If we can not obtain the assistance, our trade is certain to recede to the unimportant position it occupied before the war.
> The recent revival of American trade with China may mislead some to think commercial relations with that country are of short standing. Such a supposition is not borne out by history. One hundred and thirty-six years ago an American ship visited Canton, China, with such good results that a regular trade followed. American clipper ships were an important factor in the commerce of China from the visit of that first vessel in 1778 to 1860, when our commerce was driven from the seas by the development of the British merchant marine. During the height of the period, along about 1825, American shipping and trade led in the Far East. This serves to show that Chinese-American relations are not of recent origin, but have existed on a friendly basis, to the mutual advantage of the two peoples, during practically the entire national life of the United States. With legislation that will remove our technical handicaps, most Americans familiar with present developments in the Orient believe that we may in a comparatively few years regain our old position in this trade occupied before the Civil War.
> China occupies a stretch of territory one-sixth larger than continental United States. Her population is four times as large as our population and her climatic conditions and natural resources are quite similar to ours. For years through the work of our missionaries and educators and the operation of our "open-door" policy we have been building up a great asset of good will toward America on the part of the Chinese people. They know that America has no designs on their territory and that the close commercial relations of the two Republics will do much to strengthen China and enable her to more successfully cope with aggressors who do have designs on her territory.

The China trade act has the full support of our American officials who have worked so long and faithfully to cement the relations of the two countries. Dr. Reinsch, for six years our minister to Peking, has supported this legislation constantly in dispatches to the State Department, and quite recently appeared before the Treasury Department and gave testimony in its support.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I know there is not a Senator who wants to do one thing that would in any way, shape, or form interfere with the trade of the United States with China. That is one of our great fields for exportation and for business. I say now that where the American corporation doing business in China is compelled to pay a double tax as against the Britisher who does not, or as against the national of any other country that does not do so, the American corporation can not compete successfully when conditions are normal.

For the next few years trade in all the countries will be sought for and fought for, and necessarily so. One of the reasons why we have so many unemployed to-day in our own country is because of the fact that foreign countries can not purchase our goods. There are two reasons for that, I will say to the Senate. One reason, and the chief reason perhaps, is because of their cheap money. Germany can not, with the mark at less than 1 cent, purchase from us the absolute necessities they require and that we are so well able to furnish. That is one of the great reasons. The other reason I have in mind is that every country now wants to give employment to every man and woman and child in the country, and they undertake to furnish as far as possible the goods and commodities required by their people by the labor of their own people.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to cite an instance showing the extent to which the currency has depreciated in some of the foreign countries. The senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE], who has been to Russia recently, yesterday was exhibiting in the cloakroom a Russian note for 10,000 rubles. Before the Russian revolution the ruble was worth somewhere between 40 and 50 cents. Now this 10,000 ruble note is the price of a loaf of bread in Russia.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes. In all countries, I think with the exception of Japan, their currency is at a discount, in Germany and the Balkan States and Poland particularly. The Austrian money is almost worthless. I think the Polish money is the least valuable of any outside of the Russian money.

As we look toward the future and consider where our foreign trade is to be, we invariably look to China. We must remember that we must have exportations in order to provide labor for the American workingman, and I at times wonder how long it is going to be before the world will be financially sound, so as to enable them to purchase our overproduction. Therefore, the only interest I have in this is that I desire to put the American business man, who is fighting for the China trade—and that trade is an immense one with that great mass of Chinese people who import so much of life's necessities—in a position to get his share of that trade. We can not do it if we hamper him by double taxation, as is now the case.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for just a moment?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The Senator has said in substance that he desires to put American business on an equal footing with our competitors for that trade, and yet it is proposed here that we shall exempt from taxation the income derived by domestic corporations from foreign business. The Senator can not show a parallel statute as any part of the British law. Every dollar of income derived from foreign business returned to a stockholder in a British corporation or returned to the corporation itself as profits is taxed in Great Britain, and taxed to the full measure and in equal amount with income derived from business conducted by domestic corporations wholly within the Kingdom.

That is not the proposition here. If Senators understand that, they will understand there is a proposition here which is very different from that which the British statute presents.

The only advantage that has been established here in the course of the discussion is that in China, in Hongkong, under ordinances adopted by the colonial establishment there, a corporation incorporated there and doing its business there, and not a British corporation in any sense, but a domestic corporation—domestic, I mean, to the Hongkong colonial establishment—reporting none of its profits to any corporation in Great Britain, is taxed under the Hongkong provision regarding those domestic corporations.

But that is not the case presented here at all. It is proposed here that corporations organized in this country, transacting a certain amount of business abroad, shall escape paying any income tax upon the profits derived from that foreign business. Senators can not find, I undertake to say, any parallel for that sort of legislation in the British statutes.

Mr. SMOOT. With reference to the distribution of the dividends of such corporations the Senator inquired whether if dividends are distributed by a Hongkong British corporation they would be taxed in England in the hands of a citizen residing there. They would be taxed, and so would the dividends be taxed in the hands of an American citizen who is receiving income from a company organized under the amendment which has just been offered by me. However, it is a company we are now speaking of; it is the corporation tax we are speaking of, and not the income tax at all. There is no question, however, as I think the Senator from Wisconsin will admit, that to-day under existing law there is a double tax imposed.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Let me ask the Senator from Utah a question there. A company doing business in China as a company doing business in Canada or anywhere else and making its tax return to the Government of the United States can get credit for the taxes it pays abroad.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Certainly.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Is not that true?

Mr. SMOOT. That is true under existing law.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I stated that a corporation of the United State doing business in Canada or in China can deduct from its tax return to the Government of the United States the amount of tax that it pays in Canada or in China.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That is true.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It can not be claimed that there is any double taxation under those circumstances.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, would not there be double taxation if we should tax a corporation doing business in China, and then should also tax the dividends received by Americans from that corporation under the income tax?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Certainly not.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Why not?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The corporation pays only the tax upon its profits, and if a part of its business is abroad and it is taxed there, such tax is deducted from the American tax when it makes its statement.

Mr. SMOOT. Let us see how far that reaches, and let us also see what the Chinese law is and ascertain if the American business man receives any advantage. This applies to income and profits taxes and only to those taxes. China has no income or profit tax, and business done there is transacted under the Chinese law, and the only exemption which is given under the provision to an American company doing business in a foreign country is on account of the income tax and the profits tax. That is another reason why this should apply to China. China has no income tax; she has no profits tax; and, therefore, American business can not get any credit for such taxes.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Then, there is no double taxation.

Mr. SMOOT. There is a double taxation by reason of all the other taxes that are imposed in China, which are imposed in sufficient amounts to take care of all the obligations of China. The American business man has to pay those taxes, and he can not get any exemption for them.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Has the Senator a report from any American corporation in China showing just what taxes they have to pay the Government there? I should like to have the Senator produce such a report, if he has one.

Mr. SMOOT. An American corporation in China pays exactly the same Chinese taxes as does a British corporation, whatever those taxes are or in whatever form they may be imposed; but the British concern organized in Hongkong and doing business in the same territory as an American corporation does not pay any taxes to the home Government, while the American business man does.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield the floor.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I was not on the floor when the debate arose in connection with this particular subject or when the Senator from Utah offered the amendment to which he has referred, and I do not know what his amendment is; but I wish to say that, in my opinion, the determination of the question of whether or not an American corporation organized to do business in China should be exempted from taxation to any extent depends upon the extent, if any, to which British capital or the capital of other competing nations is exempt under their law.

Allusion has been made to the Hongkong ordinances; but it is simply a question of fact, to my mind, whether British capital invested in corporations which secure their franchises under Hongkong ordinances is exempt to any extent. If it is exempt, it is manifest that other companies engaged as competitors in that same trade are not upon an equality as competitors unless they are granted a similar exemption. I understand that the claim made by various chambers of commerce and those in America who want to put their money into companies to do business in China, the future of which, as the Senator from Utah has said, presents such an inviting and gigantic opportunity, is this:

At present there is a great deal of capital in China itself; there are many very rich Chinese. At present if the British corporation is to any extent exempt—and when I say "British corporation" I mean a company which has British capital in it and is organized and exists under and by virtue of the Hongkong ordinances, which to all intents and purposes are British acts of incorporation to control British subjects in China—if the British or the Hongkong corporation is exempt in any way it has so much more net profits to distribute in the shape of dividends; and the rich Chinaman will put his money into a corporation which will show the greatest amount of dividends.

If it is a Hongkong incorporated company, he will put it there. Many of them would rather put their money into an American corporation, for reasons which are satisfactory to themselves. The theory of these American capitalists is that if they supply 51 per cent of the capital for one of these corporations they can get 49 per cent from the Chinese, thus retaining the management and control of the corporation under American law and under the American flag, and assuring that its affairs will be administered and its litigation will be decided in the American courts in China, and that in the eyes of the Chinese the whole concern will have, to a certain extent, the protection which an American corporation existing under an act of Congress and protected by the American flag and supervised by the American Department of Commerce would have. They think it would be the most attractive and most stable and most potential form of corporate organization for conducting great international business affairs. If they are right about that, then if the British or the Hongkong organized corporations are given any advantage there is where the Chinese capital will go. These men claim——

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to interrupt him for a question?

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I yield first to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. McCORMICK. If American capital were invested in a Philippine corporation, would not that be analogous to the investment of British capital in a Hongkong corporation?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It would, I should think, if the Philippine law gave exemption to the same extent as that given by the Hongkong ordinance.

Mr. McCORMICK. Ought we not to know from the committee whether American capital may not be exempted in the same degree under such circumstances?

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, that information has been given to the Senate and placed in the RECORD. A case was put into the RECORD showing the disadvantages under which Americans doing business in the Philippine Islands labor as compared with a French corporation carrying on the same kind of business.

However, what I rose to say to the Senator was that there is another important element in connection with the question the Senator is now discussing. If a British corporation is exempt from everything but the Chinese taxes and if it is exempt from the home taxes, it can take the extra amount of earnings derived from the corporation's activities and use it to expand its business; it can use it for advertising, and in a thousand other different ways in obtaining advantages the American corporation can not secure because it has got to take that money and send it back home to pay taxes.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I thank the Senator. What I wanted to say in addition was this: In the case of an American concern with 51 per cent American capital and 49 per cent Chinese capital, if the corporation itself is exempt it will attract Chinese capital. We can not tax the Chinese investors' dividends; but as to the American capital being exempted from taxation, it will not be exempted, as it seems to me, for when the corporation pays dividends to its American stockholders they will be taxed in America, so that there will be no escape from taxation. The only point is that if the Hongkong or British ordinances provide that the Chinese investor shall not be taxed on his holdings in a British corporation organized under such ordinances, we must make similar provision or else American corporations will not be able to compete.

What the conditions are in regard to exemption in China by British or Hongkong authorities I do not know, but the Senator from North Dakota seems to think the Committee on Finance have investigated that question. All I say, however, is that before we act upon any proposition to exempt from taxation China trading corporations at least we ought to know the facts, for if I understand correctly this amendment to this bill, unless some different provision is made in the China trading corporation bill when that comes up, will control the whole matter, including China trading corporations.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator this provision is to take the place of that very measure, because it has been asked that the matter be provided for in this form and in this bill instead of in the shape of special legislation.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I think I understand the Senator. In other words, this is a general provision which defines what a foreign trading corporation shall be and will include China trading corporations.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. No.

Mr. KING. It is limited to China.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. We defeated the foreign trading corporation provision.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Very well; I withdraw what I said in that regard. I am not familiar with the proposed amendment and must hear it read before I can discuss it intelligently.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an inquiry?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I yield the floor.

Mr. KING. Before the Senator resumes his seat I should like to ask him a question.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Very well; I will endeavor to answer the Senator.

Mr. KING. Assume that this amendment shall be adopted, under the terms of which a corporation, the stockholders of which are largely American, are engaged in foreign business in China, derive certain advantages in the shape of deductions or exemptions, will it not be a precedent which all other Americans engaged in foreign trade in other countries will demand like exemptions? In other words, is it not an entering wedge for the exemption of all American capital engaged in foreign trade from contributing to the Federal Treasury for the maintenance of the Government?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not know whether other American foreign-trade corporations would try to make it a precedent or claim it was a precedent or seek to obtain for themselves the same privilege or exemption. If any such effort should be made, a sufficient answer to me would be that it was not an analogous case, that the parallel did not exist, because China is a special and peculiar country in this respect.

Mr. SMOOT. It is an extraterritorial country.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It is an extraterritorial country, and, as I have said, if other nations give a preference to their corporations trading in that country and we do the same, I do not consider that that is any precedent for giving a similar privilege to another corporation doing business in another country where conditions are entirely different. That, of course, I realize is only general language and may not be specific enough to meet the Senator's question; but that is the view I take of it.

Mr. KING. The Senator knows that France and Holland and Great Britain, particularly those three countries—and when Germany is revived, Germany will come within the list that I have in my mind—are doing a great deal of foreign trade, the first three nations in their colonies, or in nations where there is more or less of extraterritoriality, but not as broad as it is in China. I have no doubt that certain privileges may be granted to Holland corporations in various territories and colonies with which Holland is more or less connected; and the Senator can see that if we begin making exemptions in behalf of those American corporations that are engaged in foreign trade in China it will be only a short time before pretexts will be urged for an exemption in behalf of all American corporations that are engaged in foreign trade. It seems to me it is a precedent that will come home to vex us, and it will result in the transfer of a large quantity of American capital abroad which ought to be employed here.

Let me say, by way of parenthesis, that I have no objection to foreign investments. I think we must make foreign investments to a greater or less degree; but it will be an encouragement to transfer unduly American capital into foreign trade and commerce, because of the exemptions which it will obtain.

It seems to me that the precedent which we will establish if we permit Chinese corporations to be exempt from taxation is one that will be dangerous, and in the end will compel further concessions, until all trade and commerce foreign in character will claim like exemption.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, of course they may claim it. I have no doubt that anybody who thinks he can save a dollar or avoid paying a tax will make the claim; but in my opinion, inasmuch as it is not a proper precedent and it is not an analogous case, the safety of the country would lie in Congress having brains enough and backbone enough to decline to grant the exemption to the other companies who could not bring themselves within the same conditions.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I think we ought to get clearly in our minds the distinction between a British corporation doing business, we will say, in Hongkong or in the Philippines, and an American corporation doing business in either of those countries.

A British corporation desires to do business in China. It organizes a subsidiary corporation in China. Every dollar that is made by that subsidiary corporation in China, so long as the profits are kept in China, in the business, escapes British taxation entirely. If the corporation sends its money back to the home corporation, of course it will pay the British tax; but no corporation is going to send its money back to the home country and incur a tax of 50 to 60 per cent whereas if it kept the money in the foreign country and in business there, expanding its business, it would be free from taxation.

That is the British corporation. Now, take an American corporation. It organizes in the United States. It creates a subsidiary corporation in Hongkong or in China. Not a single dollar of the earnings in China comes back to the United States. It must still pay, on the entire profits, a tax under the American laws which may be all the way from 20 to 40 or 50 per cent. The British corporation, therefore, would have that great advantage in expanding its business, in selling at a less profit if necessary, and in many ways of outdistancing the American corporation. It is true, as I have stated, that if the money should go to Great Britain it would suffer perhaps even worse than the American corporation, because the taxes there are probably even higher than the taxes here on the American corporation.

Now, I want to take the case which I put into the RECORD a short time ago, of an American and a French company dealing in the Philippine Islands; and I am informed that the figures are taken, so far as the American company is concerned, from an exact case.

Here is an American company handling automobiles in the Philippine Islands. It earns $600,000. It pays a tax of about $75,000 to the Philippine government upon that earning. It pays a tax to the United States of $275,000, making $350,000 to be deducted from its $600,000, leaving a net profit of $250,000. Here is a French or a British corporation doing business in the same way; and I am supposing in both instances that the money is left in the Philippine Islands for the Philippine trade. The French corporation pays $75,000 upon an equal profit. The British corporation would pay $75,000, which would be the tax; and the difference would be that the American corporation would pay $350,000 as against $75,000 paid by the British or French corporation, provided the money was all left in the place of business. That is what the American corporation has to contend against.

As suggested by the Senator from Wisconsin, it is true, and we look at it from this standpoint, that the bill as it now reads would exempt the tax, even though it comes back into the United States, and in that respect it differs from the British tax, because the British do levy a tax upon that sum provided it comes into the home country; but I think during these times of high taxation that does not become an important matter, because the British will keep the money where it will earn the most and will have the least tax to pay.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes.

Mr. KING. Assume a case of this character, so that I may clearly get the views of the Senator: A corporation is organized under the laws of the State of California for the purpose of engaging in oriental trade and commerce. It exports to China during the next year $5,000,000 worth of products and imports into the United States in exchange $4,000,000 worth of products, or receives money in part payment for the exports, so that at the end of the year an examination of its transactions reveals that it has made a profit of $500,000.

It has employed—to use the language of the Senator, and yet I do not know what he meant by that—a subsidiary organization in China to facilitate the distribution of its products.

Mr. McCUMBER. Now, the Senator is stating a little different aspect of the case than that with which he starts out. I understand now from the Senator that this American corporation has a subsidiary corporation in the Philippine Islands.

Mr. KING. I will eliminate that. I employed those words because the Senator did, but I will eliminate that.

Mr. McCUMBER. It makes all the difference in the world whether that is in or out.

Mr. KING. Let us take the first case, then.

Mr. McCUMBER. All right.

Mr. KING. At the end of the year it is revealed that it has made $500,000 of profits which are ready for distribution to its stockholders. The Senator certainly does not contend that those profits, either corporate profits or profits distributed as dividends, should be exempt from the taxation provided by our statutes.

Mr. McCUMBER. They are not exempt, and they are not exempt under this provision, because it is an American corporation doing business wholly in the United States, even though it may be an exporting and an importing concern. Its business is American business, conducted in the United States.

Mr. KING. Suppose that its operations consist merely in imports from China. At the end of the year it has made a profit of $200,000. Does the Senator think, under those circumstances, that the corporation and its stockholders should be exempt from taxation?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly not, and it is not. It is still an American corporation, and its earnings, though it imports from China, are really here in the United States. Its imports are sold in the United States. Its profits are obtained in the United States.

Mr. KING. Let me give a third illustration. Take the same corporation, but in order to facilitate its trade and its activities in the Orient it organizes a subsidiary corporation in China. The Senator used the words "subsidiary corporation," and I do not know what he meant. I assume that he meant a subsidiary corporation under some colonial law.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; under the foreign law, of course.

Mr. KING. Under what law would our American corporation organize a subsidiary corporation in China? It could not be under a British statute in Hongkong. It could not be under a Japanese ordinance. Would it be under an American statute?

Mr. McCUMBER. There is no general law for the organization of corporations in China, as I understand. If it is in Hongkong, of course it would be under the ordinances of Hongkong; but there is no general Chinese statute.

Mr. KING. I am trying to get what the Senator meant by a subsidiary corporation. It is clear that this American corporation could not organize what the Senator denominates a subsidiary corporation unless it was either under the law of the State under which it was organized or, if we have extraterritoriality in China, under the fiction of our authority in China, and it would be an American corporation subsidiary to the parent corporation organized under the laws of the State of California. Assuming that there is such a subsidiary corporation organized extraterritorially under an assumed jurisdiction of the United States to permit corporations of that character to be organized in China, and its profits are $500,000, does the Senator think that the stockholders, or the corporation, or both, should be exempt from taxation in the United States?

Mr. McCUMBER. To answer that clearly and from my standpoint, here is a corporation organized in the United States. It desires to do business in a foreign country. It desires to do business in the Philippine Islands. Under the Philippine law it can organize a subsidiary corporation, because there is a law for corporate organization in the Philippine Islands. It probably can do that in the Province of Hongkong. I am not so certain about the other sections of China, but probably in no other portion of China is there any general law for organization. In that instance, where it had no authority, it would have to organize a subsidiary American corporation or a branch corporation, but it would still be an American corporation in the other country; and if it was doing business under this law, the business which was wholly business in that country would be exempt from American taxation just the same as the Philippine business would be.

The only difference is that in the one instance it had to employ a wholly American corporation to do its business there, and in the other case it would take advantage of the foreign corporation laws. As I said, under the proposed amendment it would be exactly the same. As was suggested, I think, by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], of course an American corporation can deduct in the Philippine Islands what it paid in taxes on its Philippine business, but out of that $275,000 the competitor would still have $125,000 advantage in doing business in the Philippine Islands over the American corporation.

Mr. SMOOT. The only taxes they could deduct are the income tax and the profits tax, and in China they have no income tax and no profits tax.

Mr. McCUMBER. In China there would be nothing to deduct.

Mr. SMOOT. There would be nothing to deduct.

Mr. McCUMBER. But in the Philippine Islands there would be a tax which could be deducted, but it would be very small compared with the American tax.

Mr. SIMMONS. I would like to ask the Senator from North Dakota a question. Does the Senator contend that Great Britain allows a deduction upon incomes of domestic corporations which are derived from business in China that are taxed other than through income and excess-profits taxes?

Mr. McCUMBER. No; I am not contending that. I do not know that she allows any deductions. She levies no tax upon the business of a foreign corporation unless the earnings or profits come back in some form to Great Britain, and if they do then she levies the entire tax against that portion which comes back to Great Britain.

Mr. SIMMONS. I understand the purpose of the Senator from Utah in offering this is to put the trade of American corporations in China upon a parity with the trade of those corporations in one of our possessions.

Mr. SMOOT. To put them upon exactly the same footing.

Mr. SIMMONS. Exactly the same, to make the tax no more and no less.

Mr. SMOOT. No more and no less.

Mr. SIMMONS. And upon the same conditions under which the American trader would be entitled to an exemption trading in our possessions. The provision in this bill is that they are to be exempted if 80 per cent of their income is derived from foreign sources, and that ruling would apply to an American corporation?

Mr. SMOOT. That is correct.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I think it is material at this point, if the Senator will allow me, to insert in the RECORD the provision of the bill as it passed the House contained in the so-called China corporation act as to the exemption from taxation, which the Senate committee did not include in the Senate bill. The House bill to which I refer is on the calendar as order No. 262, House bill 4810.

On page 18 of that bill, at line 12, commences the provision by which certain exemptions from taxation would be granted to these corporations, and I ask that that may be inserted in the RECORD at this point, commencing with line 12, on page 18, the rest of page 18, the whole of page 19, and page 20 down to and including line 19. That shows what the House and the House Ways and Means Committee would like to have done for these China trade corporations.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SEC. 24 (a). That section 231 of the revenue act of 1918 is amended by striking out the period at the end thereof, inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon, and adding a new subdivision to read as follows:

"(15) A corporation organized under the China trade act, 1921, but only if and with respect to any taxable year for which (a) it files a return at the time and place provided in section 241, made in the manner provided in section 239, and containing such information as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may by regulation prescribe; (b) it declares dividends during the taxable year in an amount equal to one-third of its net income the payment of which not later than 60 days after the close of such taxable year is assured in such manner as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may require; (c) it derives less than 5 per cent of its gross income from sources within the United States; and (d) the Secretary of Commerce certifies to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue that during the taxable year the corporation in all respects has complied with the provisions of the China trade act, 1921, and regulations made thereunder. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury shall make all regulations necessary for the determination of such exemption, and of the liability of shareholders or members to taxation in respect to dividends paid by such corporation, but all dividends paid by such corporation to shareholders or members who are citizens of the United States shall be subject to all taxes that are assessable against dividends of similar corporations deriving their total incomes from business transacted wholly within the United States."

(b) Section 1 of the revenue act of 1918 is amended by adding at the end thereof a new paragraph to read as follows:

"A corporation organized under the China trade act, 1921, shall for the purposes of this act be considered a domestic corporation."

(c) Sections 232, 233, and 234 of the revenue act of 1918 are amended by inserting in each of such sections after the words "corporation subject to the tax imposed by section 230," the words "or organized under the China trade act, 1921."

(d) Section 240 of the revenue act of 1918 is amended by adding at the end thereof a new subdivision to read as follows:

"(d) A corporation organized under the China trade act, 1921, shall not be deemed to be affiliated with any other corporation within the meaning of this section."

(e) Section 254 of the revenue act of 1918 is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 254. That every corporation subject to the tax imposed by this title, every personal service corporation, and every corporation organized under the China trade act, 1921, shall, when required by the commissioner, render a correct return duly verified under oath, of its payments of dividends, stating the name and address of each stockholder, the number of shares owned by him, and the amount of dividends paid to him."

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Borah	Harrison	Moses	Stanfield
Brandegee	Heflin	Myers	Stanley
Broussard	Hitchcock	Nelson	Sterling
Capper	Jones, N. Mex.	New	Sutherland
Caraway	Kellogg	Newberry	Swanson

Hale	McKinley	Simmons
Harreld	McLean	Smoot
Harris	McNary	Spencer

Mr. HARRIS. I wish to state that my colleague [Mr. WATSON of Georgia] is absent on account of illness.

Mr. GERRY. I desire to announce that the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] is absent on account of illness.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Sixty-nine Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, this is a proposition to vote a subsidy out of the Treasury of the United States to American corporations doing business in China and making profits there. The Senate heretofore has defeated the efforts to exempt from taxation in the United States foreign trading corporations whose profits come from foreign countries. That was defeated. This is an attempt to exempt from taxation in the United States American companies 80 per cent of whose profits come from China and 50 per cent of whose business is done in China. No pretense is made that China levies a heavy tax on those corporations; no figures are given to show that it does so.

But, Mr. President, this proposition is even worse than that. The amendment offered by the Senator from Utah to put China on the same basis with the Philippine Islands and with Porto Rico is retroactive in its effect. It is to return in cash out of the Treasury of the United States the taxes those companies doing business in the American possessions and China have paid since 1918.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, for the information of the Senator I will simply state that as far as the Philippine Islands are concerned very little in the way of these taxes has been paid.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That is irrelevant. The Philippine provision and the Porto Rico provision are not so important. What we object to first is the Senator's amendment, which proposes to include China. This amendment, in effect, declares that American companies which have been doing a prosperous business in China since 1918, and have been paying taxes on that business in the United States, shall have a refund of that money paid since 1918. In bald English it is a proposition to take out of the Treasury of the United States a subsidy in cash, nobody knows how large, and pay it to those concerns, when it is notorious that their business has been highly profitable and their trade has greatly expanded.

Mr. President, I only need take the figures given by the Senator from Utah himself to prove that. He told us, in reading from a report, that the American trade in China during recent years has enormously expanded. He read to us figures showing that while in 1904 it was only 56,000,000 taels, it was increased in 1908 to 65,000,000 taels; in 1914 it was 80,000,000 taels; and in 1919 it was 211,000,000 taels.

He gave us the figures to show that at the present time the United States is doing a larger business in China than any other country, our business amounting to $194,000,000, while Japan's is only $156,000,000, Great Britain's only $129,000,000, and France's only $45,000,000.

That is the best evidence in the world that the American companies which have been doing business in China since the act of 1918 was passed have been doing a prosperous and a constantly expanding business, and the proposition is to return to those highly prosperous companies the money which they paid into the Treasury in 1918, 1919, 1920, and 1921. How can the Senator defend such an obvious subsidy as that to these companies?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that this does not apply to all business done in China. It applies only to any American concern 80 per cent of whose income is derived from foreign business. It does not apply to the amount of business the Senator thinks it does. There are only a few American companies there whose business nets them over 80 per cent from the business done in China, and this affects only that kind of business. We are not trying to take care of the Standard Oil Co., or the other companies referred to, because 80 per cent of their income is not derived from business done in China.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, nobody knows whom we are undertaking to take care of. The Senator declined or was unable to give me the names of the companies which fitted into this schedule of companies 80 per cent of whose profits come from business done in China, and 50 per cent of whose business is done in China. I pressed him and demanded to know what few he referred to, and he mentioned the dyestuff industry. It is notorious that the dyestuff industry has done a very highly profitable business in China. The figures have shown that during the years 1918, 1919, and 1920 the dyestuff industry made enormous profits and no doubt paid a large sum in taxes to the United States on account of its big business in China.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course I understood the Senator to ask what concerns import goods into China. I do not think there was any dye concern in the United States that received 80 per cent of its income from goods it shipped into China. Therefore, it does not apply to that class of trade. I frankly say to the Senator that I can not say what companies there are—there may be but few of them—whose income is derived to the extent of 80 per cent from trade in China.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes; and the Senator can not tell how much money this involves taking out of the Treasury of the United States. Yet we are not allowed to know what companies this subsidy is going to be paid to. We are told that it is proposed to take out of the Treasury of the United States all of the taxes that have been paid into that Treasury during the past three years on the profits which corporations have made, 80 per cent of whose profits came from Chinese business and 50 per cent of whose business is in the Chinese trade. That is all we are told. Evidently somebody knew when he said 50 per cent and 80 per cent which corporations it would apply to, but we are not permitted to know.

Mr. SMOOT. The amendment was drawn by the Treasury Department. It follows out a policy adopted by the department. The department thought that at least 50 per cent of their business and 80 per cent of their profits should be considered in this way.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Did the department tell the committee how much money would thus be taken out of the Treasury and paid over to those companies?

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think the department knows exactly.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Can the Senator tell how much it would involve? He offered the amendment himself. Can he tell us that?

Mr. SMOOT. So far as the Philippines are concerned, and I think the greatest part of it would come from the Philippine Islands or Americans doing business in the Philippine Islands, I forget just exactly what the figure is, but it was not a large amount.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am not talking about the Philippines.

Mr. SMOOT. I think most of it will come from the Philippine Islands, so I do not think there will be very much come from China.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I hope the Senator will not tell me that most of it will come from the Philippine Islands. There is small importance in the taxes to be returned to companies doing business in the Philippine Islands and Porto Rico. They are possessions of the United States and there is less objection to the refunding of that money to companies that are doing business in those countries and paying taxes there. What we object to is paying money back to concerns that are doing business in China.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, are we to understand that the amendment proposes to repay to these companies for 1918, 1919, and 1920?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It does.

Mr. BORAH. That is not a revenue proposition.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. No; it is a subsidy proposition. It is a bounty to those concerns. Here are the Senator's own figures, that the United States in one year did $194,000,000 worth of business in China. That is no trifle.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator think there is going to be an exemption on all of that business?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do not know. Nobody knows.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; the Senator does know there is not going to be.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. How much will it be? Can the Senator tell me what the proportion will be?

Mr. SMOOT. I can not state exactly the proportion, but I will say that it is a very small proportion of the business.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Can the Senator tell me how he knows it will be a small proportion?

Mr. SMOOT. I know that the Standard Oil Co. does business in China, and I know there is a great deal of foodstuffs shipped to China, and I know further that there is not 80 per cent of the gains of the Standard Oil Co. made on its business transacted in China, and therefore the bill does not apply to it at all.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I would like to suggest that it would be possible for the Standard Oil Co. to organize a special corporation for transacting business in China where 80 per cent of its income would come within the provisions of the bill.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. And the Standard Oil Co. has generally resorted to the organization of subsidiary companies in the transaction of its local business.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Let me say further that the Standard Oil Co. has a contract with the Chinese Government to develop oil in China in two Provinces larger than the State of New York, covering a period of 60 years' time. I do not know just what we may be letting this Government in for in remitting taxes to these great organizations.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I repeat that the Senate made clear here the other day its refusal to exempt from taxation the profits of concerns doing business in foreign countries, and yet here the matter crops up again for Chinese companies. What is the Chinese commerce lobby that is lobbying here? What is this lobby of Chines companies here that is working in this way in Washington? What is the force behind this demand for a return of taxes? What is the force that is able to secure from the Committee on the Judiciary a report in favor of incorporating companies to do business in China under a Federal charter, a force which is able to come in here and demand a subsidy out of the Treasury of the United States for the highly profitable business that was done, as we all know, in 1918, 1919, and 1920?

How is it possible that such a force can be considered insignificant? It is not insignificant. It must be a force which is backed by capital, it must be a force doing a large business, and I think the Senator from Utah ought to tell the Senate what the companies are and what amount of money they ask that they shall be given out of the Treasury of the United States, and not leave us in the dark on that proposition.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to say that I can not tell the Senator the companies, because the Treasury Department did not give that information to the committee. It is true, as the Senator has said, that the Senate the other day refused to agree to exempting foreign trade corporations in all parts of the world, the same as this provision would exempt American concerns in China. That is true.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator from New Mexico please wait until I get through?

But the Senator from Nebraska is mistaken when he said that there is a lobby. There is no lobby that I know of. So far as I am concerned, I have never seen a single man pleading for this nor have I received a single letter asking for it, but the Treasury Department calls attention to the fact that this is necessary in order that the American business man may be enabled to hold his own in the China trade.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico and Mr. HITCHCOCK addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield, first, to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator is presenting his argument. It does not have any weight with me. He might argue logically that it is necessary for future trade to give some consideration to these companies by way of immunity from taxation, but he can not possibly argue that it is necessary to give them a subsidy out of the past for that business. If he wants to vote them a subsidy let him bring in the measure here and vote them so many million dollars in the form of a subsidy so we will know they are getting it as a subsidy, and not ask us to vote for something when we do not know how many million dollars is involved. This does not involve their future competition. This involves their past profits.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no intention, so far as the committee is concerned, to assist any man whose profits have already been made. That can be cured very quickly by an amendment, which I am perfectly willing to accept, and I know the committee would be willing to accept it, by inserting on page 129, in line 20, a proviso that "this subdivision shall not apply to the case of any taxpayer who is entitled to the benefits of this section by reason of business done in China." I will say to the Senator that so far as the Philippine Islands are concerned, there will be scarcely any rebate to the American business man there because of the very fact that nearly every case is unsettled and is now in the Treasury Department for that purpose.

Mr. McCUMBER and Mr. LA FOLLETTE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If the Senator will permit me, it was stated very clearly before the Committee on Finance with regard to the Philippines that some of the corporations there had paid their taxes.

Mr. SMOOT. A few.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. And that others had not, and nobody, not even the tax experts from the Treasury Department, was prepared to inform the committee how much of a tax it would be upon the revenues of the Government to remit as to those who had paid, to repay them the amount they had paid, or how much would be lost if those who still owe for their taxes were released from payment. We had no definite information upon the subject at all, as the hearings will clearly show.

Mr. SMOOT. But the hearings will disclose the fact that Dr. Adams said it would be a very small amount.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That is not my recollection.

Mr. SMOOT. It is my recollection.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. My recollection is that Dr. Adams was rather opposed to the provision that proposed to restore to those who had paid their taxes that which they had paid into the Treasury, but if the others were to be let off that seemed to be an equitable thing to do. As a majority of the committee were in favor of dealing very generously with these corporations, they provided not only for releasing those who had not paid their taxes, but for paying back out of the Treasury to those who had paid them whatever amount they had paid in.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico and Mr. McCUMBER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield first to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. When the Treasury Department makes its recommendation for legislation of this sort it usually has some very definite information on which to base the recommendation. I presume most Senators assume that such is the case with respect to the proposed amendment, but unfortunately the information is not at hand. Inasmuch as other matters have already gone over until next Monday, does not the Senator from Utah believe that it would be wise to have this matter go over until next week, and in the meantime request the Treasury Department for specific information?

Mr. SMOOT. I do not know whether the Senator from New Mexico was in the committee when this subject was before the committee for consideration. I forget whether he was there or not.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I understood the Senator from Utah to make the statement a little while ago that the Treasury Department had made this request and undoubtedly had the information.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, no; I did not say that.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Then I misunderstood the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. I said that the experts of the Treasury Department recommending this legislation to the committee were asked how much money it would take from the Treasury of the United States by way of refund, and the answer was that they did not know. Then the question was asked whether it would amount to very much, and the answer was that it did not amount to very much.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I understood that part of the Senator's statement, but evidently the Treasury Department must have some definite information about this which the representatives of the Treasury Department did not have when before the committee. It seems to me if there is any definite information about it the Senate ought to have the benefit of it and we should have the opportunity to get that information before us.

Mr. SMOOT. I am quite sure the information we get will be just what we got before, because they said they did not know exactly what it was but that it would not amount to much.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. If that is all the information which can be had, certainly the Senate is not justified in adopting such a provision in the law.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, as a matter of fact, the question did not come before the Committee on Finance on the recommendation of the Treasury Department at all.

Mr. SMOOT. On whose recommendation did it come?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. As a matter of fact, it was brought up on a cablegram received from Gen. Wood, who had just lately landed in the Philippines and had evidently been seen by the representatives of some corporations there and been importuned to address a communication to those who were engaged in framing new legislation here to let them off from their taxes. It was upon that cablegram from Gen. Wood, which was not definite in its information at all—and it will be found in the hearings—that the committee took the action that it did. When the Treasury experts were asked for any definite information with respect to what taxes had been paid and what had not been paid by those corporations—some of those corporations, it was stated, had refused to comply with the law and others had complied with the law—the experts were not able to give the committee a single figure. Finally the committee acted upon that vague and indefinite information. That is what the record shows.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, so far as the cablegram from Gen. Wood is concerned, that was presented to the committee through the Treasury Department. The experts brought it into the committee, just as I have stated. The cablegram from Gen. Wood is only an evidence of what he thought ought to be done to place American business men in the Philippines on the same footing as business men of other countries doing business in the Philippines.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. Just a moment. All the amendment means is that an American doing business in the Philippines or in Porto Rico or in China shall not be compelled to pay two taxes, while the British merchant in Hongkong or in Shanghai doing the same business is only compelled to pay one tax.

Mr. BORAH. Does the Senator know what the British are doing in Hongkong or Shanghai?

Mr. SMOOT. I know they are doing business in Hongkong and I know how they are taxed.

Mr. BORAH. So are Americans doing business there, and they can afford to pay taxes.

Mr. NELSON. I wish to ask the Senator from Utah one or two questions. The first is, Is it within the scope and intent of the amendment to refund back taxes to these corporations?

Mr. SMOOT. If the amendment which I suggest be adopted, that is one of its objects as to Porto Rico and the Philippine Islands.

Mr. NELSON. Then, it will not only cover the taxes in the future, but taxes which have been paid since 1913?

Mr. SMOOT. No, 1918; provided that 80 per cent of their income has been derived from business transacted in those countries.

Mr. NELSON. The object of the amendment is to refund taxes paid by such corporations; that is the purpose of the amendment?

Mr. SMOOT. That is not the sole purpose of the amendment, but that is one purpose of it.

Mr. NELSON. Why would the Senator from Utah not be satisfied to cover the future instead of giving back to these corporations a rebate of taxes paid?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, that is not for the Senator from Utah to say. The Treasury Department has recommended this on the basis of a cablegram received from Gen. Wood, and the committee thought it was proper.

Mr. NELSON. Congress and the American people are superior to the Treasury Department and to Gen. Wood in this matter.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Minnesota is right about that.

Mr. NELSON. We are not obliged to lean on either of them.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Minnesota is correct in that.

Mr. NELSON. Why should corporations which go abroad and try to get rich in foreign countries come here and ask immunity from taxation. I remember years ago when we had tariff legislation under consideration, and the question of the duty on glass was pending, a man came to my committee room and begged me to advocate the imposition of high duties on glass. After talking with him a while I found that he was managing a company in Belgium. He told me how cheap labor was there and how he could make money out of the business, and he wanted to fix things up so that his business would be aided.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator mean that the man to whom he refers desired the imposition of a higher duty on glass?

Mr. NELSON. Why are the men who go to foreign countries to speculate and get rich entitled to any more consideration than are our own people who work for the salvation of our own country here at home?

Mr. SMOOT. I should think the man who was making glass in Belgium a crank if he wanted to have the duty on glass increased. I should have thought that he would have been here pleading for the free entry of glass.

Mr. NELSON. I see in the Senator's amendment there is another phrase. His amendment is not restricted to China, but there is an additional provision, which reads:

As used in this section the term "China" means China, including Manchuria, Tibet, Mongolia, and any territory leased by China to any foreign Government, and the Crown colonies of Hongkong and the Province of Macao.

In fact, the Senator has almost boxed the eastern compass in the proposed amendment. China has been spread out to cover more territory than it has had for a century.

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not know just what the proposed amendment of the Senator to the committee amendment is; but Senators, especially those upon the committee, will remember that this amendment as originally offered only covered our own possessions and did not include China. Then we were met with this fact: We will say that 95 out of 100 of those who were subject to taxation in the Philippine Islands had not paid their taxes. It was proposed to relieve them from those taxes, which of course they had never paid, but one thing certainly must follow. We either do not want to relieve them, or else we want to pay back the taxes to those who were kind enough to the Government to pay them; we ought not to penalize those who desired to pay and did pay their taxes. It is thought by the Treasury Department that they will not be able to collect the other taxes, and if there is to be any remission or forgiveness of a single one of those who have not paid, then certainly we should refund the taxes to those who have paid.

Mr. POMERENE and Mr. BROUSSARD addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. SMOOT. Just a moment. I should like to call the Senator's attention to the fact that in the House bill as it came to the Senate this provision not only applied to China but it applied to all foreign trade corporations. That is found on page 5 of the bill.

Mr. NELSON. Did it cover a refund of taxes already paid?

Mr. SMOOT. No; and neither will the amendment now proposed in the case of China.

Mr. NELSON. As it came from the House did it cover a refund of the taxes which have been paid since 1913?

Mr. SMOOT. No; and this amendment, if agreed to, will not cover the refund of any taxes in the case of corporations in China.

Mr. NELSON. Does not the Senator see a difference between the Philippine Islands and China? In the Philippine Islands the taxes paid go to the Government to support a dependency of the United States; but American business concerns in China do not to any great extent pay any taxes there; they are to a large extent immune from taxation, and now they want us to let them alone and give them back everything they have paid.

Mr. SMOOT. If this amendment is agreed to, it will not be retroactive as to China, but it will be retroactive as to the Philippines and Porto Rico.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I should like to inquire under what theory it is proposed to remit taxes? If it is merely because people who were subject to taxation under the law have not paid them, why not extend that same privilege to American citizens in the United States?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, an American citizen doing business in the Philippine Islands is compelled to pay not only the taxes imposed by the Philippine Government, but all of the taxes imposed by the Government of the United States.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Yes; and is it not a fact that a concern doing business in the United States must pay taxes to the State and to the local subdivisions of the State?

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, certainly, Mr. President; but an American business man in the Philippines is subject to all the taxes of the Philippine Islands.

Mr. BROUSSARD. And an American business man in any State in the United States is subject to all the taxation of the State.

Mr. SMOOT. American citizens pay whatever taxes are imposed.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Then what is the theory of exempting some of them from paying taxes?

Mr. SMOOT. Simply because there is involved double taxation. An Englishman can go into the Philippines and do business, and when he pays his taxes in the Philippine Islands he is not taxed at home.

Mr. BROUSSARD. The Senator from Utah is talking about an Englishman now.

Mr. SMOOT. Well, the citizens of England come in competition with Americans in the Philippine Islands.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Is it sought to relieve competition by exempting American citizens from the payment of taxes to the United States Government?

Mr. SMOOT. We are trying to put the American business man upon the same footing as the English business man; that is all.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Then, why not put all American citizens on the same footing?

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think the Senator understands the amendment, or he would not ask such a question.

Mr. BROUSSARD. No; I do not.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator would not ask that question if he did.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I will ask the Senator this question: What is the difference between a corporation doing business today in the State of Ohio, which corporation is there taxed according to the laws of that State and according to the laws of the city and county in which it may be located, and a corporation doing business in the Philippine Islands which is taxed by the Philippine government? How can a distinction be made between those two?

Mr. SMOOT. My attention was diverted for a minute and I did not catch the import of what the Senator said. I will ask him to repeat the question if he desires an answer.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I should like the Senator to explain so that I may understand, as it has been insinuated that I do not know what I am talking about, what difference there is between a concern doing business in Ohio or in any other State of the Union which is subjected to a State tax and a county tax and a city tax, and one doing business in the Philippine Islands which is subjected to the laws imposed in that jurisdiction?

Mr. SMOOT. The difference is that the man doing business in Ohio is subject to the United States tax and not to any tax imposed in the Philippine Islands.

Mr. BROUSSARD. But he is subject to State taxes.

Mr. SMOOT. The American citizen who is doing business in the Philippines is not only subject to a tax in the Philippine Islands and to every form of tax there levied but he is taxed here in the United States upon the income which he makes in the Philippine Islands.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Are not the Philippines possessions of the United States?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. But, Mr. President, the man who pays taxes in Ohio pays the same tax as that paid by his competitor, while a man who pays taxes in the Philippine Islands does not pay the same tax that his English competitor pays. That is the difference.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I understand that, and that is just what I am coming to. Is it the idea of Senators to put a certain class of American citizens on a different footing so as to enable them to compete with foreign competitors and thereby remove the equality which should exist between American concerns and citizens?

Mr. SMOOT. In the first place, there is no question of equality involved as between American citizens, and, in the next place, if a man is doing business in the Philippines and 80 per cent of his income comes from business carried on in the Philippine Islands, he is allowed an exemption of the tax which he has paid in the Philippine Islands.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Under our tariff law we have a list of articles placed on the free list. Is not the man engaged in producing one of those articles in a given line of industry within continental United States placed in competition with the foreigner? Why is not that man exempted from the payment of all income taxes because he is in competition with a British concern or a French concern?

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator knows that anything that is put upon the free list is put there because the American manufacturer can compete with the world on that particular commodity. He knows that that is the policy.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I know that that is the policy.

Mr. SMOOT. Then there is not any use in asking the question.

Mr. BROUSSARD. But there is a wide variance in the views of the two political parties in that respect. According to the views of the Republican Party, when the Democrats framed a tariff law, many of the articles which were placed on the free list should have been taxed. Under the theory of the Senator from Utah, then, should we not exempt from the payment of the income tax those engaged in the production of such articles because they compete with foreign corporations?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. As I understand the Senator, he says that this exemption should be granted to our merchants doing business in the Philippines, because the English have a like exemption. Do not the English have that identical exemption when they do business in this country, and thus have an advantage over our citizens with whom they come in competition?

Mr. SMOOT. No.

Mr. McKELLAR. Why not?

Mr. SMOOT. Because they have to pay taxes upon whatever business is done in this country; but I may not have quite understood the Senator's question.

Mr. McKELLAR. I did not think the Senator understood the question. When an Englishman does business in this country, he has the same kind of an exemption that he has when he does business in the Philippines.

Mr. SMOOT. No; when an Englishman does business in this country he pays taxes to our Government.

Mr. McKELLAR. Then why do we not in like manner require him to pay the Philippine taxes so as to make an equality?

Mr. SMOOT. We can not pass laws for England. England enforces her own laws.

Mr. McKELLAR. No; but we can pass them for the United States, if we are diligent about it.

Mr. SMOOT. The Philippines impose a tax upon English concerns, but England says that they shall have credit for the amount of tax so paid on their home taxes.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does she give them credit for that tax, but not those who do business in America?

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. No.

Mr. SMOOT. England imposes an income tax on her citizens after the profits are distributed, and so would we on our citizens doing business in China after the profits are distributed. This is a corporation tax, but if the profits of the corporation are distributed, whoever receives the dividends pays the income tax on them.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does England make a difference between her citizens doing business in the territories of the United States and her citizens doing business in the United States themselves? She must necessarily do that if the contention of the Senator is correct.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Why should we not tax a foreign corporation doing business in the Philippines the same as we tax our own corporations doing business there, instead of exempting them, as is proposed in this amendment?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Could that be done under the Philippine act?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair desires to suggest that the rules of the Senate ought to be observed and that Senators ought to address the Chair and receive the permission of the Senator who has the floor before interrupting.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in answer to the Senator, I am fearful that under the Philippine act that could not be done.

Mr. LENROOT. What is the Philippine act that prevents Congress from doing it? The Philippine act is an act of Congress.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator from Utah will pardon me, I should like to make a suggestion to him which I think will facilitate this matter and get before the Senate the real issue.

As I understand, the amendment offered by the Senator to strike out the words "retroactive exemption of," and let the title read: "Income from sources within China and the possessions of the United States," has already been agreed upon.

Mr. SMOOT. That has been agreed to.

Mr. BROUSSARD. That is the title.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is the title. I am talking about the title. I am sure that no one in the Senate when they voted for that supposed that the balance of the amendment would provide for a refund of the tax on the profits made by an American corporation in China for the last three years. The Senator recognizes that, I think. I understand that the Senator from Utah agrees that this provision ought not to apply to China.

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. SIMMONS. And it is not intended that it should apply to China. Why does not the Senator offer that amendment now? I do not suppose anybody would object to that amendment. If it is to go through, certainly we do not want this refund provision to apply to the Chinese trade. Why does not the Senator offer that now, let us agree to that, and then we can consider this whole section upon its merits?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that the only reason why I did not do that was because we have not yet agreed to put China in the preceding provision.

Mr. SIMMONS. I thought that amendment had been agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. No; just the headline, but not in the different paragraphs. I will say to the Senate, however, that as soon as the necessary amendments are made to this provision to include China in the future, I shall offer this amendment, on page 129. At the end of line 20 insert the following:

This subdivision shall not apply in the case of any taxpayer who is entitled to the benefits of this section by reason of business done in China.

I thought, however, that the other amendments ought to be acted upon first.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, before final action is taken——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Ohio in his own right.

Mr. POMERENE. I thank the Chair.

The Senator from Utah a moment ago, in discussing this question and in answer to a question put by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR], said that it applied only to domestic corporations, as I understood him. The bill speaks of citizens of the United States or domestic corporations.

Mr. President, I have not been very much enamored of this legislation which seeks to show favors to Americans who are doing business in other countries. I think it is badly conceived. The proposition here is, in part at least, to refund certain taxes or remit them. Within the last three or four days I received a numerously signed petition from corporations in my own State referring to the fact that while they had made large profits in 1920 and the year previous, during the current year their business had been in a very poor condition and they had made no profits at all; in fact, they were operating at a loss; and they wanted the privilege of setting off against the profits on which they would have to pay taxes for the years 1919 and 1920 the deficit of the current year. Of course, I should like to do anything I could to favor them. I regret that anybody does business at a loss; but if we are to do what these people want us to do, the Government will have to do this business at a loss.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SUTHERLAND in the chair). Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. POMERENE. Pardon me just a moment. If the Senator from Utah, as a member of this committee and as a Member of the Senate, is going to insist that we remit certain taxes which have been charged against Americans doing business in other countries, I do not know how I can justify myself in saying that we ought not to forgive a part of these taxes which were incurred during the years 1919 and 1920, so as to give them the privilege of setting off the losses against the gains.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President——

Mr. POMERENE. I yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. BROUSSARD. May I suggest to the Senator from Ohio that if these corporations doing business in the Philippines or in any of the possessions have been doing business at a loss there is nothing to remit and there is no tax to collect. Therefore, unless they have been making profits, if you enact this provision and if they are making profits why should they be relieved?

Mr. POMERENE. Because they are like a good many other taxpayers; they want somebody else to bear the burden. I would rather encourage people to do business in the United States than to do it elsewhere. I prefer that we furnish work for American laborers in America rather than to have American capital go to China to furnish labor for the coolies there.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I rise because some reference has been made to the action of the Committee on the Judiciary in connection with the subject of trade in China. That no misapprehension may arise on that score, I will inform the Senate as to what was done in that regard.

A bill came to the Senate from the House providing for the incorporation of companies to do business in China. That bill contemplated that national or Federal corporations should be organized under the laws of the United States, not for the purpose of transacting business between this country and China primarily but for the purpose of carrying on domestic trade within the Republic of China. That bill contained a provision exempting such corporations from the payment of the Federal income and other internal-revenue taxes, the contention being made, as it has been made in this connection, that those corporations came into competition in their business in China with corporations organized under what are known as the Hongkong ordinances, under which they are exempted from the payment of income taxes to the Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland.

A subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary, after giving the matter very careful and exhaustive consideration, reached the conclusion that there was no power in the Congress of the United States to create a corporation the chief business of which is to transact business within the Republic of China.

It was believed by the committee unanimously, I think, that the power of the Federal Government did not extend to the creation of a corporation of that character. At the same time the committee was quite unanimous in its opinion, for one reason or another, that the exemption from taxation should not be granted, or at least that that matter should be relegated to the Committee on Finance, which was dealing with the entire subject. The committee, however, did reach the conclusion, with some misgivings, that it is within the power of Congress to create a corporation not authorized to do business in China, but authorized to do business between China and the United States; and the bill was accordingly remodeled so as to provide for the incorporation of corporations the chief business of which is carrying on commerce between China and the United States.

That perhaps will entitle such corporations to do such business within the Republic of China as may be incidental to the chief business for the transaction of which it is incorporated, namely, the carrying on of commerce between the two countries. The bill as reported contains no exemption whatever of these corporations from taxation.

I call attention to the fact that the provision before us is not intended to apply, at least not intended exclusively to apply, to any corporation which might be created for the purpose of transacting business within the Republic of China. The exemption goes far beyond that. It extends to all corporations, as I understand it, because I understand the proposal is to insert the words "China or" in line 3, on page 129, so that the amendment shall read:

> If 80 per cent or more of the gross income of such citizen or domestic corporation (computed without the benefit of this section) for the three-year period immediately preceding the close of the taxable year (or for such part of such period immediately preceding the close of such taxable year as may be applicable) was derived from sources within China or a possession of the United States—

And so forth.

Mr. SMOOT. That is one of the amendments I expect to offer as soon as the one pending is disposed of. In fact, the same amendment will have to be adopted in line 8 after the word "within," and in line 13 after the word "within."

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The point I am endeavoring to call the attention of the Senate to is that this exemption is not intended to apply to those corporations which it was contemplated would be organized by this bill, and which will do business exclusively within the Republic of China—that is to say, corporations, it might be said, to be counterparts of corporations organized under the Hongkong ordinances—but it is to extend to all corporations, wherever they may be organized, and wherever may be their principal place of business, that do a business 80 per cent of which comes from China. In other words, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of California, having its principal place of business at its headquarters in the city of San Francisco, if it does a business 80 per cent of which comes from China, will be exempt from the payment of the tax under this provision of the bill.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. If I may simply add, it will be seen at once that this exemption extends to a class of corporations altogether different in every respect from corporations organized under the Hongkong ordinances.

Now I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. From the testimony before the subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee upon this China trade act, would not the Senator be of opinion, from what the witnesses said, that the corporations organized under the China trade act would derive more than 80 per cent of their income from China?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Oh, yes; it was contemplated. My recollection is that those corporations were authorized, under the bill as it passed the House, to do practically any business whatever except possibly the operation of banks and the construction of railroads. They could engage in the electric-light business, in milling business, in merchandising, in plantation work—in fact, in almost any line of business—and it was contemplated, apparently, that whatever business they did in the way of commerce between the two countries would be merely incidental to the business which they were to transact exclusively within China.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. In other words, was not the object, as stated by some of the witnesses, at least, to enlist Chinese capital with American capital, the management being American, in the development of China, in the construction of public works, and all development of that character which might involve concessions from various Provinces of the Chinese Government?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator has stated the condition accurately. The exemption of corporations organized under what are known as the Hongkong articles, or the Hongkong ordinances, it seems to me affords nothing in favor of the exemption of a corporation whose principal place of business and whose residence is, as I suggested, entirely within the United States. Any Senators who have visited the city of San Francisco will recall that there are great corporations doing business in that city which transact an enormous business with China. Practically everything they sell to the people of our country comes from China; on the other hand, practically everything they buy goes to China, and a large trade is carried on in that way. Somewhere else in this bill—I have not been able to turn to it just now—is a provision for determining whether the business is done in this country or is done in other countries, and it is provided, my recollection is, that the country within which the goods are sold is the country where it is assumed the business is done, so that one of these companies importing goods from China and selling here, and sending goods from this country and selling them there, will sell in both countries, and the business done in the United States is computed upon the amount of goods and wares they sell in this country, and the amount of business they do in China is computed upon the amount they sell there. Let us assume that a corporation is doing more business, is selling more goods, in the United States than it sells in China. It is a very simple thing for that corporation to organize a subsidiary corporation which would take care of the selling end in China, the parent corporation taking care of buying in this country, and it would thus escape taxation entirely upon that part of its business which is done by the subsidiary corporation.

You need not confine yourself to that. You may extend it indefinitely. It is suggested, for instance, that the Standard Oil Co., while it does an enormous business in the Republic of China, does such a tremendous business in this country and elsewhere that the amount of business which it does in China can not possibly amount to 80 per cent of its total business, and therefore it could get no exemption. But it will be a perfectly simple thing for the Standard Oil Co. to organize a subsidiary corporation to transact only that part of its business which is done in China, and thus it would escape taxation entirely upon that part of its business.

Indeed, many of these corporations having extensive foreign business find it desirable for just those reasons to do exactly that thing. It will be recalled that the International Harvester Co., for reasons of its own, which need not be mentioned, organized a subsidiary company which took care of all of its foreign business, and my recollection now is that the United States Steel Corporation had a similar organization.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The Steel Products Co.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. So it will be observed that under the plan proposed here a vast amount of business which ought properly to be charged against these corporations will escape the payment of any income tax at all, and it goes far beyond the case that was put to us in connection with the bill to authorize the creation of corporations which should do business exclusively, or almost exclusively, within the Republic of China.

Mr. President, another thing that I have been utterly unable to understand is why China should be singled out for peculiar favor in this particular, or why those American citizens who choose to engage in trade in China should be singled out as the special favorites of the Government of the United States. We have been endeavoring to cultivate trade with the Republics of South America. We have all been sincerely anxious to see that trade grow by leaps and bounds. Trade carried on in those countries, as everybody knows, is carried on under many obstacles and difficulties, and the embarrassments which surround the prosecution of business in those countries occur to everyone. How can it be said that a man who chooses to transact business in the Republic of China is entitled to more consideration than a man who believes that it is a good thing to transact business in the Republic of Chile, for instance? We are very desirous of promoting trade with Chile. I dare say we have reasons more powerful and persuasive for encouraging trade with Chile than for encouraging trade with China. Why should China be singled out?

Accordingly, it does not seem to me that the proposition embodied in this amendment ought to receive the indorsement of this body.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, this amendment referring to business in China is a blanket provision. The idea was to offer an inducement to our people to build up trade between our country and China, but this does not cover that. A company of Americans may go over to China, under the provisions of this bill, and carry on business there which does not tend in the remotest degree to promote commerce and trade between the United States and China. They go over there and exploit the country, and make money there, and all the benefit the Treasury of this country receives is from the fact that the stockholders of that company who do business in China made more money there than they could have made here, and in that way have enriched our people.

If this provision were limited to business, commerce, and trade carried on between our country and China, and it was to promote that business, it would be all right; but there is nothing of the kind in this amendment. American companies can go over there and do business in China that pertains wholly to local subjects, the building of railroads, the opening of coal mines, silver mines, iron mines, carrying on steel works, carrying on all sorts of local trade throughout the country, and they can make fortunes out of it without a single dollar of it inuring to the commerce and trade of the United States.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. EDGE. Would it not be true, however, that if this were an American company, and the stock were distributed or sold in America, held by Americans, and the dividends were paid on its operations in China, and returned to the stockholders living in America, they would pay income taxes on such dividends?

Mr. NELSON. Yes; but this proposes to give them immunity.

Mr. EDGE. Not at all, as I understand it.

Mr. NELSON. It proposes to give the companies immunity from company taxes.

Mr. EDGE. I would like to clear that up. My understanding of the pending amendment is that it does not cover any immunity or any exemption whatever to the stockholder who would receive a dividend through the activity of a corporation in China. In other words, certainly we would not say here that the Senate of the United States would discourage an American doing business in any part of the world, if there is an opportunity for him to do business there. As a stockholder in a corporation, when dividends are declared he receives those dividends and makes his return to the Treasury of the United States, and because of that activity in China or any other country in the world we are enriched and we collect that much more money. If that is not a correct interpretation of the amendment I should like to know it.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator from New Jersey be kind enough to tell me why a citizen of New Jersey, holding stock in a corporation which does business in New Jersey, has to pay his share of the corporate taxes as a member of that corporation, but if that citizen of New Jersey goes over to China or Manchuria or Thibet or Mongolia, or any of those countries, and gets rich, he is to have immunity and is to be better off than the man here in our own country?

Mr. EDGE. I attempted to make clear my interpretation of the amendment now under consideration. Whether the stockholder was a citizen of New Jersey or any other State in the Union, as I understand the amendment now pending, when such dividend is received he must pay to the Government his full proportion of income taxes earned through the operation of that company in any country in the world, this amendment pertaining particularly to China and the possessions of the United States.

Mr. NELSON. But why should the foreign company—the company composed of our people who go over there—be immune from corporate taxes any more than our home companies?

Mr. EDGE. To follow it up, as I understand the thought implied by the pending amendment, it would be this: Certainly we have no desire to restrict the energy or enterprise and activity of our own citizens, particularly when it does not in any way interfere with domestic development at home.

A corporation goes to China and engages in some business activity. In a country of that kind, of course, corporations from Great Britain and other countries of the world are doing the same thing. As I understand the amendment, we simply exempt the corporation as a corporation doing business in China from paying a corporation tax to this country, which same exemption is granted to a British company or companies of other countries in the world. But when dividends are paid to stockholders at home, then the Treasury of the United States is benefited in the usual way.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, does the Senator from New Jersey say that Great Britain grants the exemption that is proposed by this committee amendment?

Mr. EDGE. I so understood.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator is mistaken.

Mr. EDGE. From the explanation of the Senator from Utah I understood that they grant exemption to any corporation under British laws, so far as the activity or the expenditure of the income of the corporation is concerned over there, but when it comes to Great Britain, just as this would apply, then, of course, they pay the income tax of Great Britain.

Mr. LENROOT. But the United States corporation would not do so under this amendment. In Great Britain a corporation of Great Britain doing business in China or the Philippines must pay an income tax on every dollar that comes to Great Britain; but under this amendment the corporation of the United States will not pay a penny of tax, although every dollar comes back to the United States.

Mr. EDGE. I think the explanation of the Senator from Utah is quite different from that.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from New Jersey if that paregoric is good for China, why is it not good for every country in the world? We hear a great deal about building up our trade with the various countries of South and Central America and the other countries of the world. Why not make it a blanket provision and say that every company of the United States which engages in business in a foreign country shall have immunity from corporate taxes?

Mr. EDGE. The Senator has honored me by asking why we do not apply it universally. I will answer very frankly that I think we should apply it universally. We are at the present time considering only an amendment applicable to our possessions and China, but if I may answer the question which the Senator propounded, in these days in this country when we appreciate and recognize that we are probably producing only 30 or 40 per cent of maximum production in the country, and when we realize and recognize that possibly markets could be built up throughout the world, and when we recognize that we have lying idle at the docks a merchant marine that has cost the American taxpayers close to $4,000,000,000, I think it is a perfectly sound policy to encourage in every possible way the transaction of business with every country in the world.

I would go to a very much greater extent, so far as I am concerned, because I think the real, final dividends come back to the American people in reemployment and in more industrial activity here, which would outweigh manyfold any technical question of remitting corporate taxes to these corporations doing business in any other part of the world.

I may refer to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], whose activity in previous Congresses along that line I always admired very much even before I had the honor of becoming a Member of this body, whose name is attached to the well-known act called the Webb-Pomerene Act, which permitted business corporations of this country to combine under certain conditions in order to be able to compete with industrial business corporations and organizations of other countries of the world, with the sole thought undoubtedly that we would find that additional market for American products, recognizing that we can not be prosperous in this country unless we do have some place to dispose of 15 or 20 per cent of our products. Considering this particular amendment, I assume that those corporations and a large part of their activity is in the export of American goods to those countries, and wherever it is that character of business, it does seem to me it is along lines to which we should give every possible encouragement.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I have listened quite a while to the question of the Senator from New Jersey——

Mr. EDGE. I beg the Senator's pardon for taking so much of his time.

Mr. NELSON. That is all right; I have no fault to find.

As I said a moment ago, if this were a proposition that aimed directly to build up trade and commerce between our country and China or any other country, I could see some merit in it; but I can not for the life of me see any merit in the proposition that an American company of millionaires shall be formed in the United States and go over to China, Mongolia, Manchuria, or any other such country and exploit that country, build railroads, open mines, open factories, develop the trade and commerce of that country, without helping our commerce in the least. All the benefits shown by the statement of the Senator from New Jersey would seem to be that the stockholders of corporations operating in foreign countries would get so much larger income that they might be able to pay a little more income tax in this country. That is all his argument amounts to, and that is the only benefit we could possibly get out of corporations of this kind.

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] referred to a bill reported by the Committee on the Judiciary. In that bill we aimed to limit strictly to interstate commerce the powers of the corporations to be created for the purpose of doing business in China. When I say interstate commerce, I mean commerce between China and our country. The bill as it originally passed the House covered everything; that is, they could transact all kinds of business in China without doing any business with the United States. Through the efforts of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] and other members of the Committee on the Judiciary, including particularly the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE], the bill was modified and changed by the Judiciary Committee, and as reported was so limited that the corporation could only engage in commerce between that country and the United States.

In respect to commerce of that kind there might be some merit in giving the corporation immunity from taxation. But if Rockefeller or some other "feller" goes over to China to build railroads, open silver mines, coal mines, iron mines, build factories, and develop the country and make a lot of money, why should we make his corporation immune from this taxation?

The Senator from New Jersey spoke about another matter. He said we desire to develop our trade. If these millionaires go over to China and develop that country, with its abundance of natural resources, they may develop it to such an extent that it will have no use for any of the products of our country. If they build railroads and open coal mines and discover oil, or do any of those great things; if they build factories and mills over there and develop that country, those millionaires may soon get it in such condition that they will not want any of our products and will not need them, but will need only these American millionaires and promoters.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, is it not true that under a treaty with China, as I recall it, quite an ancient treaty, though I have not looked at it recently, American citizens forming corporations such as might be created under the bill which is proposed here, and American corporations generally in China, have what are called certain extraterritorial rights? If they are sued over there, they have to be sued in our own courts and not in the courts of China at all. We furnish the judges, we furnish our own courts, and our consular representatives attend to all questions arising in contests over contracts or damages or any litigated matter. Is it not true that we have, in a way, our own courts established over there?

Mr. NELSON. We have an extraterritorial court there.

Mr. FLETCHER. American corporations have all those rights. They do not even have to submit themselves to the jurisdiction of the foreign courts at all. They have the same rights over there that they have here, and additional rights.

Mr. NELSON. That situation arose from the fact that as to China, and I think at one time as to Turkey—I do not know that it is true of Turkey now—we held that their Governments were of such character that their courts were not fit to pass upon the rights of American citizens. Therefore we provided for extraterritorial courts which have power to pass upon the rights of American citizens and convict American citizens of crime, but they have no jurisdiction over questions arising between American citizens and the natives of those countries.

But that has nothing to do with the question here. This is simply a question of whether we shall give immunity from taxation of these exploiters who have so much money that they can not use it in this country, who want to go abroad to make further fortunes abroad. It is a question whether under all the circumstances and on all occasions we shall give them immunity from taxation, and give their corporations immunity from taxation.

The only benefit the Senator from New Jersey could ascribe to it, if I understand his remarks correctly, was that if we do give these American corporations operating in China immunity from corporate taxes their incomes would be larger and they would be able to pay a little larger income tax in this country. That is the only argument, as I understood the Senator from New Jersey, to which he could point in an economic way.

Now, one word more. It is proposed, as I understood, by the Senator from Utah to add this provision:

As used in this section, the term "China" means China, including Manchuria, Tibet, Mongolia, and any territory leased by China to any foreign Government, and the Crown colony of Hongkong and the Province of Macao.

That includes practically all the oriental country outside of the possessions of Japan and Great Britain and our own possessions in the Philippine Islands. It includes practically all the other country there. So any American company that goes over there to exploit any business in that country, without any regard to any commerce between that country and our own, goes over there simply to make money because the natural resources are there and they can be easily acquired.

If an American millionaire goes over there for that purpose, forms a corporation for that purpose, according to the Senator from New Jersey we must give that man immunity from taxation; in other words, give him a bounty for going to a foreign country, exploiting that country, and making money out of it. I do not believe we ought to extend immunity from taxation to that extent.

We are to-day vexed on all sides to find taxes commensurate with the needs of the Government. It behooves us to obtain taxes from whatever fair source we can get them with as little burden to the people of the United States as possible. A tax on foreign trade corporations would not be a burden to the people of the United States; it would not even be a consumption tax; it would not be like the sales tax proposed by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], because the profits of these exploiting companies which are secured in a foreign country would inure to the benefit of the people of those countries and not to the people of the United States. Under the circumstances, in view of the needs of our Government for revenue, I think we ought to hesitate long before we give such immunity from taxation to corporations engaged in foreign business, and especially that we should hesitate in giving them tax rebates, as is proposed in this amendment.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President, my attention particularly was attracted during the discussion of section 262 to the remark of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] to the effect that if the corporations therein referred to made profits and those profits were turned over to the stockholders in the shape of dividends the Federal Government would then reach out and collect income taxes upon such dividends. However, the Senator fails to take note of the fact that the section provides—

That in the case of citizens of the United States or domestic corporations—

Then, stating the cases to which the provisions of that section shall apply, it goes on—

(1) If 80 per cent or more of the gross income of such citizen or domestic corporation (computed without the benefit of this section) for the 3-year period—

And so forth.

If the committee or those who have offered the amendment intended that the Government should reach the earnings when paid out, there is evident in this provision a discrimination in favor of the citizen, because the citizen in that case could not be subjected to any tax whatever, whereas if it were true, as contended by the Senator from New Jersey, that the Government reached out and taxed the dividends when paid out to the stockholder, the application of that provision would not be on a parity.

I think, however, that the reading of the whole section shows that the intention is to remit the tax not only to the citizen but to the corporation. The question which arises is, Why is this found necessary? If in the possessions of the United States there is competition between domestic corporations and foreign corporations, and that competition results in loss to the domestic corporations, we should not find the committee proposing to return or to rebate to the tax debtors the taxes on the profits which they had made since 1918. Therefore the very wording of the section can only be interpreted in one way, and that is that, notwithstanding the competition of foreign corporations, domestic corporations have accumulated profits. It is now proposed, in view of the fact that they have competition abroad, to rebate all these taxes and to exempt them in the future.

As I said awhile ago, if these corporations are not making profits, it is useless to enact this proposed law because they would not owe any taxes. Evidently they are making profits, and we not only intend to exempt them in the future but to return to them the taxes which they have paid in the past and to cancel the obligation of those who have failed to pay such taxes.

Mr. President, I can see no equity in and no reason for exempting these corporations from the payment of taxes the same as are paid by domestic corporations doing business in this country. A corporation doing business in one of the States of the Union has a State tax to pay; it has a municipal tax to pay; it has a county tax to pay; and in many of the States it has special taxes to pay; so that, after having paid those taxes—and we contend that we are perfectly right in levying taxes upon them under this proposed law—why should the corporation or the citizen doing business in the Philippine Islands, and called upon merely to pay the taxes which were imposed there by the government of the Philippine Islands and its subdivisions, be placed upon a different basis from a domestic corporation? When this question is asked, it is not met by the answer which should be made. The answer which is given is no answer at all, nor is it a justification for this attempt. The answer is that Great Britain exempts or credits the competing British corporation in the Philippine Islands, for instance, and that although they are required to pay an income tax to the British Government, when that tax reaches England it is remitted or that the corporation is credited with that much. That is the answer which has been given. I should like to ask the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] whether or not that is correct, because, as I recall, the other day, I think, the Senator made a statement with reference to this very argument which was then made by the same Senators who are again making it to-day.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Every dollar which reaches any corporation in England must pay the corporation tax.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Is it rebated to them?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Absolutely it is not.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Then the answer which was given is still poorer than the one which I thought had been attempted to be made in reply to the argument.

If it is not true that the British Government rebates and returns the tax, then we are called upon to exempt American corporations in order that they may have an advantage over their British competitors; and it is proposed to do that at what cost to this Government? As the Senator from New Jersey stated a while ago, we are maintaining a large Navy, and what is that Navy maintained for except to protect our nationals doing business in foreign countries? If that is true, if we are put to great expense in order to maintain and to protect domestic concerns doing business in foreign countries, what justification is there for relieving them entirely of the taxes which are paid by other people living and doing business within the borders of the United States, who employ home labor and pay taxes to the States and their subdivisions?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROUSSARD. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. I was going to say to the Senator that there is no intention of having a vote upon this question to-night. It will go over until Monday. Of course, the Senator can proceed now if he chooses, but I thought that more than likely he would prefer to address the Senate on Monday.

Mr. BROUSSARD. With that understanding, I will be glad to yield to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], who I understand desires to address the Senate.

Mr. REED obtained the floor.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, before the Senator from Missouri begins his remarks I desire to ask if the committee will not seek between now and Monday to secure more definite information from the department as to what Great Britain is doing with reference to the exemptions which we have been discussing this afternoon?

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, before the Senator from Missouri proceeds with his remarks, will he yield to me to make a request for unanimous consent?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate takes a recess to-day it be to meet on Monday next at 11 o'clock a. m.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request for unanimous consent made by the Senator from North Dakota? The Chair hears none, and that order is made.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, will the Senator from Missouri yield to me?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I submit a proposed amendment to the bill, which I ask to have printed and lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection the amendment will be received, printed, and lie on the table.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I have offered and there lies upon the table an amendment which I desire briefly to present this evening. I shall endeavor to be very brief, because I intend to speak at length upon it early next week. It is an amendment to restore the excess-profits tax on corporations and to impound the money so derived for the purpose of paying the soldiers' bonus or adjusted compensation. Incorporated in the amendment is the soldiers' bonus bill as it was reported by the distinguished Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER].

Mr. President, if the amendment shall become a law there will be collected from the excess-profits tax $450,000,000 a year, and that amount, I am informed by the expert of the Treasury, will fully meet the demands of the bonus bill, and will pay the bonus to the soldiers without the levying of any additional taxes whatsoever; but, lest at any particular time a sufficient amount might fail to be on hand in this special fund, I have provided that in case the fund shall at any time be inadequate the payment of the bonus shall be postponed until such time as a sufficient amount of money has accumulated.

The proposition, therefore, is to pay to the American soldiers who fought in the World War the bonus which they have so long and so ardently requested, and to do so without laying a penny of burden of taxation upon the American people, except as it is levied upon the excess profits of corporations making more than 10 per cent net after paying all expenses. There is, therefore, a situation created which answers every objection that has been urged against the bonus bill.

In the first place, let it be noted that the Senate, following the House of Representatives, has stricken from the present law the excess-profits tax, that source of income which has heretofore existed they propose to strike down involving a loss to the Government of $450,000,000 per annum, as anticipated by the Treasury Department.

I propose to restore that tax, and out of that tax, from which the Senate and the House propose to relieve the corporations, to pay the bonus to the soldiers.

It can not, therefore, be claimed that we will invade the revenues of the Government proposed by this bill, because it is proposed by this bill to strike out this particular source of revenue. It can not be claimed that we shall be compelled to issue bonds and throw them upon the market, because the bonus will not be paid until the cash collected from excess profits is sufficient to pay the bonus; and, as I have said, the experts estimate that it will be sufficient from the very first. All of the arguments, therefore, which were adduced by the President and which have been adduced by those who have followed his lead are met by the proposition I now advance for the consideration of the Senate.

Mr. President, in dealing with these questions we ought to review somewhat the history of the bonus bill.

The present administration came into office on the 4th day of March. On the 15th day of March the President held a conference. I read from the New York Times of that date:

> The conference attended by the Secretary of the Treasury and tax experts and the Republican members of the House Ways and Means Committee and the Senate Finance Committee went thoroughly into the entire tax situation, and the preponderant opinion favored revision of the tariff ahead of revenue revision.

Of course the latter part of that has been abandoned.

A little farther on the article states:

> In to-day's conference the definite opinion was expressed that a soldiers' bonus must form part of the legislative program. Senator PENROSE said that in considering the revenue for next year a soldiers' bonus, which would require the expenditure of about $2,000,000,000 in a period of 20 years, had been taken into consideration with the intention of passing such a law early in the special session.

This, then, was the program solemnly agreed upon at a conference attended by the heads of executive departments, attended by the chairmen of the Ways and Means Committee and the Finance Committee, and attended by Treasury experts, who faced the problem and determined at that time upon a policy of a soldiers' bonus. That was on the 15th day of March, 1921.

Mr. President, a little earlier than that the question had been discussed. In an editorial in the New York Times of February 21, 1921, the following statement appears:

> Senator PENROSE, dropping his earlier professions of economy, says that the Senate Finance Committee will report the bonus bill early this week. Four of the five options will be retained. The tax provisions of the House bill will be excised. The bonus will be authorized, but the next Congress will have the task of raising the money. To the Sixty-sixth Congress, the glory; to the Sixty-seventh, the task of financing this grab for votes.

There are other statements in this article reflecting upon the soldiers who have asked for this bonus.

Mr. President, the soldiers' bonus bill was prepared and introduced very early in the session. I believe the session was called for the 11th day of April, and on the 12th day of April the soldiers' bonus bill, which I have now attached to my amendment, was introduced.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. STANLEY. When this soldiers' bonus bill was first presented, for weeks afterwards there was a full attendance in this body, and Members of the Senate pretended to be interested in keeping this pledge and doing this justice by 4,000,000 men, whether they really designed to do it or not. I think it highly important that at least they should hear this last plea for justice to the soldiers of the World War. For that reason, I make the point of no quorum.

Mr. REED. I hope the Senator will not make that point. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] obtained unanimous consent that when we discontinue our session tonight we shall recess, and I am therefore very sure that we will not get a quorum, as practically all of the Members on the other side—all except the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] and the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] and the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] and the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH]—are absent. I think they have gone home, where I have no doubt they will be much more comfortable than they would be if they were listening to me. I shall ask the privilege of concluding my remarks and letting them go to the country as far as my voice will carry them, and I shall try to have something to say later on.

Mr. STANLEY. I withdraw the suggestion.

Mr. REED. I thank my friend.

I was saying that the bill was introduced on the second day of the session.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, has the Senator made it clear that the bill was twice reported favorably by the Finance Committee in the last part of the last session and in the early part of the present session?

Mr. REED. I had not made that clear.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. It was actually favorably reported out unanimously by the Finance Committee on two occasions—in February of this year and again in the early part of this session.

Mr. REED. That is, in February of the old Congress.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. And it died by being on the table at the time of the adjournment on March 4.

Mr. REED. And then it was favorably reported again on June 20 of this year.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Yes. On two occasions the Finance Committee have reported it favorably.

Mr. REED. That was the situation of affairs, Mr. President, when the Secretary of the Treasury appears to have written a letter to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] on the 2d day of July, 1921. In that letter the Secretary took a position which the Senate and the country ought to understand, because it has to do with the subsequent remarks of the President of the United States. It also concerns what I assert is a settled policy on the part of some—not all, but some—of the men who formerly supported this bill not only to postpone it indefinitely but ultimately to kill it.

In that letter of July 2 the Secretary of the Treasury, in writing to Senator FRELINGHUYSEN, stated:

> As a matter of fact, a plan to disburse even over a period of years up to four or five billions of dollars as "adjusted compensation" must inevitably increase by that much the war burden which the American people have to bear. It would greatly swell the cost of Government and virtually defeat the administration's program of economy and retrenchment.

That "program of economy and retrenchment" seems to consist only in taking the surtaxes off of great incomes, taking off the corporation stock tax, and removing the tax upon excess profits, an aggregate of $615,000,000. Part of that plan has been defeated. If I can have my way, the proposition to take off $450,000,000 of excess profits will likewise be defeated, and that money will be devoted to the payment of the men who are asking for adjusted compensation.

I continue reading:

> It could be financed only by adding to the burden of debt and taxes under which the country is now staggering.

I answer that it can be paid by continuing the taxes on this one source as they existed at the time the Secretary of the Treasury wrote this letter:

> However financed no such sum could be taken out of the Public Treasury without throwing a corresponding load upon the whole people in the form of increased interest charges, increased taxes, and increased cost of living.

If we take this tax of $450,000,000 off of excess profits, it will inure only to the benefit of the profiteers. If we continue to collect it and employ it, it will throw no additional burden upon the public and no additional burden upon the whole people.

The Secretary continues:

> This burden, moreover, would be in addition to that already imposed in most of the States, which have provided bonuses in varying degrees of liberality to veterans of the late war.
> Nor could the vast payments required by the bill be financed without introducing grave complications into the refunding operations which will be necessary within the next few years.

And yet we have taken $450,000,000 off of excess profits. That is to introduce no chaos. Therefore let us take it and apply it to this source and pay the soldiers.

I continue reading:

> The Government has to face early maturities of public debt amounting to about seven and one-half billions of dollars, of which about five billions fall in the same fiscal year in which it is proposed to begin cash payments under the bill.

And yet, with that facing us, it is proposed to take out of the Public Treasury $450,000,000 of taxes from excess profits!

He continues:

> The greater part of this maturing debt will have to be refunded, and if a soldiers' bonus must also be financed the cost of that refunding will be vastly increased and the refunding operations themselves seriously embarrassed.

I am only proposing to take the funds which you wish to leave in the hands of the profiteers. If you can leave it in the hands of the profiteers without imposing the obstacles the Secretary speaks of in the way of the refunding operations, then you can pay it to the soldiers and put it into circulation in this country without interfering with those refunding operations. I continue reading:

> The market for outstanding Government securities would be adversely affected and the patriotic holders of Liberty bonds, instead of looking forward to improved market conditions, would have to face the threat of further depression.

Mr. President, will the market for outstanding Government securities be adversely affected if we collect $450,000,000 from those who have made excess profits, who are literally rolling in their wealth, who do not pay a penny until and unless they have made the profits. Will the market be adversely affected if that money is transferred from the pockets of the profiteers to the men who offered their bodies to save their countrymen, including the profiteers? How will that affect the bonds of this country?

Listen to this sentence:

> I know of no one thing, for example, that would so greatly strengthen the market for Liberty bonds as the assurance that Congress had once and for all given up consideration of a soldiers' bonus.

Let me read that again:

> I know of no one thing, for example, that would so greatly strengthen the market for Liberty bonds as the assurance that Congress had once and for all given up consideration of a soldiers' bonus.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. From what is the Senator reading?

Mr. REED. I am reading from a letter written by Secretary of the Treasury Mellon to Senator FRELINGHUYSEN on July 2, 1921, which is printed in the RECORD and made a part of Document No. 48.

There was also a message delivered by the President on the same subject six days later than the Secretary's letter was written, and it is so far in accord with it that I think the two documents should be considered together.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask the Senator if he does not think it is fair to assume that the President well understood, when that letter was written by his Secretary of the Treasury, that it was to be transmitted to the Senate, made public, and announced as the financial policy of the administration with respect to the soldiers' bonus bill?

Mr. REED. I think that is a fair assumption. Let us take the President's address and read it in connection with the letter of his Secretary of the Treasury, which that Secretary of the Treasury sent to a prominent Senator, and which that Senator inserted in the RECORD, and which was the preliminary step leading to the President's coming here and delivering his message.

In this address the President said:

There has come to my attention the pending unfinished business before the Senate, and it is an imperative duty to convey to you the probable effect of the passage at this time of the proposed act, providing for adjusted compensation to our service men in the World War. If this measure could be made effective at the present time without disaster to the Nation's finances and without hindrance to imperative readjustment of our taxes it would present an entirely different question than that which is before you. In a personal as well as a public manner, which ought to be a plight of good faith, I have commended the policy of generous treatment of the Nation's defenders, not as a part of any contract, not as the payment of a debt which is owing, but as a mark of the Nation's gratitude. Every obligation is to the disabled and dependent. In such reference as has been made to general compensation there has been a reservation as to the earliest consistent time for such action if it is taken.

How much consolation is there in that, "if it is taken"? The President continued:

Even without such reservation, however, a modified view would be wholly justifiable at the present moment, because the enactment of the compensation bill in the midst of the struggle for readjustment and restoration would hinder every effort and greatly imperil the financial stability of our country. More, this menacing effort to expend billions in gratuities will imperil our capacity to discharge our first obligations to those we must not fail to aid.

How different language sounds when it is read by a different individual. Reading that as it ought to be read, it simply amounts to this, that the proposition to pay the soldiers' bonus is a "menacing" proposition; that it is a proposition "to expend billions in gratuities"; that it will "imperil our capacity to discharge our first obligations to those we must not fail to aid"; in other words, that if we do this we will not have money enough to take care of the cripples.

Again, he said, after going through a somewhat extended list of the difficulties the Government is in:

These are the revision, including reduction, of our internal taxation, the refunding of our war debt, and the adjustment of our foreign loans. It is vitally necessary to settle these problems before adding to our Treasury any such burden as is contemplated in the pending bill.

So that at best he tells us we must wait until we have accomplished the revision of the tariff, we must have reduced our internal taxation, we must have refunded our war debt. He further urges that it is vital that all these things shall be accomplished before we even consider "this menacing effort to expend billions in gratuities which will imperil our capacity to discharge our first obligations to those we must not fail to aid."

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I think there is another paragraph in that address which seems to further indicate the President's opposition to the adjusted compensation to the men. I hope the Senator will read it.

Mr. REED. Again the President stated:

We may rely on the sacrifices of patriotism in war, but to-day we face markets, and the effects of supply and demand, and the inexorable laws of credits in time of peace.

In other words, we are not to compensate these men for their patriotic sacrifices during the war because we have passed the war period. We therefore can not rely on the sacrifices of the men who make the profits to pay the bills of the men who defended the country in the time of its peril. That is a fair analysis of just what the President said.

Again he said:

The defenders of the Republic amid the perils of war would be the last of our citizenship to wish its stability menaced by an individual pittance of peace.

When he speaks about the money going to the soldiers, it is a pittance, a "pittance of peace"; when he speaks about paying it out of taxes, he speaks about it in terms of billions, and tells us that it means the bankruptcy of the Government.

But let us see; there is another thought contained in the sentence I have just read. The President said:

The defenders of the Republic amid the perils of war would be the last of our citizenship to wish its stability menaced.

These men made the sacrifices during the war. It is now asked that they shall make the sacrifice during peace, and that those who made the profits during the war shall make no sacrifices during peace. That is the position in which we find the President of the United States placed by his own words. I make this analysis in a kindly spirit, but I do not like such logic.

Consider. The country was attacked. It required men to front the storm of the war. They had to make the sacrifice of leaving the arms of their mothers and their wives and their children, which I think was many times harder than it was to go over the red lip of the trench and charge into the face of death. They had to make that sacrifice, and they made it. They abandoned their positions. They left their businesses. They went into foreign lands. They faced pestilence, disease, and hardship. They were slaughtered upon the fields of battle. They were torn by shot and shell. They lay in hospitals of pain. They felt the surgeon's knife as he cut down through the shrieking nerves and the quivering flesh. They endured all that. They made those sacrifices, and it was a glorious sacrifice.

Now we are told, when it is proposed to pay them a little adjusted compensation which the President referred to as a pittance, that they shall forego that pittance, lest that pittance shall be taken from those who no longer have the war fervor, or who never had it, who made the profits and who enjoyed security because these men made the sacrifices. In other words, it is equivalent to saying to them, "Since you sacrificed upon the field of battle, since you endured the torments and tortures of the struggle, since some of you went down to death and others of you went down into the eternal night of blindness, because you made those sacrifices at that time, you must not ask for justice now, or anything in the nature of justice. You shall continue to make sacrifices, and the makers of profits shall continue to make them. You shall sacrifice now because you sacrificed then." That is the logic which confronts us to-day. That is the situation.

The bill went back to the committee on the 15th day of July, and there in the committee it sleeps as silently and as lifelessly as an Egyptian mummy in its sarcophagus sleeps to-night that was embalmed 3,000 years ago and that is covered with the dust of 30 centuries. Take Secretary Mellon's letter, couple it with the President's declaration, and the man who does not know that the soldiers' bonus bill is a dead thing, unless it can be revived in this manner, is a man whose judgment I would not care very much about.

Mr. President, why was the soldiers' bonus bill pushed aside? When was it determined that the soldier should have no bonus? Was it not after the meeting on the 15th day of March? Clearly so. Was it not after the bill had been reported by the committee after the experts had passed upon it? Clearly so. When was it and what was it that caused the President to come here with his message? Clearly the Secretary of the Treasury had a hand in this for his letter, in which he denounces the soldiers' bonus as impossible, was written six days before the President came here with his message. During that interval a policy had been determined upon with reference to taxation, and that policy has not only been reflected but is crystallized in the program brought here by the majority of the Finance Committee after hearings attended by the Secretary of the Treasury and by his experts.

What were the outstanding features of the bill as reported? They proposed to reduce the surtaxes on incomes of over $68,000 to a flat level of 32 per cent, so that $90,000,000 was to be left in the pockets of the ultra rich. Nobody seems to have thought about using that to pay the soldiers' bonus. Thanks to what is called the agricultural bloc—and I have given them thanks wherever they are deserving of it, I hope—that infamous proposition was in part defeated; but it was the program of the administration, it was the program of the Treasury, it was part of the same scheme that forced the President to come here and deny the soldiers a bonus.

Again, the same committee as part of the same plan proposed to take off the corporation-stock tax. It was only $1 on each thousand dollars of corporation-stock value. It amounted to but $10 to the corporation with a capital of $10,000, $100 to the corporation with a capital of $100,000, but it was a material sum when it was applied to the greater corporations. It probably would have amounted to something like $2,000,000 to the Steel Trust. It probably would have amounted to at least $1,000,000 to the Standard Oil trust. These concerns that escaped surtaxes and excess-profits taxes would have been compelled under this provision to pay the small sum of only $1 on each $1,000 of the value of their capital stock, but the resulting $75,000,000 would have helped to pay the soldiers' bonus.

While they told us we were so poor we could not pay the soldiers' bonus and that the soldier was the man to make further sacrifices, they took this tax off of the corporations. Again the agricultural bloc came to the rescue of the Democratic side of the Chamber, and that tax has been restored. I remark by way of parenthesis that I am going to ask them to see if we can not put a progressive tax on the stock of corporations, so that the big ones which escape all surtaxes and excess-profits taxes because they are overcapitalized will have to contribute something in this way.

Then we came to the tax on excess profits. I have said it before, but let me repeat it in the briefest possible form. The excess-profits tax does not take one single penny out of the coffers of any corporation until that corporation has made 10 per cent net upon its capital. It has it clear and free of every burden. The amortization of the very plant itself is taken out of the income and is not charged into the account. They have 10 per cent left. Then, and then only, is a dollar of tax taken from one of these institutions. If the bill is passed, even though a corporation shall make a thousand per cent net profits, it will still have over 60 per cent of those profits in its pockets after it has paid the excess-profits tax. More than 60 per cent of all the excess profits it makes still remain its property and it still has that enormous profit to benefit it. The corporation making 1,000 per cent will still have left more than 600 per cent of profit after it has paid this tax.

Now, the question is whether that tax shall be restored and restored for the specific purpose of paying a bonus to the soldiers.

Mr. President, why is it that these concerns made their excess profits? Nearly all of those profits grew out of the war. They were growing fat while the soldiers were growing lean. They were growing rich while the soldiers were growing poor. They were growing powerful while the soldiers were marching to their death, and back of that red line where men's bleeding bodies stood to hold back the enemy they made their profits, and because of that war they still reap their profits and count their gains.

I am not asking to lay a dollar of tax upon the ordinary man. I am not asking to lay a tax here upon a business that is only making an ordinary profit. I am asking that this tax shall be laid upon those who made extraordinary profits because of the war. I am asking that out of those profits they shall pay a small part into a fund to care for those who risked their lives, their fortunes, their health, their all for their country's good.

Why, Mr. President, what a strange thing this bill is. We have levied an excess-profits tax upon individuals, for when we levy a surtax upon the incomes of individuals it is an excess-profits tax in effect. We reach by that tax every living man who makes any income of any considerable size. Moreover, it is cumulative and advances step by step upon the living. It proposes that the surtax shall be a small percentage on the man who earns the small income, a larger percentage upon the man who earns a moderate income, and a much higher percentage upon the man with the great income. We recognize the principle as to living individuals not only of the excess profits but of the cumulative or mounting excess profits.

We do the same thing with reference to the dead. We have passed an amendment to the bill which proposes to tax the dead. On the estate of the dead we lay our hands. Before his money passes to his widow or his orphans we take a part for the Government. Again we recognize the element of size, or, if you please, excess profits accumulated during the years of the past, and we make the tax upon the dead mount as the volume of the estate mounts. The greater the estate the greater percentage of tax we take from it. Thus both as to the living and the dead we recognize the principle of the excess-profits tax, mounting gradually in its percentages upon the assets of the living and the assets of the dead.

But when we come to the corporation it is proposed to treat the small corporation and the great corporation upon the same level; it is proposed to utterly ignore the principle of the excess profits and to ignore the principle of advancing the tax step by step according to the magnitude of the corporation.

This, then, is the program. This is the great reform. This is the promised regeneration of the business of the country. It consists of taking care of the profiteer and of the great and powerful concern and denying to the soldier who saved our land the small pittance, as the President denominates it, which they ask, a pittance so small that he speaks of it with contempt and says, in substance, that no patriot should complain because he does not get it. When it is to be taken from the corporate coffers it mounts into billions that menace the country.

Mr. President, I am going to ask Senators who have the welfare of the soldier at heart, Senators who have at heart the principle of justice in taxation, to give consideration to the amendment. I say to them that this is the one chance for the soldier to get his compensation. Give it to him now. You need not tax the country a single dollar. You simply tax excess profits. Every penny of the tax is exacted from the individual who has been profiteering. You take it largely from individuals who have been charging the returned soldier three prices for his civilian uniform; who are charging for the shoes upon his feet two or three prices; who are charging him for the food that enters his body two or three prices. Out of these profits to which he is himself compelled to contribute I ask that you take enough to wipe out this obligation—for it is an obligation—which I think our Government ought gladly to assume, in the soldiers' bonus bill which is attached to and is a part of the amendment I have offered.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. REED. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. KENYON. I have received in my mail this very day some letters from the Middle West claiming that in view of the action of the Senate in raising the surtaxes already the process has commenced that will call in the farm mortgages and compel the payment of mortgages that the farmers have executed. Editorials in papers along that same line have also reached me, stating that the result of raising the surtaxes and of replacing the excess-profits tax, which I am in favor of doing, will be to call upon the farmers for higher rates of interest and will add to the general demoralization. I do not know whether the Senator from Missouri discussed that matter, for I was not able to be present during his whole speech. The theory seems to be that the way to get cheaper money for the people is to relieve from taxation those who have large sums of money, so that they may loan it to the poor. Has the Senator from Missouri given that subject any thought?

Mr. REED. I have not discussed it. It is aside from the theme I was discussing, and I had promised to be brief. I shall only take a moment to reply to the Senator's interrogatory.

Mr. KENYON. There seems to be a propaganda along that line in the country now.

Mr. REED. Of course there is a propaganda, and of course it is paid for out of the money which has been wrung from the American people by dishonest practices, for when a man in business will take 100 per cent of profits from his fellow citizens, in my opinion, he himself ceases to be a good citizen.

However, let us examine the Senator's suggestion for a few minutes. Here is an individual, we will say, making $1,000,000 a year, which is 500 per cent upon his capital. Two plans are now proposed. One is to let that man keep the whole $1,000,000; the other is to take away from him, let us say, 50 per cent of the $1,000,000. We are told that if the Government lets him keep the whole $1,000,000 he will loan his money to farmers, but that if the Government takes half of the $1,000,000 he will quit loaning money to the farmers. Can anybody tell why such a result should obtain?

It would seem to me that the more such a gentleman was taxed the more he would be inclined to get out of that particular profiteering business and go to loaning his money on farms. Indeed, we have been told that the very effect of these taxes is to make people buy nontaxable securities. If that is true, the same thing would drive them into buying farm mortgages, which, while they are taxed, always command interest sufficient to pay the tax and still leave an income as great as or greater than the nontaxable securities pay.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I call the Senator's attention also to the fact that among the most attractive nontaxable securities are the bonds which are issued by the farm loan banks, the farm loan banks being in the business of loaning money to the farmers.

Mr. REED. That I think is an answer to the whole problem.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. STANLEY. If the propaganda mentioned by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] be based upon a statement of fact, and if a few, a very few—I believe the number is estimated to be only a thousand or two—of the very rich have it in their power to fix rates of interest to bring prosperity or adversity, the more quickly they lose that power the better it will be for the Government, as I see it.

Mr. REED. Again it has been suggested by the Senator from Iowa that this propaganda declares that the restoration of surtaxes upon incomes will result in calling farm mortgages. Again I ask why that result should obtain? There can be but one answer, and that is that the man is going either to lock his money up and not invest it at all because he has to pay taxes upon his income, or he is going to invest it in something that does not bring him any income, or he is going to invest it in nontaxable securities. Again, the answer of the Senator from Nebraska that the Federal farm-loan bonds are nontaxable is sufficient; that is the very class of securities he would invest in, and very shortly after he began investing sufficiently in that class of securities every farm loan in the United States could be taken care of through the farm-loan banks.

It is nothing but the usual scarecrow; it is the old argument, "If you do not give to those who have vast fortunes everything they want they will destroy the country." If there be any such class of individuals as that in the United States, the sooner we get rid of them the better. If wealth is to be employed in that manner, and for long to be employed in that manner, it would make almost every man in the United States ready to prohibit the acquisition of great wealth, but that is not the fact. The wealth of the country, speaking broadly, is not employed in that way. There are tens of thousands and hundreds of thousands of men of wealth in this country who are perfectly content to bear the burden of taxation; who are perfectly content to do their duty as citizens; who do not try to dodge taxes; and, so far as I am concerned, I do not ever propose by my vote to help put on the statute books of the United States a law dictated by those who tell us that if we do not write the laws as they want them they will destroy the country. I do not propose, so far as I am concerned as a Member of this body, to help write a law dictated by cowardice, in which I say I fear to impose a just burden upon any man, whether he be rich or poor, lest he shall use his power for the purpose of wrecking the country or destroying its industries or imposing upon its people. Let the kind of propaganda the Senator from Iowa has mentioned be kept up very long and those who indulge in it will learn that they are sowing the wind to reap a terrible whirlwind. Let the wealth of the country take its position alongside the people of the country, willing to do its part and share the burdens and escape nothing of the responsibilities, and wealth will be secure and will be protected; let it take any other attitude, and it will only be bringing on a day of fateful consequences to itself.

Mr. President, I have concluded. I think the Senate ought to recess without voting on the amendment, because there is not a quorum present.

RECESS.

Mr. McCUMBER. I move that the Senate take a recess until Monday at 11 o'clock a. m.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until Monday, October 31, 1921, at 11 o'clock a. m.

SENATE.

(Legislative day of Thursday, October 20, 1921.)

The Senate reassembled at 11 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Frelinghuysen	McCumber	Reed
Borah	Gerry	McKellar	Sheppard
Brandegee	Gooding	McKinley	Shortridge

France	McCormick	Ransdell

Mr. DIAL. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. SMITH] is detained on account of illness. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Seventy Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

MEMORIAL.

Mr. WILLIS presented a memorial of the Central Trades and Labor Council, of Zanesville, Ohio, remonstrating against the enactment of Senate bill 2135, to enable the refunding of obligations of foreign Governments owing to the United States of America, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. POINDEXTER:

A bill (S. 2645) granting a pension to Millie Lawson (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. POMERENE:

A bill (S. 2646) for the relief of Ottway O. Rhodes; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SWANSON:

A bill (S. 2647) for the relief of Walter S. Warner; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. CALDER:

A bill (S. 2648) for the relief of the American Surety Co. of New York; to the Committee on Claims.

AMENDMENTS TO TAX REVISION BILL.

Mr. McKELLAR, Mr. McNARY, Mr. SIMMONS, and Mr. LA FOLLETTE submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them to House bill 8245, the tax revision bill, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

TAX REVISION.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8245) to reduce and equalize taxation, to amend and simplify the revenue act of 1918, and for other purposes.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, the most important of all questions now awaiting world settlement is a general agreement among the great powers upon a fair and just plan of disarmament. This is necessary in order to save the people of the various countries from the heavy tax burdens which vast military expenditures impose and also to prevent a second world war, more frightful than the one just concluded, which will inevitably occur unless this mad national competition in armaments is arrested. Governmental expenditures unless greatly reduced will certainly lead to further industrial depression and distress and finally culminate in universal bankruptcy. Annual governmental expenditures have attained such an immense proportion to the yearly earnings of the people as seriously to interfere with the processes of production and to threaten the solvency of our varied indispensable enterprises. In 1910 our annual national income was estimated by the best and most accurate statisticians at $30,000,000,000. The Federal Government collected for its purposes out of this annual increase of wealth at that time about 3 per cent in taxes.

The same authorities estimate our annual increase of wealth now at $50,000,000,000, of which the Federal Government takes in taxes for its purposes each year 10 per cent. The Federal Government thus exacts from its people more than three times as much of their annual earnings as it did 10 years ago. We have increased our annual wealth in that time less than twofold and our Federal taxes more than fivefold. Our local and State taxes have increased practically in the same proportion. Local, State, and Federal taxes now consume more than one-sixth of the people's aggregate yearly earnings. This is so excessive that it ceases to be taxation and becomes extortion. Every business, industry, and enterprise of the Nation is staggering under this increased heavy burden. Agriculture, manufacture, mining, transportation, commerce, and labor, all are severely suffering from these frightful governmental tax exactions. Every citizen, every enterprise, feels the blight of excessive taxation. Local, State, and National expenditures must be greatly reduced if we are to escape individual and governmental bankruptcy. The mad orgy of extravagance, individual and governmental, must cease. Frugality and economy must control again or disaster awaits us.

Mr. President, these great increases in taxes are not confined to this country, but occur in greater proportion in all parts of the world. Prior to the World War England expended in taxes 9 per cent of her earnings, now she expends 22 per cent; prior to the World War France spent 16 per cent of her annual earnings in taxes, now she expends 40 per cent; prior to the World War Italy expended in taxes 13 per cent of her annual earnings, now she expends 30 per cent; prior to the World War Germany expended in taxes 8 per cent of her annual earnings, now she expends 23 per cent. In these countries the tax burdens are so heavy and intolerable—absorb such a large proportion of the people's earnings—as almost to destroy the incentive to work and produce. The people cease to labor when thus forcibly deprived of the fruits of their toil.

These dry figures, more forcibly than language, graphically unfold the cause of the depression, discontent, restlessness, and unemployment which encircle the world. We can readily understand why the peoples of these countries have no means left after these governmental exactions with which to purchase our wheat, cotton, tobacco, minerals, and manufactures of which they are in great need.

In these dry figures can be read the story of our curtailed exports, of our large accumulated surplus on farm, in mine, in factory, of reduced wages, of a merchant marine lying in port without cargo or employment, and of our railroad system without sufficient business to be profitably operated. The world is so interwoven in its interest, so interrelated, that distressed conditions in these countries are felt in the cotton fields of the South, the tobacco fields of Virginia and Kentucky, the wheat and corn fields of the West, the mines of the Rocky Mountains, and the factories of New England. Tax reform and reduction of governmental expenditures are world problems demanding immediate and decisive action. The curse is world wide, and the relief to be most effective must be universal.

Mr. President, an examination of these great governmental expenditures will disclose that a vast part of it is occasioned by wars of the past and preparation for future war. Ninety-three per cent of our Federal expenditures are for such purposes. Only 7 per cent of our expenditures are made to meet the civil functions of Government. Thirty-eight per cent of our present national revenue is expended upon our Army and Navy. If it were not because of expenses incurred for wars, past and contemplated, the taxes derived from cigars and tobacco would meet the ordinary expenses of the Government. Hence, but for war and fear of another war all taxes by the Federal Government could be abolished except those derived from cigars and tobacco. This gives us some conception of the frightful expense of war and the heavy burdens that it always entails.

Mr. President, as heavy as are the war burdens of this Nation, the expenses of other nations are far greater and bear a greater proportion to their entire revenue. The world to-day is almost an armed camp. How astounding is this when we reflect that the 11th of next November will mark the third year of cessation of hostilities between the allied and central powers. With what great astonishment do we view an armed world when we realize that the military power of Germany which was a menace to the world has been destroyed, her great army reduced to 100,000 men, her factories for manufacture of munitions closed, all military training prohibited, military conscription abolished, and she has been deprived of the use and manufacture of military aircraft, and left destitute of a navy and forbidden ever to have another. Germany thus reduced ceases to be a military power, and it will be several generations before she can recover and become such again. Her ally, Austria, has been disrupted and divided and does not retain any semblance of power, military or otherwise. That once proud monarchy lies a disorganized wreck, incapable of reconstruction. Her other ally, Turkey, shorn of her riches and best Provinces, is reduced so completely as only to exist at the sufferance of the allied powers. The proud central powers that united and jointly conspired for the mastership of the world have been completely destroyed as military powers, and it will be generations before they can recover to such an extent as to menace the world.

Mr. President, it was thought that when the military power of the central nations was completely destroyed and they were rendered incapable of aggressive warfare for the future, as has been efficiently done, the peace of the world would be assured and armaments could be greatly reduced. For the accomplishment of this purpose the people of the allied nations made unprecedented sacrifices and displayed a heroic courage never before surpassed. The gloom of the perilous pathway of war was lighted by the confident hope that at the end we would find a resting place in world peace. The soldier was nerved to go "over the top" and rush a willing sacrifice to almost certain death by the conviction that he was battling that mankind should never again be afflicted with the hellish suffering that modern war brings. The agonizing pain of wounded soldiers was assuaged and bravely borne with the confident hope that their agony marked the end of such war suffering. Hearts broken by the irreparable loss of dear ones killed felt a soothing touch of consolation from the conviction that the heroic sacrifices of their dear ones were made to end forever horrible war. The world resounded with the inspiring battle cry, "We wage war to end war." This thought stirred to their inmost depths the souls of men and sent millions to die willingly in the terrible carnage of European battle fields. This battle cry aroused the womanhood of the world, sent them in munition plants to work and toil, to endure gladly privations suited only for sterner and stronger persons, to go heroically to the front as helper and nurse and share all the hardships and dangers incident to soldier life. The frugal earnings of the poor, the vast accumulations of the rich, were gladly and generously poured into the governmental treasuries to bring to a successful conclusion the war, and thus end for all time the vast expenditures necessary for armaments and conduct of war.

Three years have elapsed since the cessation of hostilities and now all these fond hopes have been dissipated, all these fair promises broken, all these alluring anticipations dissolved into disappointment deep and bitter.

Mr. President, we witness the amazing fact that the four great allied nations, the United States, Great Britain, France, and Italy, who triumphed over Germany and her allies, destroying completely their military power, instead of reducing their military establishments to less than they were at the inception of the war, expend now in the aggregate for military purposes three times more than they did prior to the World War. The aggregate amount expended by these four nations prior to the World War for military purposes was $1,321,000,000. The amount now expended by these nations for this purpose—that is, preparation for future or contemplated war—is $4,092,000,000, an increase of more than threefold. The increased expenditure for military purposes in each nation for a family of five is as follows: In the United States it has increased from $23.10 to $54.10; in Great Britain from $40.80 to $109.55; in France from $44.20 to $131.60; in Italy from $14.15 to $121.10. It should be noted that this great increase is not for past wars or other governmental expenses, but solely for present military expenditures for future wars that are apprehended. The entire governmental expenditures of these four nations in the aggregate have increased from $3,134,000,000 prior to the war to the astounding amount now of $19,300,000,000, an increase of more than sixfold. The people of these nations are hopelessly staggering under their heavy increased burdens.

Mr. President, we can realize the difficult task before us for world betterment when we consider that these are the four nations that triumphed in the war and that upon their financial solvency and resources a bankrupt world is dependent for reconstruction. These dry figures vividly disclose the cause of much of the privation and destitution which affect the world. They tell the story of many wrecked enterprises, of falling prices, of unpaid debts, of scarce capital, of high rates of interest, of general business depression. We should fully realize that no relief is possible from present distressed conditions until taxes are greatly reduced, and that taxes can not be reduced until expenditures are lessened.

Mr. President, we readily perceive one of the main causes of this greatly increased governmental expense when on examination we ascertain that last September the 14 most important nations of the world had approximately 6,000,000 men in active military service. The French Army consisted of 1,034,000 men, the British Army 740,500, the Italian Army 350,000, the Japanese Army 300,000, the Russian Army 538,000, the Polish Army 450,000, the United States Army 149,000, the Chinese Army 1,370,000; the German Army 100,000. This estimate covers only men in active service and does not include millions of trained reserves, who can be called to arms immediately. The world is an armed camp to-day, to a greater extent than it was previous to the World War.

Why this great display of military forces? Why all these vast expenditures and preparations for war? The Central Powers, that sought world supremacy founded on military success and domination, lie wrecked and ruined, and no longer constitute a menace. Has distrust arisen among the recent allies, whose united efforts saved the world's freedom and civilization? Have any of the late allies schemes of spoliation in mind or imperial designs that run counter to the world's general good? Has suspicion among the Allies supplanted the confidence and cooperation which made possible success in the World War? Has the refusal of the United States, the most powerful of all nations, to ratify the Versailles treaty and join the League of Nations and her determination to remain isolated and walk alone her political pathway, assuming no responsibility to aid or keep stabilized a chaotic and disturbed world, convinced the people of many other nations that they must look to their own military strength for safety and protection? Has the passage of a resolution by Congress claiming for us all the advantages of a treaty negotiated by our President and at the same time repudiating all the accompanying obligations therein contained disillusioned the world of its belief in our disinterestedness, fairness, and justice, made us appear selfish and self-seeking and thus to be reckoned with as a danger? Has the refusal of our Government to accept the invitation of the League of Nations to send a representative to cooperate with its committee in preparing a plan for general disarmament made the world doubt our sincerity in desiring limitation of armaments and hence renewed the competition for armies and armaments? These feelings of distrust and suspicion which seem to exist in the world if not arrested will soon create increased feverish activity for war preparation. If this warlike condition is not arrested, it will inevitably lead to another world conflict, more expensive, more severe, more bloody, and more disastrous than the one through which we have just passed.

The sacrifices and suffering incident to war are borne by the great masses of the people. Prominent Government officials obtain the glory of war, the people bear its burdens, suffer its sorrows. As the people now control the various Governments of the world, they could arise en masse and compel their Governments to reach an agreement for limitation of armaments and reduce tax burdens, so that industry may revive and dangers of another war may be averted.

Mr. President, another world war would be so expensive, so destructive of human life, so disastrous in its various phases as practically to destroy civilization. Another such war as the one we have just gone through would leave mankind in absolute penury and reduced almost to barbarism. Present warfare is vastly different from former warfare. Now whole nations contend for supremacy, formerly only comparatively small armies. The Battle of Blenheim, which controlled for more than a generation the destinies of Europe, was won by Marlborough with an allied army of less than 50,000 men. Waterloo, that settled for several generations the fate of Europe, was won by Wellington and Blucher with an army of about 105,000 men. When war was waged in these times the loss was small, the expense not so great, and the vast majority of the people did not feel its disastrous effect. Now entire nations arm for war and entire populations are either conscripted to fight in the military establishment or are employed in industries for war purposes. The loss of life and destruction of property have become so immense as to threaten with bankruptcy at the conclusion of war both victor and vanquished. Men, women, and children in every phase of civilized life are seriously affected by the conditions under which war is now conducted. We have but to sum up the loss incurred and suffering endured in the late World War to force us to the conclusion that another such war would wreck nearly all the Governments of the world, and practically destroy its civilization.

Twenty-two nations, comprising nine-tenths of the world's population of one billion and a half, were engaged in the late titanic conflict; the remaining one-tenth, composed of neutral nations, were indirectly involved, their lives and business being seriously affected. Thus practically all mankind was drawn into the vortex of this world conflagration.

The frightful toll of this great war to be exact was 9,980,000 men killed and 20,297,000 wounded. To this should be added 5,983,600 prisoners and missing. If we accept the usual number of dead among the prisoners and missing we would have 12,991,000 men killed. What a frightful loss by death! A careful estimate made by the World Peace Foundation places the loss of population in the world on account of this war at 50,000,000 noncombatants. How destructive modern warfare is of life can readily be ascertained when we reflect that in all wars between 1790 and 1913 the total loss was only 4,449,300. Thus modern warfare is so destructive that in four years of the late war three times as many people were killed as were in the 123 years preceding.

The expense of modern warfare is as frightful and has increased as greatly as the death rate. Wars prior to present methods employed in their waging were comparatively inexpensive. The old method of equipping soldiers was not so expensive, and the varied implements of war were inexpensive in comparison with those now used. Prof. Ernest L. Bogart, professor of economics in the University of Illinois, puts the total cost of the late war to all belligerents at $208,305,000,000. If to this is added the vast destruction of property by the contending armies, the great debts incurred by the nations and which have not been paid, the vast expenditures for military purposes since the armistice was signed, future pensions to be paid, and the loss occasioned by business depression following the war, it may be safely said that the world sacrificed in this war nearly one-half its aggregate wealth. Thus one-half of what was accumulated by the industry and thrift of the people of the world was expended in four years of armed conflict.

The late war cost the United States $32,080,000,000. All our wars prior to this one, the Revolutionary War, the War of 1812, the Mexican War, the Civil War, and the Spanish-American War, only cost us $5,843,000,000. Thus in 18 months we expended in war five times as much as was expended in all wars since we were a colony of Great Britain. We have expended for all purposes since this Government was founded to the time we entered the late war only $27,000,000,000. Thus in 18 months in order to bring the late war to a successful conclusion the United States expended $5,000,000,000 more than it expended in the 128 years of its previous existence. The expenses of the other participants were equally as great. The loss of life and property in this war exceeded those of all wars since the beginning of recorded history.

Mr. President, as expensive and as frightful in loss of life as was this war, it has developed new implements of warfare for use on land and sea which will greatly augment the destructiveness of future warfare in life and property. Deadly gases were discovered which if used sufficiently intensively could eliminate all life in large cities such as Paris, London, and New York. Chemicals were discovered which, if scattered sufficiently, could burn and destroy completely large cities. Aircraft were developed which, if marshaled in large fleets, could deposit these gases and chemicals and thus accomplish their hellish destruction. These could be used equally effectively on troops. Such airships can be guided and directed in their work of destruction like torpedoes. By using aircraft large territory can be bombarded with poisonous gases and burning chemicals. Imagination is powerless to conceive the amount of destruction these new implements can produce. The tank has been used successfully, and with its attachments it is enabled to descend or ascend almost anywhere on the surface of the earth. Nothing can arrest its onward march, if sufficiently large and powerful. Its iron-clad protection renders its occupants comparatively safe. If another war occurred these tanks would be further developed and be used as the main attacking force on land. They are destined to be the battleships of the land.

The submarine is in its infancy and is destined to be developed into a more destructive implement of war, threatening the use of the seas and all parts of the seacoast.

These are the new implements of destruction discovered during the late war. What new secrets of destruction have been discovered but not revealed no one is able to tell. What secrets of immense destruction lie in the laboratories of the chemists, to be utilized in case of another war, no one can say. Wireless telegraphy, with its electric wave, is a recent discovery. Who knows but that the secret of multiplying the power of deadly electric waves is already known and waiting to be utilized in some future war? When discovered, mankind will fall powerless before this new instrument of death. But these new inventions not only increased the deadly effect of war but greatly enhanced its costs.

With the use of these new implements of war the code of war has changed. War has become more cruel and heartless than it has been for centuries. Poison gases were prohibited by the rules of civilized warfare, and their use was contrary to the agreement of nations; yet that fact did not restrain Germany from utilizing them in an effort to win the war. If the Allies had not replied in kind, they would have lost the war. The rules of civilized warfare permitted the civilian population to leave a city in safety in order to escape bombardment and starvation; war was directed under the rules of warfare only against the armed force and not against the civil population. The method of conducting war being changed, the modern warfare became a contest between nations, and both sides strictly enforced the blockade regardless of all effect it might have upon the civil population. Germany bombarded, with its aircraft, cities where there were no armed forces, killing the civil population, and the Allies retaliated in kind. The code of civilized warfare upon the sea was changed. It was a rule that had existed for centuries that when a merchant ship on the sea was sunk the crew should be permitted to leave in safety. In order to use effectively the submarine, Germany disregarded this time-honored rule of war. No civilized nations for centuries had taken hostage in order to obtain obedience from and control of enemies. During the late war Germany reverted to this abandoned barbaric practice and seized hostages in Belgium and France in order to control the civil population.

Thus, Mr. President, though the world has made great progress in civilization, yet the sad lesson taught by the late war is that the codes of war, sanctioned by custom and agreement, and which tend to lessen the hardships of war, when they interfere with its successful prosecution are abandoned. No, sir; we can not rely on the codes of war, however humane and just, to restrain belligerents during the heat and passion of armed conflict. If another world war occurs all the discoveries of the last war, and all of the new ones, will be ruthlessly used for the work of destruction.

Mr. President, if another war occurs, our civilization, embracing our priceless heritage of liberty, justice, varied betterments, and reforms, obtained only after centuries of effort and sacrifice, will be destroyed; mankind will revert to the rule of brute force and the barbarism of the Dark Ages. The severe shock of another war, intensified and augmented in destructive force, would shatter our civilization, crumbling it into ruins, like many magnificent civilizations of the past. Therefore, Mr. President, the most important problem, and the greatest and gravest duty confronting the statesmen of the world, are to devise means of rendering another world conflagration impossible and save mankind from the heavy burdens of taxation for war purposes and the dangers incident to competition in the creation of military power.

Before this all other questions fade into insignificance. This was sought to be accomplished by the covenant of the League of Nations. It was sought to have the nations meet annually, compose their differences, remove the causes which in the past have occasioned war, and restrain ambitious Governments that sought to disturb the peace of the world; to reduce armies, navies, and armaments, so as to save vast war expenditures. Forty-five nations have joined this league, seeking to accomplish this laudable purpose. Our Nation declined to join this league and participate in its deliberations and assume any of its obligations. This action was contrary to my best judgment. I believed then and believe now that if we, the greatest and most powerful nation, had promptly joined this league, its success would have been assured, the world would have been stabilized, and the reconstruction necessary for the world's peace and prosperity would have been by now almost accomplished. The present disturbed condition of the world would have been relieved and conditions would now be bright and hopeful. I believe that through the league the armaments of the world would have been by now greatly reduced and the heavy burdens occasioned by war taxes lifted. I earnestly favored following this course, but having failed to join the league, and the President being unwilling to resubmit to the Senate the treaty of Versailles negotiated by President Wilson, the only course left to pursue in order to obtain a limitation of armament and safeguard future peace in the world was to call a conference of nations.

A conference between France, Japan, Italy, China, Great Britain, and the United States has been called to assemble on November 11 in order to consider the serious conditions confronting the world, and see if these can not be properly and fairly settled, and the war expenses of nations greatly reduced and a lasting peace secured.

A more important conference has not assembled since the nations of the world met at Versailles to negotiate peace and devise the terms for world adjustment. Around this conference clusters the hope of a disturbed and apprehensive world. Upon the statesmanship displayed by these conferees depends the future peace of the world and its safe and sound reconstruction. May its deliberations be guided by a wisdom commensurate with its responsibilities. Every effort should be made to make its conclusions wise and successful. Nothing should be done to add to its embarrassment and increase its difficulties. The nations here assembled should discuss matters frankly and in a spirit of conciliation and cooperation. If this conference adjourns without accomplishing the purposes for which it was called, it will be a dark day in the annals of the world. Better that it had never been called than to have it fail. If no agreement is reached as to limitation of armament, the nations here assembled will depart with increased distrust and suspicion, to be followed by increased armies and navies, with all their attendant burdens. But disarmament, the main purpose of the conference, can be accomplished only when national differences are settled and national confidence restored. The just rights of each nation should be fully recognized and all unjust demands firmly resisted. A settlement to be permanent must be just. We should first convince those here assembled that we have no selfish purpose to serve; that we seek only common good for ourselves and the rest of the world. There are many difficulties confronting the conference, but I believe with proper forbearance and concessions they can be successfully settled.

We should recognize the dependence of England upon access to the sea, alike in times of peace and in times of war, for the sustenance of her people and the continuance of her industries; but we should insist that though England's existence depends upon her access to the seas, it gives her no right to a naval supremacy that places the commerce of the world under her control and dictation. To obtain her security, she has no right to make the best interest of others insecure. I hope an understanding can be reached by which the freedom of the seas can be guaranteed for all time, thus securing Great Britain full protection without conceding to her naval domination. Who absolutely controls the seas ultimately controls the world.

The freedom of the seas guaranteed would also give protection to the island empire of Japan. We should recognize the danger that confronts France in case Germany should be rehabilitated as a military power and give proper consideration to her claims for security; but in order to obtain security for herself France should not insist upon a military dominance such as to make her a menace to others.

The President wisely recognized that the far eastern question was an important one—one of ominous trouble if not amicably settled. The solution of this question is not difficult if the nations adhere to their solemn promises made in the Versailles treaty. China is the key to the settlement of the far eastern differences. For more than one-half a century this Empire has been the subject of spoliation by various nations. This spoliation must cease, the integrity of the Chinese Empire be preserved, and the equal rights of all nations within China conceded. The United States "open-door" policy there must be observed and no more spheres of influence and no more special concessions must be extorted from China.

This will work alike to the advantage of both China and Japan. It will save China from spoliation and protect Japan from having a dangerous neighbor seizing territory near her. Japan's safety demands this.

I am satisfied that the differences existing between us and Japan in reference to the island of Yap will be satisfactorily settled. I am convinced that the nations concerned in the prosperity of the Far East and in the commerce of the Pacific will accommodate their differences and reach a settlement that will insure its peace. Not to do this would be almost a world catastrophe.

I am hopeful of splendid results accruing from this conference. The expressions from all of the Governments participating are most encouraging. Premier Lloyd-George, in communicating to the House of Commons the invitation and its acceptance, stated that it had been received by Great Britain and the dominions with the utmost pleasure, and that no effort would be lacking on the part of the British Empire to make it a success.

Premier Briand, of France, referring to the invitation, said, amid great applause, that the French Government would participate in the conference, happy to show once more the profound love of France for peace. The Italian foreign minister notified the American embassy that President Harding's proposal met with the full approval of the Government of Italy. China and Japan indicated their approval and willingness to participate in a conference on both disarmament and far eastern questions. Mr. Ozaki, minister of justice of Japan, declared the conference would "surely be the beginning of a solution of all the diplomatic questions between the United States and Japan."

Mr. President, these expressions from the Governments participating are most gratifying and give assurances that justify the belief that the conference will successfully accomplish the commendable purpose for which it has been called and will bring relief and betterment to a disturbed and distressed world. But if it should fail let the nation and statesman be marked and known, who in this dark hour refuses to give repose to a troubled world; if there exists a nation with sinister designs, like those possessed by Germany, seeking to enrich itself by criminal conquest, let the conference disclose that nation so the world may be prepared to meet the coming danger. This conference carrying concrete propositions of settlement of outstanding differences and disarmament will make a severe test of the sincerity of the nations represented, and will exhibit their real national aspirations and purposes. No caviling, no evasion, no concealment will avail in this conference. Ere it adjourns the world will know fully the design of each of its members. May the desires of each comport with the good of all. I have an abiding and abounding faith that the great statesmen who will assemble here will measure up to their great responsibility and reach an agreement that will mark a new era in the world's progress and peace.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, I want to address myself for a very few moments to the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], and it is my purpose to institute an inquiry rather than to discuss the question of a soldiers' bonus on its merits. What I am about to say has no relation whatever to the merits of that question, but it goes directly to the proposition made by the Senator from Missouri.

I am not a lawyer, Mr. President, and the Senator from Missouri is a very good one, but if I understand his plan correctly, and if I further understand the plain terms of the Constitution of the United States, the two are not reconcilable. The point I make is this: That the Senator's propositon, as I understand it, is to levy an assessment in the way of taxes on corporations. He proposes to tax their incomes when they go beyond a certain point and to apply the money raised by that means to the payment of a bonus to the soldiers. In other words, Mr. President, he would tax one class of citizens for the direct benefit of another class of citizens.

A corporation is merely an aggregation of stockholders. They comply with the laws providing methods for the transaction of business by a corporation in order that they may do business in the aggregate as a unit. The money it is proposed shall be derived from these taxes is to come from the pockets only of those who are shareholders of a corporation, and the money thereby raised is to go only to those citizens who happened to be soldiers in the World War, and to my mind the proposition is in violation of the Constitution. As I said, I am not a lawyer, and the Senator is.

Mr. REED. What section of the Constitution would it violate?

Mr. NEW. I can not say just what section of the Constitution without having the Constitution before me.

Mr. REED. I will hand the Senator a copy of the Constitution.

Mr. NEW. I think it is contrary to the spirit of the Constitution.

Mr. REED. The spirit has to be expressed in the letter somewhere.

Mr. NEW. I would like to have the Senator answer my point. As I said, he is a lawyer, and I would like to have the Senator answer it. I am raising the point in good faith. I am not addressing myself to the merits of the bonus question at all; I am addressing myself purely to the merits of the Senator's proposition, and, layman that I am, I do not believe it will stand the test of the courts, and I do not think the Senator thinks so. I do not think he will argue that at all.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. NEW. I yield.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I just wanted to ask the Senator from Indiana a question. The Senator from Indiana has no doubt about the right of the Federal Government to levy taxes to pay the salaries of the soldiers in the Army, has he?

Mr. NEW. No; I have not; but that is wholly outside of the point.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The so-called bonus is in the nature of adjusted compensation for services already rendered, and I would like to know upon what theory the Senator believes that such legislation as that would be contrary to the Constitution.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, I do not think the Senator's analogy is correct at all. This is not in the way of salary. You can call it what you please, but after you have called it adjusted compensation, or any other of a number of titles you can give to it, the fact remains that the Senator's amendment provides for taking money out of the pockets of one class of citizens to put it into the pockets of another class.

I am not as well prepared to argue that question as the Senator from Missouri is, but it simply suggested itself to my mind as I sat here Saturday afternoon listening to the Senator's very complete presentation of his proposal.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I think I ought to say a word in reply to my good friend from Indiana. It is very difficult to reply to a suggestion that a measure is contrary to the Constitution unless attention is called to the provision of the Constitution which it is claimed limits the power of Congress to do a particular thing. The Senator states that he thinks it is contrary to the spirit of the Constitution, but he is unable to lay his finger upon any clause of the Constitution which sustains his view.

Mr. President, the spirit of the Constitution must be found in the language of the Constitution, and I am aware of no provision of the Constitution limiting the power of the Federal Government, when it raises revenue, as to the method of expending that revenue, so long as it is acting within the general powers of the Congress. Congress has the right to raise armies, to provide for the common defense, to pay soldiers for their services in the field, to provide for cannon, and for all other instrumentalities of war. It has the right to pay pensions to the soldiers, and it has the right to pay its debts and obligations, whatever they may be. It has the right to appropriate money to build highways across the country, and has appropriated large sums of money for that purpose. It has the right to pay its debts and its obligations, whatsoever debts and obligations there may be.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. NEW. If the Senator will permit, I merely wanted to say that of course I fully concede the right of the Government to pay pensions, or to pay a bonus, or to pay any of the other things the Senator has referred to; but all of those things are paid from general taxation. No specific tax is levied for the purpose of raising the money to meet the particular purpose, and the Senator's proposition is, as I understand it—and I do not think I am wrong about it—to levy a tax upon one set of citizens to provide a fund in order that another set may get the benefit of it. I am not arguing against the merits of the bonus plan at all.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, we have reached the point, first, that Congress has the power to expend the moneys of the Government for any proper governmental use, and the Senator does not want to discuss the merits of the bonus bill. In other words, the Senator does not have the temerity at this particular hour of the morning to argue against the bonus bill. He therefore concedes, as everybody must concede, that Congress has the power to pass a bill providing for the payment of a bonus to the soldiers, because that bonus is in the nature of adjusted compensation, and is based upon the theory that it is the payment to the soldiers merely of an amount of money which would equalize, in a measure, their compensation with what they should have received.

But I go further than that and say that there is not the slightest doubt in the world of the right of Congress to pass a bill to-morrow to pay to all of the soldiers who served in the war, let us say, for instance, the sum of $500 each. Does the Senator doubt that Congress has that power?

Mr. NEW. I doubt that Congress has the right to do in accordance with the suggestion made by the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. Does the Senator doubt the suggestion I make now, that the Congress has the right to pass a bill reading "Be it enacted, that there shall be paid to each soldier who served in the late war, in consideration of his services rendered, the sum of $500"?

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, I think Congress undoubtedly has the right to pass a law for the payment of a soldiers' bonus, and to levy a tax to raise the money; but the point I make is that it must be a general tax.

Mr. REED. Let us go one step at a time. The Senator does not doubt the power of Congress to pass an act providing for the payment to each of these soldiers of a sum of money as additional compensation to whatever he received for services which he rendered in the war? The Senator does not doubt that, does he? The Senator does not doubt that and does not dispute it. Very well.

Does the Senator doubt that the present law, which provides for the collection of an excess-profits tax upon corporations, is a valid law under the Constitution of the United States? The Senator does not doubt that, does he?

Does the Senator doubt the power of Congress, therefore, to add to the law which provides for the collection of that excess-profits tax a direction that it shall be devoted to a particular purpose?

Mr. NEW. Yes, Mr. President; I doubt the Senator's whole line of reasoning. My mind does not track with his on this proposition at all, and I think he is wrong. As I said, I am not a lawyer and he is, but if this question were submitted to the Supreme Court and decided in accordance with the view I have of it, I should not be at all surprised at it. I think it would be so decided.

Mr. REED. The Senator says he does not follow my processes of reasoning.

Mr. President, the question the Senator raises is a question that has been settled so long that I hardly need take the time of the Senate to discuss it. In the first place it is conceded that Congress has full power to pass a bonus bill. The constitutionality of a bonus bill was never denied. In the second place, it is conceded that Congress has the power to levy an excess-profits tax and to put that money into the general revenues of the Government. That has never been denied, and, of course, no one will deny it. Congress has the right of course to appropriate the moneys that are necessary to carry out an appropriation to meet the obligations of a law which it has enacted.

So Congress has the power to incur the obligation to the soldiers, it has the power to levy this particular tax, and it has the power after the tax is collected to put it into the general revenues if it desires so to do, and then to appropriate the money out of the general revenues. That is not denied by the Senator from Indiana, but he seems to think that if we impound this money in a separate fund and pay that money out to discharge the obligations of the soldiers' bonus bill, that method would be illegal. There is no more doubt in my opinion of the power of Congress to do it in that way than there is as to the power of Congress to do it at all. When Congress collects moneys it can handle them in any way it sees fit and through any instrumentalities that it desires, and expend them for any purpose that is a constitutional purpose. This is a consitutional purpose. The collection is constitutional. The disposition is constitutional.

The sole thing that troubles the Senator from Indiana is that the funds do not go into the general revenues, but are to be kept in a special fund and employed so far as is necessary.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, that is just where the Senator from Missouri and I differ. He thinks his plan is constitutional, and I do not. As I said, I am just a layman and I have not had any opportunity to look into the law in this case. I have not taken up the Constitution and tried to find the particular article which I think this violates, but I think I am right in my contention just the same, and I shall, when I leave the Chamber, make it a point in a layman's way to look into the matter and see if I can not establish by the language of the Constitution and the law the soundness of the point I make. I believe I am right in it. I think the Senator believes I am right.

Mr. REED. Oh, no; the Senator does not believe that I believe he is right in it when I have told him that I have no doubt whatsoever that he is wrong in it. The Senator does not mean to challenge my good faith.

Mr. NEW. Oh, no; I am not questioning the Senator's motives. He knows that perfectly well. Nevertheless, I am not at all convinced by the Senator that my objection to this is unsound. On the contrary, I am entirely satisfied that it is sound.

Mr. REED. But the Senator's real point was that we were levying a tax upon a particular individual to grant a gratuity to certain other individuals. That is not what is being done at all. In the first place, we are continuing a tax which now exists and providing that it shall be put in a special form in order to discharge an obligation which, if this amendment shall be passed, we are about to create.

Now, let me tell you the real trouble on the other side of the Chamber. The real trouble is that they do not wish to vote on the soldiers' bonus bill. They do not like to have it presented to them in a way where it is perfectly clear that the tax which they propose to remit to the profiteers of the country shall be continued and that that amount of money shall be paid to the soldiers. They have stood here pretending that the money could not be obtained to pay the soldiers, and while they were saying that out of one corner of their mouths, out of the other corner they were promising to remit $450,000,000 of excess-profit taxes to the great profiteers of the country. They do not like to vote on the question in that way, and accordingly they have talked about it and agreed that as soon as the amendment comes up they will, by making a motion to lay it on the table, permit nobody to talk on it. They are afraid to face the issue, to look the soldiers of the country in the face and vote down their bonus bill.

I am saying to Senators upon the other side of the Chamber, and to those of this side who do not agree with me, that a vote to table this amendment will be worse than a vote against the soldiers' bonus bill, for it will be a vote against the soldiers and in favor of the profiteers at the same time. You will not fool anybody by a motion to table the amendment.

You will have this question to discuss during the pendency of this bill and after the bill has passed. As long as we have free speech on the floor of the Senate you will have this matter before you. You will have to vote on it one way or the other before you get through with it and you may just as well put up your courage, gird your loins, harden your hearts, and stiffen your necks, and as well do it now as a little later on, because the problem is coming. I do not say that for the purpose of saying anything unpleasant or anything harsh, but the artful dodger will not be artful enough to dodge the vote upon this question. He may, of course, arrange his pair so that he will not be put on record. He may be sick and be absent. But somebody will vote on this question, and I say to you that you will gain nothing whatever by the device of moving to table the consideration of my amendment.

A motion to table an amendment of this kind is a coward's motion. The only reason for making it is to avoid the issue. The only reason for voting for it is to run away from meeting the issue. The only reason in the world why anybody ever conceived the plan of offering such a motion was because he thought he could cast that sort of a vote and then go out and tell the people of the country, and especially the soldiers, "I did not vote against your bonus. I only voted to table it; that was all. I did not vote 'nay,' but I simply voted that it should not even be considered at all. I did not have nerve enough to stand in the open and say you shall have no bonus. All I did was to vote that you should not even have a vote as to whether you should have a bonus."

How high the tides of courage run on the other side of the Chamber. If the soldiers who fought the war had been made of the same sort of metal they would have begun running at Chateau Thierry and never would have stopped until they had been drowned in the Atlantic Ocean. There never would have been an order given to advance. All the officers would have been running with the soldiers. They would have been laying the war on the table and they would have been crawling under the table. There would not have been enough trees in all Belleau Wood to have supplied a shelter for the colonels, to say nothing about the privates.

This is the second time you have dodged this matter. You may dodge it again. The first time you dodged it was when, instead of voting the soldiers' bill down and saying that you were accepting the command of the President and obeying his orders, you referred it back to the committee. Yes; this is the third time you have dodged it. The second time you dodged it was when the chairman of the committee arose and with an unctuous and sympathetic piety assured the soldiers that the bill would receive prompt and sympathetic attention in the committee. That was July 15. August 15 and September 15 have passed. November 15 is at hand. We are running along toward that latter date very rapidly. This extra session is about to expire by limitation of time, for it will run into the December session in a few days, provided we do not adjourn. Not one single breath of sympathy has been wafted from the icy regions where the Republican members of the Finance Committee sit at the long table in their committee room over toward the Democratic side in regard to this measure. A man who would have suggested consideration of the soldiers' bonus bill in that committee, hoping that it would receive any consideration by the majority side except from one Senator, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], would be a fit subject for a mental examination.

There they sit, ranged along the table, the "thin white line" that defends every vested interest in the land. What is the reason for this fight on the soldiers' bonus bill? If it was made here upon the floor of the Senate upon the ground that nothing ought to be paid to these young men, because the sacrifice of the soldier is the sacrifice of duty, and that every citizen should on behalf of his country be prepared to sacrifice his life and his health, without any hope of compensation or reward—if that were the argument advanced, while I would not accord with it, I could have some sympathy with it, for it would be based, at least in part, upon a noble impulse, an impulse that springs from the patriotic sentiment that every man owes his all to his country; but, Mr. President, that applies, if it applies at all, not alone to the bodies of men but to the fortunes of men; that applies, if it applies at all, not only to the living, breathing human being but to the accumulated wealth that is protected by the bodies of the living.

When we seek for the real opposition, the opposition that crowded the President into coming to this Chamber and making his speech asking that the soldiers' bonus be postponed, we find it in the Treasury of the United States. If, sir, the Secretary of the Treasury had been able to come before Congress and make good his pretense that the money could not be raised, he would have had a sympathetic support from every man who considers the welfare of his country, and a situation might have been presented of so critical a nature with reference to our finances that we should have been obliged to have turned to these soldiers and said to them: "Once more you must sacrifice; once more you must put aside your own claims and demands in the interest of the common weal." But when, after the bonus bill had been sent into "cold storage" or into eternal sepulcher, the Secretary of the Treasury disclosed his financial program, then we discovered that the Secretary of the Treasury proposed to take the burden off those best able to pay, and that it was because he was taking the burden off those able to pay—the rich, the powerful, and the profiteer—that there would not be enough money for the soldiers' bonus.

Then it was that we learned that the soldiers were not to be asked to sacrifice for their country, but that they were to be asked to sacrifice for the rich and the powerful and the profiteer; then it was that we discovered that it was proposed to take $75,000,000 off the corporate stock tax; that it was proposed to take $90,000,000 off the taxes of those who make incomes in excess of $68,000 a year; that it was proposed to take $450,000,000 off the taxes of the profiteers, and that that tax was to be taken off of profits made in excess of 10 per cent net. Then we knew why it was and in whose interest the soldiers' bonus bill was being retired and slaughtered. It was in the interest of big money; it was in the interest of profiteers; it was in the interest of great corporations. The men who had offered themselves in sacrifice for their country were now to be stretched upon the altar of great wealth and to be sacrificed for its benefit.

Then we found out that the Secretary of the Treasury did not end his scheme there. So anxious was he to have great wealth relieved of its burdens that he proposed to compel the common people of the land to sacrifice still further in the way of taxes. He proposed, among other things, that we should raise the postage upon letters from 2 cents to 3 cents; that we should add 50 per cent to letter carriage, which is paid by all the people of the land, and that this pence—not Peter's pence, but Mellon's pence—was to be collected in every habitat in this land for the benefit of the ultra rich and in order that they might be relieved of their taxation.

He proposed to impose a tax which has been regarded as one of the greatest "nuisance" taxes ever levied upon a people, to wit, that every man who draws a check on a bank must lick a 2-cent stamp and put it on that check or the check is not good. That, of course, was to apply to the vast mass of the people of this land, for nearly all of our business now is done through bank checks. He proposed, moreover, other taxes of similar nature, but all the time he was taking the taxes off the great fortunes of this land.

In other words, the way to remove the burdens of taxation from the common people of the land is to take the taxes off the great wealth of the land. That is a sort of vicarious relief that does not commend itself to my judgment. If I can never be benefited except by having the taxes taken off those who are able to pay, then I know that the benefits will never flow down to me during my lifetime. I have an idea that if we took a million dollars taxes off the steel combination for the purpose of benefiting the country generally I would never get my part of that million dollars during this life and that I might wait through the ceaseless cycles of the never-ending eternities and not a 5-cent piece of it would ever flow down where I could get my shadowy hands upon it.

Why is this? We might as well talk plainly for a little while this morning. I desire to make no personal attack upon any man—personalities I abominate—but when a man gets into a public office his environment in life, the conditions under which he has carried on business, the friends and counselors that he has about him sometimes become of very great importance. Substantially every line of this bill was written in the Treasury Department, written by employees of the department, who had to do that which their master above them commanded them to do, and their master was the Secretary of the Treasury. A stream can not rise higher than its fountain head, and the employee can not do other than the bidding of his chief. Therefore it becomes important to inquire as to the source of this bill, the brain from which it emanated, and the environment of that brain.

Mr. President, we have heard much about the indirect control of big business in legislation. We have been told that big business effects its purpose by the influence that it exerts in an indirect way on legislation in Congress; but, sirs, the Treasury of the United States to-day is not merely affected by big business; it is run by big business; it is big business. The Secretary of the Treasury himself, a man of unimpeachable integrity, is nevertheless a man who is connected with so many of the great, wealthy, powerful, and oppressive financial and industrial institutions of the land that when he speaks his thoughts and writes his sentiments into a law the bill is written by big business itself for the benefit of big business.

My understanding is that the Secretary of the Treasury is the second wealthiest man in the United States; that his great fortune is invested in mighty financial institutions, in great industrial enterprises, in the various institutions, sir, that have been waging war against the payment of any kind of excess-profits taxes or any kind of surtaxes upon large incomes. Of course, they make that sort of fight. Why should not the president of an institution that is making 100 per cent profit and is compelled to disgorge a part of its excess profits into the Public Treasury, being merely a human being and having the ordinary selfishness of the ordinary human being, desire to have that tax removed? And if he happens to be Secretary of the Treasury, why should he not have the same desire? Why should not the very wealthy seek to escape? And, Mr. President, they have been seeking to escape, and have been making a great battle along that line.

Along last winter I happened to be in the city of New York. A friend of mine extended me an invitation to go with him down to the Economic Club. As I always have been obliged to practice economy, I thought I would learn something that would enable me to continue the habit of my life; but when I reached this assemblage, a very costly banquet—I make no point of that because my friend paid for the ticket—I think I can say that there were several billions of dollars represented around those tables, and a speech was made in favor of a sales tax, and the leading speech was made by a broker who is said to be the largest broker in the world, and to have transactions in a single day which frequently equal $50,000,000. He is not at all a bad citizen. He is a good broker. That is the best and the worst you can say of him.

But, viewing the question from his standpoint, it was but natural that he should think in the terms of his clients' interests, and his clients were the great institutions engaged in floating vast blocks of stocks and of bonds; and as they filtered through his office of course they paid some tribute on their way to the ultimate consumer, the customer who buys these securities. When he told that multitude of a plan that would distribute the taxes everywhere, so that everybody would have to pay, so that there would be no escape, and that the taxes would not be paid by the great institutions of the country, but would be borne by the entire mass of the people, the champagne glasses were put upon the table and highballs sat unconsumed while the assembled enthusiasts cheered the sentiment to the echo.

Of course he said the tax was passed on, like all taxes; therefore it might as well be paid by the common people at the beginning as at the end, in one way as in another; and then he told us in the next breath, as we have been told on this floor, that the burden upon business is so great that business can not prosper. That is to say, they tell you in one breath that business does not have to pay the tax at all, and in the next breath they tell you that it is so oppressive that business can not live if you exact it. Now, you can not have both ends of that argument. If the tax is all passed on it hurts nobody; particularly it does not hurt the man who first pays it and passes it on. If the tax is not passed on, then the other argument fails, and it becomes apparent that the common people of the land who have but little pay only a little, while those who have much must pay in proportion to their wealth.

That was the initial movement; it was, if you please, the kick-off in the great game that was proposed to be played which had for its purpose the removal of excess-profits taxes, surtaxes, and corporate-stock taxes. From that day the propaganda has been carried on.

I see in the Chamber my good friend, the Senator from New Jersey, who spoke the other day of all who had taken this side of the question as those who were engaging merely in demagogic appeals; and then he spoke of those on the other side of the Chamber who had united with the Democrats to put back a part of these taxes that were to be remitted, and his reference to them was no more complimentary than to the Members on this side. Then, in the middle of his speech, after charging this bad faith and these evil motives to his associates in the Senate, he said, "I took an oath to defend the Constitution of the United States and to do my duty, and I will do it." He alone, out of the entire multitude, could turn his eyes to the heavens and say, "My soul is pure and innocent. My heart is free from guile." He alone was unawed by wealth. He alone, rising to his supreme height, towered above the mists of demagoguery. As I look into his smiling countenance, I know he is laughing at himself for assuming that sort of attitude.

Mr. President, what is demagoguery? It has come to have a very nasty meaning. It is applied to those who knowingly advocate false doctrines for the purpose of misleading the people; but no man was ever proven to be a demagogue by the mere assertion of another man that what he did was demagoguery. It would be much better to meet these arguments with reason, and to demonstrate the falsity of the alleged demagogue's position by cold logic. The hurling of evil names never has convinced anybody except of one thing, and that is that somebody was short of argument and long on abuse.

What is the demagoguery you have heard from this side of the Chamber? Every man who has spoken to the point has said that the burdens of this Government must be borne by all of the people, that every man owes an obligation to pay in proportion to his ability to pay. What is the converse of that doctrine? The converse is that you shall be compelled to pay out of proportion to your ability to pay. We have insisted that if A is a man of great wealth, and has the ability to pay, he should pay in proportion to his ability, and that the poor woman who makes her living over a washtub shall pay only in proportion to her ability to pay. We have insisted that the woman who owns the washtub gets protection only on her washtub, and that it costs the Government very little to protect that washtub; but that an institution that owns property in 48 States and has property scattered in 20 or 30 foreign countries, which has the protection at home of all the courts and of all the constabulary and of the great body of our citizens and at last of the Army and of the Navy, and which has property abroad which it asks us to defend with the power of our Nation and if necessary with its Army and its Navy, should pay more because it owns this wealth than the woman who has the washtub. We say that is grounded in the eternal principles of right, that it is not war upon wealth, that it is not demagoguery, that it is sound statesmanship, that it is buttressed by the reasoning of every logician who has ever written a book or made a speech in favor of a just system of taxation.

It is said that is demagoguery. If that be demagoguery, how shall I characterize the argument of a man who says, "We will distribute the taxes, not in proportion to the ability to pay but out of proportion to the ability to pay, and we will put the heavier part of the burden upon those who have small ability"? We will say to the woman who earns her livelihood in the agony of labor and toil, "Though you now pay something on everything you buy, for a part is carried along to you, you shall pay more; aye, you shall pay although the slice of bread you hand to your child to eat shall be reduced to a crust, and although you shall go hungry to your bed, and you shall do that in order that those who have vast fortunes shall accumulate more and still more, and shall enjoy more and still more the luxuries of life, until some of them enjoy luxuries that kings have not dared to hope for."

The doctrine we advocate is not war on wealth. The doctrine I have just adverted to is war on wealth. It is the one kind of thing which will ultimately destroy wealth. The true friend of wealth is at the same time the true friend of the people of this country. When wealth bears its just burden, when it seeks to shirk nothing, when it seeks to oppress nowhere, wealth will not be hated; war will not be made upon it. It will be protected by the poor themselves. Our people believe in law, they believe in order, they believe in opportunity, and if there were an attempt made to-day to loot the great counting houses and banks of this land, to despoil by force those who have wealth of their possessions, the men who would pick up the rifle and go to their defense would be, in large part, men who have no wealth themselves; but when you put wealth in control of a government, and when the power of the Government is employed to take from wealth its just burdens and impose them on the backs of the common people, you are sowing the dragon's teeth of socialism and of red anarchy, you are creating a condition which, if it should be persisted in, would some day menace wealth in reality. We who stand here and plead for justice and fair dealing, for the equitable distribution of burdens, the placing of the burdens upon those who are able to bear them, are the true friends of wealth, because we are the true friends of free government, the true friends of the people, and as you keep the people contented so you will make wealth secure. But you can not take big money and put it in a big office and let it dictate the fiscal policies of this Nation and retain the confidence of the people in that government. You may try it, but you will not succeed.

When we are told that the Constitution is so drawn that we can not collect the taxes we are now collecting, and provide that those taxes shall be continued and shall be put aside in a fund to take care of those who preserved this country and who stood between the fortunes which pay the taxes and the hosts of the enemy; when we are told that the very excess profits that sprang out of the war can not be touched because of the Constitution, that is the most singular perversion of the Constitution that I have ever heard.

Mr. President, Senators may vote to table this amendment when it comes up, but I repeat, every man who votes to table it will vote against it, and I have no hesitancy in saying that he will cast a coward's vote; he will cast a vote in a way to save himself from a direct vote, but if he does it he will vote to kill the soldiers' bonus, and at the same time he will vote to take off the excess-profits taxes, and that would be worse than to vote directly on the proposition.

Mr. President, that is all I want to say for the present.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I have been very much interested in the magnificent speech made by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. The spectacle we behold to-day is really a sad one. The Republican Party, which has always boasted that it was the tried and true friend of the American soldier, is here blocking legislation which seeks to give a fair settlement to the soldiers of the great World War, who saved the life of our Nation.

Mr. President, I made reference once before to conversations we used to hear around the country when the war was raging in Europe. We used to hear men say that they would give anything to see the war ended in victory. I heard men say, "I would give half I possess to have the war end in victory to-morrow." The very hearts of those men were stirred at that time. They were deeply interested in the outcome of the war, and those men in Europe, carrying our flag at the battle front, fighting and dying beneath its folds there, had the very keen solicitude of these gentlemen back at home. They could almost hear the tramp of the Kaiser's army upon American soil. They could see that army victorious in Europe going back and marching through Berlin, crying, "On to America." They had all kinds of gloomy forebodings about the outcome of that war. Some of them thought of their earthly possessions, and that is all. They thought of the wealth they had accumulated while the war was raging in Europe. They thought of the millions they had piled up, which they had accumulated out of the distress of their Government. They thought of the profits they had made out of the goods they sold to the Government at prices sky high, and they did not want to give up any of those ill-gotten fortunes, and therefore they wanted the war to end in victory, and they were willing then to give a portion of that wealth in order to be secure in holding all the rest.

The American soldier was a great man in their estimation then. He stood between them and the overthrow of their Government, and the loss of their earthly possessions. Then, Mr. President, they really felt that they were ready to do justice by the soldiers. I believe they would have favored fair treatment for the soldier then. If the soldiers had won the victory one day and had come back a victorious Army the next day, while these men were feeling good and apparently full of appreciation for their great service they would have favored a square deal for our soldiers. But weeks and months went by, and three years have gone by, and the Republican Congress seems to have forgotten the soldier and his service.

The Republican Party triumphed in the election of 1918. They have had control of the House of Representatives since March, 1919; they have had control of the Senate from that date to this; they have had their President in office for nearly a year, and still no settlement has been granted to the American soldiers.

Mr. President, it is estimated that there are 500,000 of those men out of employment. They are unable, under a Republican administration, to find work to do to earn a livelihood in the Nation which they fought to save and for which thousands of their comrades died.

That is a sad picture, Mr. President. It is, indeed, a sad and sorrowful picture, these young men, who offered their lives, returning to their country and finding a party in power which has so upset the instrumentalities of the Government, so turned them over to the mighty rich, that there are 6,000,000 men out of employment and 500,000 of them men who wore the uniform of their country and preserved the American Government.

Now, we are confronted with the suggestion that rather than meet the cold steel of the proposition of granting to the soldiers a fair and just settlement you are going to try to dodge and evade the issue by voting to lay the Reed amendment on the table.

Lay it upon the table? Nobody moved to lay upon the table the resolution that called those boys to the battle field 3,000 miles away. Nobody moved to lay upon the table the measures that sought to keep them at the battle front in the hour of the Nation's peril. We were praising and bucking them up then. I was one of them. I voted as a Member of the House to sustain them on the battle fields of France then and I am going to vote to do justice to the surviving soldiers now. God bless them as they assemble in convention to-day in Kansas City.

Three years have come and gone. The great Republican Party, always strong on dress parade, talking about what it will do for the flag and the soldier, has forgotten the flag, turned its back upon the soldier, and is ready to table an amendment that seeks to do justice by him at a time when he is suffering for the necessities of life. Senators, I repeat that this thing presents a sad picture to the American people.

What else are you doing? Your Secretary of the Treasury suggested a tax upon bank checks. That would make the fellow who has a little money in the bank, borrowed maybe, and placed there, draw it out and would thus curtail credit and further contract the currency. Not only that, but your Secretary of the Treasury suggested that you put a tax on every note and mortgage. The farmer or any other man who wants to borrow money at the bank to finish paying for his Liberty bonds would have to pay a tax upon his misfortune. You would make him put on a stamp of so much per hundred dollars of the money he has borrowed to pay for the bonds that he bought to help win the war. Not only that, but the poor farmer of the South and the West who sold his last crop and is selling the present crop below the cost of production, and who had to mortgage his home and mortgage his farm, would be compelled to pay a tax on the stamps that he must put upon that mortgage. You have already driven him under a Republican administration to the necessity of borrowing money to buy the necessities of life, and then you are going to tax his misfortune and tax his distress by the stamps that you require him to buy and place upon that mortgage.

When you carried the House and the Senate in 1918, prosperity was flowing like a river. You could not find a man or woman who wanted work out of employment. Under the Democratic administration you could not find a man or woman who did not have money. But what do you find now under the reign of the boss-ridden Republican Party? You find empty pockets and empty pails and an army of millions of unemployed.

Mr. President, I heard a story the other day about a western farmer, a Republican, and another western farmer, a Democrat; they were neighbors. They met one morning and the Democrat said to his Republican friend, "Bill, have you sold your hog?" Bill said, "Yes." "What did you get for him?" He said, "I got $7." The Democrat said, "What did he cost you?" Bill replied, "Well, buying the hog and building the hogpen and the hog trough and buying the feed, he cost me $7.50." "Bill," said the Democrat, "you made money on your hogs under a Democratic administration, didn't you?" Bill said, "Yes." "You are losing 50 cents on this hog under your Republican administration." But the Republican, desiring to defend his party, said, "Yes; that's so, but you must remember that I had the use of the hog all summer."

This is one of the very many wonderful things that has come from the hands of the Republican administration. What do we find here to-day? We find that party excusing from taxes the big excess-profits men of the country. If there ever was a tax under the sun that was just and fair and right, it is this big excess-profits tax. The very name of it shows that it is a tax upon profits that are above and beyond reasonable profits. It is a tax on profits that are over and above what is fair and reasonable. Here are people who can not get the cost of production for their cotton, who can not get it for their grain, who can not get it for their cattle, and yet you are forcing them under the conditions that prevail to put those products upon the market.

At the same time, while we were trying to get you to continue to tax these excess profits so that they would help pay the war debt, you rose up on the other side and wiped them off the statute books.

You have excused them, and now you are going to put this tax upon the little bank check and upon the note that the poor fellow gives when he borrows money to buy his daily bread; you are going to make him put a tax stamp on the very mortgage that covers his home, the last thing that he has. One by one you are taking those things away from the masses of the people.

What else have you done? We had a good roads bill that we finally drove through the Senate by the aid of some of the western Republicans, with southern Democrats and northern Democrats. We put the good roads bill through here, but it is sleeping in the other end of the Capitol. There is no mistake about there being an effort on foot to kill the appropriation as we passed it in the Senate. We can not even get $50,000,000 for 48 States, with their State organizations and State appropriations ready to carry on road building.. We took care of this under a Democratic administration. I fear that you are going to tie up that bill and defeat the appropriation in the House. Why do you not get favorable action upon that bill? I fear that the purpose is to cut the appropriation out entirely, and then you will kill Federal aid to roads in the various States.

Senators, there is nothing you could do that would help give employment more quickly than to put this money out right now into the 48 States and let them put to work thousands of people who are unemployed under the Republican administration. Give them a chance to earn a living and at the same time build up the public roads of the country and reduce the dirt road freight rates to the farmer so he can get his produce more cheaply to the market. This would help the whole people of the country. Yet that bill is now over yonder peacefully sleeping. Why, we started hearings on this legislation in May, and here it is November, and still that good roads legislation has not been passed by Congress.

Now we come to the soldiers' bonus. You sidetracked that, put it to sleep weeks and weeks ago, and yet here is an opportunity offered by the Senator from Missouri to take this excess-profits tax and to pay the bonus out of that tax. Certainly that would not be a burden upon anybody. These big profiteers would not miss it. Of course, they dislike to part with their coin, because with many of them gold is their god.

This debt can be paid out of these excess-profits taxes, but you are not going to permit it to be done, because they bound you and tied you in the last campaign to repeal the excess-profits tax, and when they contributed to your campaign fund they knew that the day of their deliverance was near at hand; they knew that you were going to strike that tax off the statute books, and you have not disappointed them.

What did we have during the war? We had a soldier in the flower of his young manhood don his uniform and, with his gun on his shoulder and the flag unfurled above him, go to the battle field in France. He offered his life, his all, upon the altar of his country. He went to the battle front in France and poured out his blood and laid down his life, and many of them sleep over there to-day. We hailed with delight the returning soldier, the saviors of the country. Yet here you are threatening to lay upon the table a proposition to go into this matter and to pay what is a fair and just compensation for those men.

Would anybody have thought that you Republicans would ever be guilty of such a thing? During the campaign last fall you were smiling and bowing most graciously and telling them, "Leave it to us, you soldier boys; just wait until we get in. Our party has already been the great friend of the American soldier. Leave it to us." They laid their cause in your hands and you are going to lay it on the table. That is where you are going to put it.

Pay more taxes? These big profiteers stand around here with kid gloves, diamond studs, and silk hats a foot high, walking around in indignant manner, telling you they will not stand for this and that. You stand in this Chamber and tell us if we do not take this tax off the profiteer, if we do not cut these big excess-profits taxes out, he will withdraw his capital, put it behind the door of his safe and lock it up, and take it out of the reach of the Government.

I wish to repeat a thought that I expressed here the other day. This Government laid its hands upon the youth of the country in the hour of its peril and sent those boys to the front to save the Nation. I am in favor of now laying the hand of this Government upon the predatory wealth of the country, upon the profiteers of the country, upon those who make these big excess profits, and obtaining some of that money to settle with the soldier and pay the war debt. We are not through with the war yet. When the bugle sang truce on the fields of France and the curtain went down that meant that fighting had ceased, but the debts of the war had not been paid. We incurred a great war debt that has to be paid, and these profiteers owe it to the soldier and to their country to help pay it.

But what do we see them doing? We see them telling Republican leaders, "If you do not take that tax off we will take our money and go back and sit down and defy you." The Government is over all, and is above all in a certain sense, and I do not agree that the profiteers' capital has the right to defy the Government and escape taxation. Suppose the soldier had said, "If you do not please me with your regulations for fighting in France, I am not going to shoulder a gun; I am not going to put on the uniform; and I am not going to the war." Then they would have laughed at him, and said to him what Mandy said at Rastus when Rastus said he was not going in the war. Mandy said, "You would have to go." He said, "I ain't goin' to fight nobody." She said, "I don't know whether you are going to fight or not, but the Government is going to take you to where the fightin' is." And the Government did. The boys were taken where the fighting was, and the boys fought heroically. Now, when we come and say, "We appeal to the patriotism of the country which called every man of the fighting age to the colors, and every man who loved his flag to come up and lay his money upon the national table and help pay this war debt," the pompous profiteer struts around and tells those in authority that he will retire; that he will not pay any of it unless we cut the big taxes off and let him pay what he pleases to pay and no more.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN in the chair). Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. HEFLIN. I am glad to yield to my good friend from Arkansas.

Mr. CARAWAY. The boy who was then of age and who had to be compelled to go was called a slacker, and we provided means of imprisoning him. Now, the man who refuses to pay is just as great a slacker, is he not?

Mr. HEFLIN. Absolutely. Mr. President, I thank my friend for the suggestion. The boy who did not want to go, who sought to escape service under the flag, was looked upon as a slacker, and the Government provided means for punishing him; but the pompous profiteer who made his millions while that boy was at the front walks up now and defies the Government and says, "If you do not take this tax off I will gather up my coin and go back and sit down and pay you nothing." He practically says that he will not pay any of the war debt. Are we going to let him escape? What is he? He is a slacker and ought to be held up to the contempt and scorn of the American people.

But no; he is a "big Ike" in the eyes of the Republican Senate. We are told by some on the other side of the Chamber that the profiteer says he will not pay this tax; that he threatens to quit; that he will take his capital and strike and help to put more people out of employment; he is going to contribute to the distress already in the country. The brave boys whose cause we plead to-day did not ask any question about the war resolution and the regulations of the Army; they went and dared to do and die. Now, here they are; three years have come and gone since the war ended, and no adjusted compensation bill has yet passed through the Congress controlled by the Republican Party, and you have been in control of the legislative branch of the Government during all that time.

Mr. President, we are told by Senators on the other side that legislation to do justice by the soldier would be unconstitutional. If these boys had not won the war we would not have a Constitution. What did we say to the boys then? I made speeches to them. I saw them march through this Capital as they were on their way to France to join the allied armies to fight to the death the enemies of civilization.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President——

Mr. HEFLIN. I am glad to yield to my friend.

Mr. CARAWAY. And the Senator from Alabama saw some of those boys brought back here and buried at Arlington.

Mr. HEFLIN. As my friend from Arkansas states, I have seen some of those boys brought back and buried at Arlington. Yes, Mr. President, I have attended a number of funerals there. I have taken the flags that covered their caskets and mailed them to their fathers and mothers in my State.

I saw those boys go away in health and vigor and I saw them come back cold and lifeless. They had made the supreme sacrifice; they had given their all to their country. Possibly they shared a better fate than some of those who lived to see conditions in their own country that denied them the opportunity to work and make a living. This is what we see under a Republican administration.

Mr. President, I was about to remark that I made some speeches during that time. I addressed soldiers here coming from the West and the South and some from the North and East as they went away to battle. I shook hands with them on the steps of the Capitol. They were boys representing half the States in the Union. I said, "Boys, you are fighting in the greatest cause that ever appealed to the heart of man. All that we hold dear is at stake. Remember when you get over yonder that the Government founded by Washington and his ragged Continentals must now be protected and preserved by you." With the light of battle in their brave eyes they shook my hand and said, "We will preserve it or die in the attempt."

Now, Mr. President, when I see one of those boys going around seeking something to do in order that he may have three meals a day, a place to sleep, and decent clothes to wear it touches my heart very deeply. There is no excuse for such a condition; there is no excuse for the failure to give those boys something to do. But you say $850 apiece is a mere pittance, but, Senators, pittance though it be, it would enable each one of them to live for a few months. They could go out in the country, where, under a Republican administration, they can buy bread and meat from the farmer below the cost of production, and get along somehow rather than have somebody say when they ask for alms, as some of them have been driven to do, "Why do you not go to work?" They respond, "We can not get anything to do; we have been trying to get work for weeks and months, and we have failed."

That is the situation. I wonder what solemn thoughts occupy these boys to-day as they assemble in convention in Kansas City, with heavy hearts and gloomy forebodings. They love their country, but, Senators, you will make bolsheviks out of some of these boys; you will make socialists and anarchists out of some of them; and any party whose administration results in raising up enemies to the flag is itself an enemy to the free institutions of the country.

The Bible says, "By their fruits ye shall know them," not by what they say of themselves, not by what they say they have done or will do for the American soldier, but by what the test shows that you do, and the Bible gives us a way to know—"by their fruits ye shall know them."

Now, what is your fruit? You took the adjusted compensation bill from the calendar. It would have passed; but you sent it back into the committee room where you put it to sleep; and now the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] comes and offers you a way out, to pay the cost without levying a cent of taxes on the average taxpayer of the country. He shows you how to settle with these boys by restoring the excess-profits tax; but you rise up with solemn mien and say that you are going to move to lay the amendment on the table; that it is unconstitutional; and then when you are called upon to point out the section of the Constitution which it violates you say, "I do not recall the section, but it is in there."

O Mr. President, how many expedients are resorted to to defeat this proposition of faith treatment for the American soldier! My heart goes out in gratitude to these boys for the fight they made for my country. I shall never cease to praise them to my dying day for the courage and valor displayed on the battlefield 3,000 miles from home. Fear! They did not know what it was. Death! They rushed into its very jaws and the courage they displayed challenged the admiration of the world. They were the very pick and flower of the manhood of the country, and now back home 500,000 of them have nothing with which to subsist upon and out of employment. They were taken out of their work when they went to war. They were promised that their jobs would be held open for them, but when they got back the door was closed and they did not get their jobs back; many of the positions which they were told would be held open for them were dead under Republican Party control, with business stagnant and paralyzed, with money, which is the lifeblood of business, drawn in from its working places in the country, under the control of seven men on the Federal Reserve Board.

Do you know why it is said that that was done? It is said that oil interests held obligations for hundreds and thousands of fellows who had bought oil wells in Texas and Oklahoma, and big oil interests said, "If we can contract the currency and curtail credit, we will deny these fellows money to finish making their payments on their wells; they will have to give them up, and we can buy them for a song; and they did buy them; practically all of them. That was part of the scheme. I did not know that until yesterday.

I charge here that the Federal Reserve Board curtailed credits and contracted the currency for the purpose of beating down the price of Liberty bonds so that they would be bought for $85 on the hundred by Wall Street. When a man went to the bank to borrow money and offered his Liberty bond as security, they said no, that could not be done; and so the man had to sell his bond. I said all that was done in the interest of the bond sharks of Wall Street, and it was. Now I learn that the big oil concerns figured in the deal, and that deflation was brought about in part for the benefit of them.

The loan companies wanted to put the small cattle owner out of business, and the banks would not lend money to the small cattleman, so they had to put their breeding cattle upon the market. When the Republican Party held control of the legislative branch of the Government in both Houses they permitted that to be done.

Mr. President, before I sit down I want to refer, by way of illustration, to the young man in the West who tried to start a herd. He went to the bank and told them he wanted to borrow $2,000; that he knew of some yearlings that he could buy cheaply because of the distressing situation. The bank loaned him the $2,000, and he mortgaged his yearlings. Not long ago the bank called the loan and made him sell his cattle—the same cattle that he had bought and worth three times as much as when he bought them. He threw them upon the market and sold them for $1,300 to pay the $2,000 that he had borrowed to buy them, and left him owing the bank $700. His little ranch was gone, and he was turned loose on the road with his business destroyed and $700 debt hanging over him. That is another of thousands of like instances occurring under the Republican administration.

Now that you have stricken down honest business and unloaded the tax burden upon the common mass and upon men with small working capital and upon those of moderate means, and with your deadly scheme laid bare to put a sales tax upon the consuming mass of the country, after striking down the cattle industry of the West, and the grain growers of that section, and the cotton producers of the South, you come now and refuse to give a fair and just settlement to the soldiers who prevented the overthrow of our Government and the loss of our liberty.

Let me say in conclusion:

Freeze, freeze, thou bitter sky,
That dost not bite so nigh
As benefits forgot;
Though thou the waters warp,
Thy sting is not so sharp
As friend remember'd not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I make the point of no quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hale	McNary	Smoot
Borah	Harris	Myers	Stanfield
Broussard	Heflin	Nelson	Stanley
Bursum	Hitchcock	New	Sterling
Calder	Johnson	Newberry	Sutherland

Fletcher	McCormick	Ransdell	Willis
France	McCumber	Reed
Frelinghuysen	McKellar	Sheppard
Gooding	McKinley	Simmons

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-three Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, among all the things that have been said, among all the alleged reasons—with an accent on the "alleged" and an apology to "reasons"—that have been given, not for defeating—they do not dare to do that—but for pigeonholing, sidetracking, embalming, and burying without the honors of war, sandbagging, as the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] has well suggested, picturesquely and accurately, this bill, the most amusing and the most grotesque, is the melodramatic claim that it is the spiel of a demagogue to catch votes.

That statement, made by a Member of the minority, might have had little significance; but made by the Members of the majority as an echo of the almost peremptory orders of the President himself and of the Secretary of the Treasury, it is an impeachment of the capacity or the integrity of the party now in power.

Mr. President, the charge that this is the device of a demagogue, an appeal to the insatiate and indefensible demands of grafters, is a gratuitous insult to the noble band of men who have offered their naked breasts in defense of my country's flag; because, Mr. President, if it is the plea of a demagogue, in whose behalf does the demagogue plead? To what do demagogues appeal, pray? To the patriotism of the people? To the intelligence of the electorate? No. There are two kinds of courtiers aptly described by the greatest critic of American institutions, with the possible exception of Viscount Bryce, who has ever reviewed our institutions from the viewpoint of the foreigner. De Tocqueville, in his "Democracy of America," has in his own graphic and inimitable way described the fawning, superserviceable creatures who thronged the filthy palaces of Versailles, who pandered to the unclean passions and the inordinate vanity of "le grand monarch," Louis XIV; and then this great philosopher compares the smooth, conscienceless, superserviceable slaves in the courts of an unclean, bigoted, ambitious, tyrannical monarch with the courtiers in the United States who play upon the vanity and the passions and the greed and the class hatred of the multitude, who tell the people that they are infallible, that they can do no wrong, who use high place in order to crystallize into law every wild, foolish, blind demand of an inflamed mob, knowing full well they are sacrificing the best interests of their country to their own personal ambitions.

The man who kowtows to popular clamor, who tells the populace it can do no wrong, who encourages fanaticism, bigotry, and intolerance if a majority of his constituents happen to be bigoted, fanatical, or intolerant is viler than the perfumed and bedizened creature who—

> Crooks the pregnant hinges of the knee
> Where thrift may follow fawning.

Viler, said he, is the man who plays to the passions of the mob than the courtier who panders to the vanity of the scarlet mistress of a sceptered beast.

To whom does "the demagogue" appeal in this case? Who are demanding the destruction of their country's most sacred rights? Who are demanding the looting of the Treasury? Who are the vile creatures who are now using the base offices of a demagogue for the plunder of their countrymen? Four million men, who died or were willing to die, that the profiteer might continue to plunder, unharmed and unafraid of a Prussian gun. That charge, Mr. President, impugns the intelligence, the integrity, and the patriotism of the men who demand this legislation. Demagogues would die a natural death were there no ignorance, no selfishness, no bigotry, no class hatred, no power in an ignorant or a brutal majority to persecute or to plunder a helpless minority. The demagogy implies some power behind the demagogue, and they who would brand the defenders of adjusted compensation as demagogues question the patriotism of those whose shoe latches they are unworthy to untie.

Mr. President, this effort to secure adjusted compensation for ex-service men will be an interesting episode to the future historian of American institutions. It has no parallel in the history of congressional procedure. Let us review, let us go into the genesis of this legislation.

Shortly after we entered the World War the President and the Congress determined that it was advisable to depart from the proudest and most martial traditions of the most martial people in all the world. I mean not even an implied criticism either of the President or the Congress, but to state a historic fact.

When a little over 3,000,000 people, poor and scattered and lacking in all of the material sinews of war, without a navy, without ordnance, without a standing army, just a few scattered pioneers, skilled only in the mastery of the wilderness, ignorant of the arts and without the implements of war, rose in righteous rebellion against the most martial nation in all the world—and I do not scare at that word "rebellion" at all. It was a rebellion—that kind of a rebellion which Thomas Jefferson said is obedience to God; at a time when defeat of those ragged Continentals meant that Washington and Franklin and John Hancock and the rest of them would be taken by a brutal British tyrant and swung from the arm of a gibbet—put to an ignominious and despiteous death. Yet, in the face of that peril and that infamy, Washington called for volunteers.

About 20 years thereafter that same country attempted to again extend its hated dominion over the infant Republic. They burned this Capitol. They invaded and conquered this proud city. Again we faced the peril of British dominion and British chains, but the same men who had stood like a rock against conscription anywhere, any time, or in the face of any peril, clad in coonskin caps and armed with squirrel rifles, Kentuckians and Tennesseans, under the inspiring command of Old Hickory Jackson, dropped down the Mississippi on flatboats and forever ended any British King's hope to raise the union jack above the white dome of this Capitol.

When this country was rent by disunion, shaken to its base, and when the all-conquering genius of Lee and Jackson, at Richmond, at Fredericksburg, at Chancellorsville, had convinced the world that a few more attacks, another effort by the genius of southern commanders and the gallantry of southern troops, and this country would be rent—in the face of it all, union still was maintained by the valor and the sacrifice of volunteers.

For the first time in the history of American warfare, at the very beginning of the recent contest, we departed from that proud tradition that a million men were willing and ready at any time to spring to arms, and we compelled the service of the youth of America.

It may have been the wise and proper thing, but you must remember that these men had no choice. They went willingly, it is true; but unwilling they must still have gone. All able-bodied men between certain ages were compelled to don the uniform and to enter the service of their country.

If they had gone as volunteers, Mr. President, we might with some shadow of reason have said that they chose the soldier's life—indifferent to all save fame or adventure—who felt with Bobbie Burns—

> For gold the merchant ploughs the main,
> The farmer ploughs the manor;
> But glory is the soldier's prize
> The soldier's wealth is honour.

They would have volunteered had they been offered the opportunity, I admit. But the fact remains they were not permitted to choose for themselves; they were conscripted. They were forced into the service. That was the condition under which they left.

As a result of that war two things happened: First, the country was saved. In the next place, with Europe prostrate, her industries and her productive powers gone, with every able-bodied man in Germany and Austria and France and Italy and England under arms, it devolved upon this country to supply not only the military force which was essential to turn the scale of battle but we had to supply the material wants of all Europe.

We not only furnished the men who won the final victory, we furnished the munitions, too. We supplied the commissaries, we fed and we clothed all Europe. If the United States had closed every munition plant, had refused to ship a bushel of grain or a yard of cloth or a pound of powder or high explosives to Europe, Germany would have conquered long before we entered the war.

This artificially created demand for all that we produced acted as a universal accelerator upon prices, and the cost of every conceivable thing advanced by leaps and bounds. The market was a buyer's market. There was no limit to the amount that men were willing to pay for products or for labor.

So it transpired that with all the heroism and the sacrifice of the conscripted man, he not only had to subject his body to the perils of war, he not only had to live in the horror and the hell of a trench, he was not only forced to live for days and weeks waist deep in mud, his body covered with nauseous vermin, fed only when they could reach him in his remote and perilous position, he not only had to risk the perils of shot and shell and poison gas and the diseases which fed and fattened in the mire in which he stood, but he had to sacrifice the opportunity to get a start in life.

It matters not whether he was a farmer, a mechanic, or a miner. He gave up for years the opportunity to make from $10 to $50 a day if he were a skilled laborer or to accumulate a fortune if he were a broker or a manufacturer. He lived on $1 a day. We deprived him of that which was his. If that man were a skilled mechanic or miner here was an opportunity to make an average of $20 a day, because that was their wage at that time. That was his We took it away from him. We took from him an earning capacity of $10 or $20 a day and gave him in return one lone dollar. We deprived him of that which was his. If he was a skilled steel worker we took from him the opportunity to bring home with each setting sun at least a $20 gold piece and we gave him $1 that was filched from him by the hungry tradesmen of France.

We committed the injustice of demanding not only the sacrifice of his body, which we can not replace, but we took from him that industrial opportunity which every slacker enjoyed at home. We compelled him to endure hardships and wounds and death, and for that there is no compensation. And we at the same time imposed upon him a pecuniary loss, a severe pecuniary loss, and for that we can make an adequate compensation. That can be calculated, and that it is our duty to do, as I see it.

That was not my demand. That is not the demand of a few demagogues on this side of the Chamber. That was the big, the intuitive demand of the American people. That was the almost unanimous voice of the American Congress. This question was submitted to a vote of the House of Representatives on May 20, 1920. The House of Representatives that day voted upon this question of an adjusted compensation. There were 289 yeas and 92 nays. One-fifth of the party now in power, one-fifth of the whole membership of the Federal Congress, voted against this compensation. The opponents of this compensation could not muster, here in the Senate, a half dozen negative votes. The Senate, the House of Representatives, the American people, were all agreed that this debt should be paid.

There is nothing more fallacious than the use of the term "soldiers' bonus" in this connection. This is not a bonus; this is not a gratuity. It was never so intended. It is not a pension. This is an adjusted compensation. This is the paying back to a man of something that he actually lost for the security of his Government.

Suppose that instead of taking from this man this certain capacity to earn we had gone to the coal mines and said, "We are not only going to conscript you and compel you to serve in this expeditionary force, but we are going to take from you $10 a day or $20 a day for 100 days." Would there be any question about the duty of the Government to pay back that money? Now, you did take from him the difference between what you paid him over there and what he certainly would have earned here, if he was a capable artisan. If he had capacity and industry you took that money from him when you deprived him of the right and the opportunity to earn it.

This thing acted with peculiar injustice. At the end of the war there came the necessary period of readjustment. Thousands and thousands of enterprises had been hothoused into an unnatural and abnormal life. With the armistice and the conclusion of hostilities and the return of normal conditions, or the approach to normal conditions, in Europe, the demand for American products ceased, prices fell, and these poor boys returned not only to find that they had lost the opportunity to earn the rich rewards which were theirs during the time they were engaged in this conflict, but to find that the normal wake was gone; that their places had been taken by others, and even if they were returned at prewar prices as farm laborers or in any other capacity they found the profiteer still continued to demand the pound of flesh, and that on reduced wages they were forced to pay almost war prices for the necessities of life.

These were the conditions, these were the circumstances, that compelled Congress in all fairness to do this thing. That is the reason why the party in power with practical unanimity, without the loss of 100 votes, gave their almost unanimous support to this proposition.

Then the bill came to the Senate. It was referred to the Committee on Finance on February 24, 1921. On June 20, 1921, Mr. MCCUMBER, speaking for the Committee on Finance, submitted a favorable report. In that report not Mr. MCCUMBER but the Committee on Finance said:

> The Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. 506), to provide adjusted compensation for the veterans of the World War, and for other purposes, report favorably thereon with certain amendments, and as amended recommend that the bill do pass.
> Any discussion of this bill, its provisions and purposes, would be lacking in fairness and justice if it failed at the outset to correct a general misnomer of the bill itself. This proposed legislation is generally referred to as the "soldiers' bonus bill." No name could be applied that would be more irrelevant.

Said the Committee on Finance:

> It is worse than erroneous. It stamps upon a just and unquestioned national moral obligation the designation "gratuity." The purpose of this bill in no sense seeks to express a national gratitude by a money gift to our soldiers. It is not so intended by its supporters and the veterans of the World War would not so accept it. It is just what its title reads, a bill to provide adjusted compensation for the veterans of the World War. It is not a bonus bill, and fairness to country and soldier alike requires that we should exclude the word "bonus" in referring to it.
> In simple, plain English the purpose of this bill is to give to the soldier who offered his life with his services a compensation that will more nearly approach that of the laborer who remained at home—

A compensation that will more nearly approach that of the laborer who remained at home!—

> secure from danger, and whose compensation increased from 200 to 300 per cent and, measured by the amount of labor actually performed, far beyond those figures.

That was the report of the finance committee. Was that the idle ebullition of a set of demagogues? Are the members of the Finance Committee of the Senate specially noted for their facility in complying with every wild, unwarranted, and fanatical demand upon the Treasury of the United States?

You must remember that this carefully worded, deliberate finding was uttered on June 20, 1921, more than one year after the House of Representatives, by an overwhelming majority, had declared that the soldiers' bonus was just. In the House of Representatives this bill was advocated by Mr. MONDELL, the majority leader. It was supported by leading Republicans almost without exception. Mr. MILLER, on that occasion, said:

> I am in favor of this bill because I believe in justice to the soldier, and this bill will become a law unless it is vetoed by a Democratic President. [Applause.]

The idea, then, was that Wilson would probably veto the bill.

Mr. FREAR, of Wisconsin, in advocating the bill, said:

> We are not giving the boys compensation. We can not compensate them for the loss of jobs, the loss of school and business plans, the loss of prospects in life, the hundreds of thousands of broken families, men who lost what money can not buy. We know that. We can not compensate them if we took all the money earned by the war profiteers and multiplied it ten times over. No amount of money could compensate for the loss of our American boys who lie buried, 100,000 of them, from far-away Archangel and all over Europe to the Pacific coast of our own country. But we can stand together, Republicans and Democrats, and let us do it on this measure. Let there be no line between us now in politics. These are your boys as well as ours, and we are trying to give them some slight recognition for their sacrifices during the war. One dollar a day in this country or a dollar and a quarter a day across seas is not compensation, but it is an expression of our gratitude for those who fought your battles and mine.
> Do you not remember when we patted our boys on the back as they marched away and how we wished them Godspeed when they sailed for France? When they covered themselves with glory at Chateau-Thierry and in the Argonne and all along the battle line, when they threw back the best Prussian troops that the world had ever known, we gloried in their victories. They destroyed a world's military despotism. They did their work well and they came back, leaving thousands of their comrades buried in France—they came back, and after serving for $30 a month throughout the war, protecting your property from demands of German indemnity through winning the war, this little offering is proposed for them. We know it is not compensation, but it is the best we can offer. It is what they will and should accept, not as a matter of sympathy or gift, but as a matter of simple justice.

At that time the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee of the House was induced to believe the repeated assertions of the President as a candidate that his whole heart was in this act of common justice to a band of victorious heroes. Thus he described the President in a little stanza of poetry:

> Th' President said, ez they sailed away,
> "Hold 'em, Bill!"
> Git out in front, where th' fightin's hot
> Show 'em th' kind uv men we got.
> Th' food is coming, an' ships an' guns—
> You'll need 'em all t' beat th' Huns.
> I haven't fergot—an' I never will—
> Th' promise I made t' back up Bill.

That picture of the President patting Bill on the back and promising to back him up might be well put with a companion piece—Bill on one side, empty-handed, sold on the block as a slave for a job, still pleading with the President to "back Bill up," and on the other big business, with its insidious whisper, to let Bill beg or starve, but do not disturb the security markets of the United States.

Said Mr. FORDNEY:

Oh, how soon some of us forget.
You and I voted for $40,000,000 for bonuses to Government clerks who receive pay up to $2,500 per year for seven hours and fifteen minutes work a day in a cushioned chair. Are we consistent if we vote against this bill?

Were we consistent then, in the language of JOE FORDNEY, the high priest of protection, the leader of the vanguard of stand-patters, a Bourbon of Bourbons? Even my friend JOE FORDNEY'S iron heart is touched by this just plea. In the language of FORDNEY, "Are we consistent if we vote against this bill?"

Mr. FORDNEY further said:

Did the boys who went abroad go for their own defense alone? No. They went "over there" to defend you and me from the enemy's bullets.
They went "over there" to defend your property and my property, and they did it well, and they came back with honor, honor never more deserved by any men who ever fought on any battle field. [Applause.] Can you now decline to come forward and pay a little something to those poor fellows who suffered everything? I believe not. My secretary served 368 days overseas in a combat division that participated in four major operations. In his year of service over there they were 158 days in action. They were in places for weeks at a time where the only available water was unfit to drink. There were numerous days when demolished roads and confusion prevented the bringing up of food. Often the only sleep they had was the sleep of exhaustion. For them the days were days of horror and the nights were nights of dread. They did this for us. What can we do for them? [Applause.] Can you now, when the boys come home and find their bank account depleted, refuse to vote them this small measure of compensation when your neighbor who remained at home received from five to ten, fifteen, and twenty dollars a day working in munition factories and in the shipyards? Many of these soldier boys when mustered out did not have enough money to buy a suit of civilian clothes. Who is there within the sound of my voice or in this land of peace and plenty who can refuse to vote to give this small portion of the great wealth that the people accumulated through the sacrifices and at the expense of those boys? [Applause.]

This veteran statesman concludes the debate, and the House of Representatives responds with a vote of overwhelming approval.

The Senate will recall that when the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] reported favorably from the Finance Committee the adjusted compensation bill for two hours he explained the provisions of the bill, and his explanations were almost uninterrupted. They were accepted as established, as demonstrated. Who rose to charge him with demagogy after his 22 years of service in the Senate? Who rose to claim that the bill then pending involved a plundering of the Treasury? Yet in that address he reviewed every objection that has since been made; he answered every argument that has since been offered; he tore into shreds and tatters the puny and flimsy excuses that have been presented here by those more interested in money than in men for this act of ingratitude, for this perfidious and indefensible desertion of those to whom we owe an everlasting debt of honor and of gratitude.

The Secretary of the Treasury tells us that if we grant this compensation we will destroy the equilibrium of the bond market; that securities will be affected; that bonds will not sell for the same price on the curb and in the exchange. What price would New York Central or Northern Pacific or Standard Oil or United States Steel be bringing now if those boys had concluded that they would shorten the war by getting out of danger and if Prussian guns had demanded an indemnity off Sandy Hook, as they demanded it from Brussels? Where would your bonds have been if they had not taken their stand in the far-flung battle line from Ypres to the mountains of Lorraine? The fact that we have a bond market, the fact that we have a chamber of commerce or an exchange, the fact that we have anything to sell or anything to buy is due to their sacrifice and to their suffering. They have placed us under a debt that bond makers, bond buyers, bond sellers, bond traffickers, chambers of commerce, and exchanges can never repay.

Let us see what we have done for bonds and for the bond market. I have no quarrel with the makers of bonds or the buyers and sellers of bonds; I am not here to deliver a tirade against Wall Street. Wall Street has its place; stock corporations, with their fluid assets, are as essential to industrial progress to-day as electricity or steam. I have no fault to find with a corporation as such; I have no fault to find with the bond market as such; I am not one of those always ready with a hammer or a club to demolish anything that happens to be in New York or in Wall Street or happens to be called an exchange; I am not opposed to big business, no matter how big it is, if it is honestly conducted. I am not in favor of using the power of taxation to equalize fortunes. This Government has no more right to use the power of taxation to trim a man worth $100,000,000 down to the right size just because it thinks he is too big than it has to trim a man worth $100,000 down to the right size because it thinks he is too big. If ever this Government goes into the business of using the power of taxation simply to equalize fortunes, the great majority having no fortunes at all, when you get through with the process of equalizing we will have the same situation now existing in Russia—the fellow who has no land and who has no business, as Macauley has well-described him, some day will be in the majority, and the man who uses the power of government for a socialistic purpose to take by any such use of the taxing power from the very rich will find his substance going in the same way. I am not here to rail against these men; but I do say as a conservative that the wildest and most foolish thing that the man with bonds can do is to use his tremendous power to force the Senate, to force the Congress, to right-about face upon a position that it has taken and to say to the American people, "Put a bundle of bonds in one scale and the blood of heroes in the other and the bonds will be in our eyes more precious than the blood." When you do that—good-by!

By that act you invite the hour of anarchy and chaos and ruin.

What did the Senator from North Dakota have to say upon this subject? I do not consider Senator MCCUMBER a radical, a wild progressive, an insurrectionist, or a demagogue. Said the Senator from North Dakota on July 8, in that great speech which he made in defense of this bill:

Let us look at some of the appropriations we have been making. I notice here that in the Sixty-fifth Congress we voted $500,000,000 for Federal control of the transportation system. In the Sixty-sixth Congress we voted $750,000,000 additional for the transportation system. In the Sixty-sixth Congress we voted another $550,000,000 for the transportation system. In the Sixty-sixth Congress we voted another $300,000,000. In other words, we voted in one Congress nearly $2,000,000,000 for the railways of the United States, and I am informed by the chairman of the Committee on Interstate Commerce that the railways are now claiming $600,000,000 more because of the fact that the Railroad Administration in operating the railways left undone things that they should have done and would have done, as they claimed, except for the deficiency in operating, amounting in the aggregate to $600,000,000.

In addition to the more than two billions that you have given in aid of the transportation system by land you have given a greater sum in aid of a defunct and dilapidated transportation system by water. In the face of that you are now proposing, a bill is now pending, to fund the railroads through your War Finance Corporation, and out of the back door of the Treasury to take a billion dollars. They have not the nerve, the courage, to call it an appropriation. This thing will make the Government of the United States the biggest and most reckless gambler that ever bought or sold a share of stock upon the curb or in the exchange of Wall Street. Pass that bill and you not only take in all probability a billion of money from the people, but you make Uncle Sam the most foolish, the most reckless, if not the most wicked gambler that ever bet on a rise or a fall in the market.

Is it possible that we have money for every conceivable purpose—money to run the common schools the States are now running; money to assist ladies in the sweetest and the most holy hour of their lives—for 140 years they have been having their own babies; now the Government is going to superintend that job—money for railroads; money for shipbuilding; money for any and all purposes; money to support any imperiled industry; money for the farmer—and it is perfectly right that the farmer should have it—money for everything, good or bad; money to regulate the trusts; money to create commissions; money to run butcher shops; money to run packing industries; money to supervise cotton exchanges—every new hour brings a new commission; every new commission demands a new appropriation; every day we drift toward a system of Federal usurpation and Federal aggression that will demolish the States, will put the citizen in a strait-jacket, will feed us all with a Federal spoon; nobody comes for any purpose, moral, industrial, financial, or otherwise; there is no propaganda, however wild or crazy, that can get two or three so-called uplift societies behind it that can not run its cranky fingers into the Treasury of the United States; and yet what do we do for the one man who has given that which is more precious than everything else in this world, except a woman's love and sacrifice? For I have never believed that the boy who fell upon the perilous edge of battle suffered half as much or braved half as much as she who bore him, as she who sat clad in the black habiliments of woe by a shattered fireside, waiting, waiting, waiting in unspeakable pathos, listening for the ne'er returning footsteps of the dead. With the exception of a woman's sacrifice and a woman's suffering, none have done so much to make us safe and to make us free as these 4,000,000 heroic boys; and every door of the Treasury, the front door and the back door and the side door, is open to every legitimate and to every illegitimate, to every wise and to every unwise, to every sane and to every crazy claim that is being made upon it, except the claim of a soldier for adjusted compensation.

A just compensation? No; a compensation less than just, measured to him and approved after more than one year of study by the House of Representatives and the Senate of the United States.

Who were they who said it was less than just? Who were they who weighed all that he did against all that we must give? Let us see who were the men who said that.

Demagogues? Who are the members of that Finance Committee? BOIES PENROSE, of Pennsylvania, with 24 years of service in this august body; PORTER J. MCCUMBER, with 22 years of service; REED SMOOT, with 18 years of service; F. M. SIMMONS, with over 20 years of service; JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS, with more than 30 years of brilliant service in the two Houses. Take the combined services of that brilliant array of statesmen, seasoned and capable, and it will extend beyond the time the Constitution was adopted. It will almost reach the hour when the frail prows of the Pilgrims' barks came in sight of Plymouth Rock; and yet, with nearly 200 years of combined service and two years of study, they come here and tell you it is an adjusted compensation, it is less than we should give, it is only a pittance, and everybody assumes that it will pass, and all at once—all at once, Mr. President—all at once the whole thing stops, like grandfathers' clock. Bing! It is over.

Where, now, is the gallant leader of the majority [Mr. MONDELL], the aspiring statesman from Wyoming? Where, now, is the scarred veteran of the standpatters, the hard, sturdy idol of Bourbon Republicanism, my capable friend JOE FORDNEY? Where, now, is the doughty leader from Pennsylvania, Mr. PENROSE? Where are they whom, we once thought, led and were capable of leading a deliberative body? Echo answers, "Where?"

This wild, glad, patriotic cry has not the volume of the squeal of a mouse. They have not only abandoned their own well-considered arguments; they have done worse.

I warn the majority, or its empty benches. You are dealing with men, with soldiers. You are dealing with those who can excuse incompetence, who can excuse crookedness, perhaps, but who never will forgive cowardice, who never will respect the man who runs.

In the midst of this smooth sailing, in the midst of this wild acclaim of gratitude from somewhere, somebody—God knows who—reached the Secretary of the Treasury. Somebody told the sexton, and the sexton tolled the bell, and the Secretary told the President; and after the Congress had twice passed this bill, after the Senate had considered it in committee and had considered it in this Chamber, where it was on the eve of receiving the hearty indorsement of an overwhelming majority of both sides, the President of the United States comes into this body, sets his foot upon this measure, and, without rhyme or reason except "We can not afford it," orders these doughty champions of unrewarded heroes to hunt their holes, and they went into their holes and pulled the holes in after them.

The Senator from North Dakota said it was only a cataleptic fit into which the President had thrown this bill.

"It is not dead," said he, "but sleeping." I dare him to make it snore. I defy him to put a stethoscope over its marble heart or stained glass above its pallid face. If he will look somewhere in the neighborhood of the carotid artery he will see the Italian hand of the master surgeon, the Senator from Pennsylvania, who also acted as undertaker. That thing is full of embalming fluid right now, and nothing except the trump of Gabriel, or "the jingling of the guinea that helps the hurt that honor feels" will ever raise it from its last and its eternal sleep.

Mr. President, the ingratitude of republics is no new thing. I have often wondered why the wisest of men, He who was both man and God, warned above all things against the sin of covetousness, declaring that it was easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle than for a rich man to enter the Kingdom of Heaven. Just how many millions can and sometimes do infect the very body of a man, and the gold is as it were absorbed in the blood until the heart becomes metallic and rings like a dollar—how it is I do not know. How any man with multiplied millions, Mr. President, think of it, now earning from 15 to 500 per cent, wrapped in luxury, in his pride of place and power, like old Dives, clad in fine linen and faring sumptuously every day, can look from his marble palace out there to that heroic Lazarus, in want, in rags, in idleness, and say, "I will not from my abundance minister to the necessities of this needy hero," how he can say that, how he can ask Mellon to say it, how Mellon can induce the President of the United States to say it is beyond my ken; but they have said it.

It was but yesterday, and we used to laugh—yes, and scorn—the corruption of other senates. This is not the first Senate that ever denied a soldier his rights. Senates have been doing that for 2,000 years, and for more than 2,000 years a senate has been doubly damned in the eyes of all honest thinking men for its cruel cupidity. Two thousand years and more ago, Mr. President, boys went out as our boys went out, under blazing eagles and to an inspiring trumpet's call, clad in gleaming armor, and they made one city the mistress of the world, until "she sat upon her seven hills and from her throne of beauty ruled the world." Province after province was brought under the dominion of the imperial city, and the public lands were by law given to the men who took them; but the bondholders of Rome, the fellows on the exchange of Rome, the holding companies, if you please, of Rome, the tax dodgers and law evaders of Rome, by means of trusts and leases took the public lands which had been drenched with a soldier's blood and dedicated to the soldier's use, and they stole them all, drove the soldier from his own vine and fig tree, drove him from the protection of his own roof, and placed a Numidian slave in his place, until at last the greatest tribune of ancient times rose and thus addressed them.

A hundred and thirty-three years before Christ Tiberius Gracchus said:

> The wild beasts of Italy had their dens and holes and hiding places, while the men who fought and died in defense of Italy enjoyed, indeed, the air and the light, but nothing else; houseless and without a spot of ground to rest upon, they wander about with their wives and children, while their commanders, with a lie in their mouth, exhort the soldiers in battle to defend their tombs and temples against the enemy, for out of so many Romans not one has a family altar or an ancestral tomb, but they fight to maintain the luxury and wealth of others, and they die with the title of lords of the earth, without possessing a single clod to call their own.

To-day 50,000 lie under the poppies and the lilies of France, 200,000 more maimed and broken, a million more in want—and they fought for what? As Tiberius Gracchus said, they fought to protect the profiteer in luxury and power, and they have not a clod, and they ask you for bread, they ask you for raiment, they ask you for shelter, and you say, "We would love to help you, but it would affect the bond market; the price of United States Steel will drop if you go up; Standard Oil will not declare a dividend if you have a meal."

Great God of justice and mercy! This excuse is enough to recall the drowned Gracchus from the muddy waters of the Tiber. He who made that speech suffered death, because those greedy, thieving, avaricious senators tore the legs from the benches, demolished the furniture of the forum, and battered him and 300 of his fellows to death; and they butchered his brother for the same thing.

But I say to the bond market of New York, I say to Mr. Mellon, who is big business, I say to those who expect a billion in railroad securities, I say to the kings of high finance, "Beware! Remember that their heroic mother, the noble Cornelia, the daughter of Scipio Africanus, the greatest of Roman generals, threw the ashes of the murdered Gracchi toward heaven, and from them sprang Marius and Sulla. You may leave the unrequited soldier to die in want, but his cry of agony and his just complaint will be heard by millions, and from their outrage and from their anger and from their wrath will spring here, as in old Rome, a Marius and a Sulla."

In the face of socialism and unrest will you not give them this morsel upon which to feed? The greatest pioneer, save Boone, the West ever produced, George Rogers Clarke, the Hannibal of the Northwest, he whose single sword, backed by less than 200 heroic Virginians and Kentuckians, redeemed all that region which now teems with wealth and power, for between the Great Lakes and the Ohio River is the epitome of the industrial life of America. In agriculture, in finance, in commerce, in industrial enterprise, in the intelligence and vigor of its population, it is unique in all the world, and yet that vast region—Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois—would to-day, in all probability, be under the British flag, because it was under British dominion during the Revolutionary War, had it not been for the dauntless courage, the genius and the enterprise of George Rogers Clarke. When he who saved an empire to America was visited, so they say, in a deserted cabin years afterwards by a delegation from the General Assembly of Virginia, and they presented him with a beautiful sword; and then, from his dirt floor, and his wounds, his hunger, and his nakedness, the old hero arose and replied, "Go back and tell the people of Virginia that when Virginia needed a sword I found one. It is bread I want."

They say the story is a mere legend; but, be that as it may, we in Kentucky, there around his deserted cabin, have felt our eyes fill with tears at the ingratitude to the greatest military genius who ever led a pioneer band to victory or to glory. We have wondered at the ingratitude of Virginia. We have wondered at the ingratitude of the Roman Senate.

Mr. President, to-morrow the whole Capital will ring with martial music, a hundred bands will play national airs, the very air will bloom with color as ten thousand times ten thousand flags flaunt from every window, every casement, and from every dome, the whole people will shout in pride and glory as multiplied thousands are spent in doing honor to our unknown and unrewarded dead, and you do well.

But why proclaim to the world that we reward only unknown dead, why place all your flowers and spend all your money above a handful of dust?

> Can storied urn, or animated bust,
> Back to its mansion call the fleeting breath?
> Can honor's voice provoke the silent dust,
> Or flattery soothe the dull cold ear of death?

Little he will reck of all your banners and music and oratory. But you pay that tribute to yourselves. Monuments are erected to the living, not to the dead. I ask you to reward the known and living soldier as well as the unknown dead. I ask you to do justice by those who demand justice. It is a mockery, it is hypocrisy, for jeweled lords and ladies in gilded limousines, who display their wealth and power, to clip their coupons above this unknown grave, while back from all the proud and pampered darlings of society, back from crowds of high officials in gold braid and gorgeous dress, back in the rear, pushed aside by insolent police, will stand poor, hungry, ragged, unrewarded men, who will leave that place to pawn a croix de guerre for a loaf of bread.

Let it not be. Let us be consistent. Let us be just. Above all, let us be men. If you mean to refuse this crust to the heroes who earned it, say so; but do not dodge behind those desks; do not play the coward as well as the superserviceable slave to organized millions. If you must wear the collar of big business, have the manhood to wear it openly. Say, "As between the hero of battle and the bondholder, as between big deeds and big profits, I take my stand for big business." You will not surprise anybody; it will be no news to those who know the workings and can touch the secret springs that move big business and standpat politics alike; but we can respect at least your courage if not your politics or your policies.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FERNALD in the chair). The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gerry	McCumber	Sheppard
Brandegee	Gooding	McKellar	Simmons
Broussard	Hale	McKinley	Smoot
Bursum	Harris	McLean	Stanley
Calder	Heflin	McNary	Sterling
Cameron	Hitchcock	Moses	Sutherland
Capper	Johnson	Nelson	Swanson
Caraway	Jones, N. Mex.	New	Trammell
Culberson	Jones, Wash.	Newberry	Underwood
Curtis	Kendrick	Nicholson	Wadsworth
Dial	Kenyon	Norbeck	Walsh, Mass.
Dillingham	Keyes	Norris	Warren
Edge	King	Oddie	Watson, Ga.
Fernald	La Follette	Overman	Weller
Fletcher	Lenroot	Penrose	Willis
France	Lodge	Poindexter
Frelinghuysen	McCormick	Reed

Mr. NELSON. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. KELLOGG] is detained from the Chamber on official business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-six Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN], while delivering his eloquent speech, expressed his wonder at what was being thought, felt, and said out at Kansas City at the great meeting of the ex-service men of the World War. A few moments after he had taken his seat a friend from the press gallery handed me a copy of the early issue of the Washington Times of to-day, on the front page of which I find these headlines:

> Legion demands bonus revived. Criticism hurled at the President. Mellon also accused by national commander at convention of misrepresenting the facts.

Just beyond the Canadian border they have done and are now doing the very thing which we have not done in the past and apparently do not intend to do. More than 4,000,000 acres of land have been allotted to the ex-service men who went from Canada to fight for their mother country when her very life was at stake. That magnificent policy is going forward from day to day.

In this country we have adopted no such policy, and apparently do not intend to do so. Why it was that the President of the United States placed himself in antagonism to the soldiers who fought under unusual circumstances of sacrifice and suffering so many thousands of miles away from home I do not know any more than I know why Secretary Mellon so persistently misrepresents the facts.

There is one thing about this service beyond seas which makes it different from that of a soldier in any other war in which Americans have taken a part. The wide ocean separated them from home. They lost contact with neighbor, friend, father, mother, children. During the War between the States and all our other wars the soldiers on both sides enjoyed the advantage of furloughs home. In this Great War they had no such advantage. During the War between the States, and all other wars we have waged, they could receive comforts from home to supplement the Army rations. In this war they could not, and the very boxes of comforts which were prepared for them here and shipped to France were sold to them; and it took the soldier's pay to keep himself fed and clothed. There was not a single letter he could write that was not stereotyped. There was no censorship of private letters during the Civil War or the Revolutionary War or the War of 1812 or the Spanish War. In this war beyond the ocean the most rigid censorship prevailed, and no soldier could tell his own folks, who could spread it over the neighborhood, how they were being treated. Our people never learned of the barbarities practiced upon our soldiers until the privates began to filter back into this country and to tell a part of what they had experienced.

I have been impressed with the fact, as various ex-soldiers have come to my house, that there were certain points at which they paused. There were some things they did not want to tell, and those things have not been told. "Hard-boiled" Smith was not alone in his savage treatment of the men in his power when he was so far away that he did not believe his atrocious mistreatment of the privates would ever get back to America.

How many Senators know that a private soldier was frequently shot by his officers because of some complaint against officers' insolence; and that they had gallows upon which men were hanged, day after day, without court-martial or any other form of trial? How many Senators know that? I had and have the photograph of one of those gallows, upon which 21 white boys had already been executed at sunrise when the photograph was taken; and there were others waiting in the camp jails to be hanged morning after morning.

Did we not have meatless days in order that they should be fed? Did we not have wheatless days for the same purpose? Were not the women busily engaged making for them garments of comfort and necessity? The greatest indictment that can be brought against those who were responsible for their supplies was that we gave a billion dollars' worth of those supplies to the French Government for $400,000,000 on credit—a debt which probably never will be paid. In the city of New York, only a few weeks ago, there were sold to a speculator, a profiteer, five carloads of boots at 25 cents a pair. They were held in the depots here and elsewhere when the bleeding feet of our soldiers were tramping over the frozen ground in Europe.

Conditions of warfare were worse than ever before known. The men who followed Grant and Sherman and Sheridan and Lee and Jackson and Johnston and Beauregard did not have to stand in trenches almost waist deep in freezing water day after day until they contracted the incurable disease which is known as "trench foot." They did not have to go on useless marches—"hikes" became the name—where if from sheer exhaustion a man fell out he was left to die by the roadside.

While I was making a speech at Covington in the campaign of last year I mentioned a hike that was made after the armistice was signed, and I spoke of the lives thus sacrificed without rhyme or reason. When I had finished an old man came to me and said, "Mr. WATSON, what you said was exactly true; the son of my neighbor died on that hike, and he died by the roadside with not a hand to help him or anyone to speak into his ear the last words of consolation."

Senators were here on the 4th of March last when the President was inaugurated; they saw the parade of wounded soldiers—"the display of wounded soldiers" is, perhaps, a better expression. It was pitiable; but whether or not the condition of a man who is wounded or has lost an eye or an arm is worse than that of a man who came unscathed from battle to find himself homeless, with a wife who was homeless, with children who were homeless, and a country that had forgotten him, I leave for philosophers to decide.

What have we been doing here that we could not give the soldiers just compensation? Have we not been told that they upheld the civilization of a thousand years? If that statement was true, what was their service worth? Have we not been told that they saved our own country? If that statement be true, what is our country worth?

Why have we not been able to pay them a bonus? We were able and willing to pay Colombia $25,000,000 to effect a peaceful entrance for the Standard Oil Co., the worst tax dodger on earth; we were able to give a million dollars, without a word, to Brazil to assist her in having an exposition and to build an edifice—that will be hers so long as it lasts—costing a half million dollars; we were able to pay to Great Britain $46,000,000 for carrying our soldiers to her own salvation in nasty cattle ships, while England owes us nearly $5,000,000,000 and will not even pay us the interest on that debt. We are able to take off from the profiteers, as my friend from Missouri [Mr. REED] has pointed out, $450,000,000 in taxes on excess profits.

Any bonus paid to the soldier would add to the money of every community in the Union and would benefit country and town, white and black, merchant, farmer, banker, and laborer.

We do not propose to put a tax upon stock dividends representing net profits. Why not? It is said it is because the Supreme Court of the United States has said we could not do it. We can do it. We can slightly change the wording of the law. I propose to offer an amendment to that effect; and we shall see, Mr. President, whether or not five men, sitting between this Chamber and the other, have a greater power than the united Congress and President of the United States. The Constitution does not give it to them. The debates of the Constitutional Convention show that it was never meant they should have it. The judiciary act of 1789, drawn by that fine New England lawyer, Mr. Elbridge Gerry, an ancestor of our friend the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY] who sits on this side of the Chamber, does not give them that power. They have usurped it, and if ever they usurp it again the executive ought to exert its coordinate power and enforce the law as made by the legislative branch. Thomas Jefferson did it, Andrew Jackson did it, Abraham Lincoln did it, and any other President can do it who has the will to do it.

A layman on the other side—I notice lawyers are not so anxious to make propositions of that kind—a layman, the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW], for whom I have the utmost good will and respect, said that the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] could not stand, because it proposed to devote a certain amount of the revenue intended to be raised under the pending bill to a certain purpose. Mr. President, is it not implied in this bill that the revenue to be raised shall be given, so much to the Army, so much to the Navy, so much to the hospital service, so much to salaries? Could we not put in the bill the items for which the money is to be expended? We certainly could. Therefore, the amendment can stand without in any way interfering with the constitutionality of the measure. Why the other side of the Chamber and the White House have put themselves against a recognition of the service of our soldiers it is not for me to say.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WADSWORTH in the chair). Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. STANLEY. If there were anything in the contention of the Senator from Indiana—and I agree with the Senator from Georgia that there is not—but if there were any substance at all to that shadowy argument, the bill could simply provide for the appropriation out of the General Treasury of an amount equal to the amount collected by the excess-profits tax, and avoid all question.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Precisely; and if we should impose a tax on stock dividends we would get twice as much as is contemplated would be required to meet such an appropriation.

Why all this talk about a bonus? Why this effort to put the ex-service men in the attitude of asking favors when it is a mere question of rewarding service? The greatest Irishman that ever lived, in my judgment—Henry Grattan—was a poor man, and he served in the British Parliament, where as everyone knows salaries were not paid. The people of Ireland made him up a purse, a fund, as I remember, of £50,000, which now, perhaps, would be worth more than $2,000,000 in our money. When reproached for that he said, "I hold that gift by the same title that the King holds his Crown; the people gave and I received."

Does not everybody know that Great Britain has already paid her soldiers a bonus out of our money? France has done the same thing; Italy has likewise acted. Does not everybody know that the historic fact that brought about the union between Cæsar and Pompey was that the Roman Senate refused to pay the bonus to Pompey's soldiers, and Cæsar thought it ought to be paid and he had it put through. Then when he was trying to break up the big tax dodgers and usurers they had him murdered.

The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY] alluded to the fact that we were even now in the midst of preparations for a celebration the like of which the world perhaps has never seen since a Roman triumph. The lights are being lit, the arches are being made, the monuments are being reared, the money is being spent, for what? To celebrate the victories of these very men who to-day are without work and without bread. Is it not inconsistent, Mr. President? Should we not be just before we are generous?

I warn the other side now that if I wanted to play politics, and wanted to give them the advice of a Mephistopheles, I would tell them to go right ahead and keep on doing what they are doing. Just keep right ahead. There was a time when one duke in England named 11 men in the House of Commons. There was a time when another duke named half a dozen. There was a time when a seat in the House of Commons had its price on the market, like a stock or a bond. Whether or not we have a modern adaptation of that system I do not know, but this I do know: The endurance of the American people has its limit, and that limit is rapidly being reached. They reached it under John Adams, and they put in Thomas Jefferson. They reached it under the congressional caucus, and they put in Andrew Jackson. They will reach it again rather than bear intolerable insults and a continuance of intolerable wrongs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] to the amendment of the committee on page 128 of the bill.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Harris	McLean	Sheppard
Brandegee	Heflin	McNary	Simmons
Broussard	Hitchcock	Moses	Smoot
Calder	Jones, N. Mex.	Nelson	Stanley
Cameron	Jones, Wash.	New	Sutherland
Capper	Kendrick	Newberry	Swanson
Caraway	Kenyon	Nicholson	Trammell
Curtis	Keyes	Norris	Underwood
Dial	King	Oddie	Wadsworth
Edge	La Follette	Overman	Walsh, Mass.
Fernald	Lenroot	Penrose	Warren
Fletcher	Lodge	Phipps	Watson, Ga.
Frelinghuysen	McCumber	Poindexter	Watson, Ind.
Gerry	McKellar	Pomerene	Willis
Hale	McKinley	Reed

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-nine Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the pending amendment was offered by myself, on page 129, line 3, after the word "within" to insert "China or." As this legislation will be before the Senate, and a bill for a similar purpose has been reported from the Judiciary Committee, being Order of Business No. 262, I think it would be better to withdraw this amendment at this time; and I ask that that be done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. May the Chair inquire just what amendment or amendments the Senator desires to withdraw?

Mr. SMOOT. The pending amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The pending amendment is on page 129, line 3, after the word "within" to insert "China or."

Mr. SMOOT. I ask to withdraw that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SIMMONS. What about the title?

Mr. SMOOT. I will take that up later.

I now ask unanimous consent for the reconsideration of the vote by which an amendment was adopted on page 128, line 17, inserting the words "China or."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. SMOOT. The amendment on line 16, striking out "Retroactive exemption of," I do not want disturbed.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That is to say, the retroactive part is stricken out?

Mr. SMOOT. I want that to remain stricken out.

Mr. President, I now ask that the amendment proposing to insert "China or" on line 17, page 128, be rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to that course? The Chair hears none, and that amendment will be rejected; and the subhead, as amended, will be agreed to.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, to perfect the committee amendment I offer the following amendment on page 129, after line 15: Insert a new subdivision, to read as follows:

(b) Notwithstanding the provisions of subdivision (a), there shall be included in gross income under this act and under the revenue act of 1918 all amounts received by such citizen or corporation within the United States, whether derived from sources within or without the United States.

I wish to say in reference to this proposed amendment, and as an explanation thereof, that I think the amendment of the committee possibly merited to some extent the criticism that while under the British law a British corporation doing business in the Philippine Islands would be exempt from taxation upon the profits made in the Philippine Islands provided the profits arising therefrom were not paid back to the home company in Great Britain, if the profits were received in Great Britain they would be subject to the tax. In that respect the situation with regard to the British corporation differed from the amendment offered by the committee, which continued the exemption even though the funds which were received from business in the Philippine Islands or in China or in any foreign country afterwards came back into the possession of the home company in the United States.

To avoid this and to place the American corporation in virtually the same position as the British or French corporation, and to obviate the criticisms that were made on the floor as to that feature of the amendment, I am offering this curative proposition.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am not sure whether I comprehend the full import of the Senator's amendment. When we take into account the provisions found on page 69 and page 96, which deal with corporations and individuals engaged in business or who may reside in the United States, or where the United States is the principal place of business of the corporation and they are doing business in the Philippine Islands, and exemptions and deductions are allowed under those provisions on pages 69 and 96, may I inquire of the Senator whether there is any necessity for the amendment just offered by him?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; because if we adopt this amendment we will allow them the exemptions on the business done in a foreign country even though the profits of that business are returned to this country, and that is the only purpose of this amendment. It is to perfect the proposed committee amendment to conform to the ideas of those who say that we ought not to grant to the American trader any greater rights than the British or French trader would have in doing business in a foreign country.

Mr. KING. Let me see if I understand the effect of this amendment. If an American is engaged in trade in the Philippine Islands or a corporation organized under the laws of any State of the Union is engaged in business in the Philippine Islands——

Mr. McCUMBER. Eighty per cent of whose profits are derived from business there and at least 50 per cent of whose business is conducted there, which brings it into the class of a foreign trader, and with that explanation the Senator can go on.

Mr. KING. Whatever taxes are imposed in the Philippine Islands would be deducted from the taxes imposed in the United States?

Mr. McCUMBER. No; that is not the purpose.

Mr. KING. Would not that be the fair way?

Mr. McCUMBER. No; I think not. This is under the heading of what shall be included in gross returns. Section 262 (a), page 128, reads:

That in the case of citizens of the United States or domestic corporations, satisfying the following conditions, gross income under the revenue act of 1918, as in force prior to the passage of this act, means only gross income from sources within the United States.

That includes all of the gross income from service without the United States. Then it provides if 80 per cent or more of the gross income of such citizens or domestic corporations is received from outside the United States, and if 50 per cent or more of the gross income over such period was derived from the active conduct of business outside the United States. This is to prevent that limitation going to the extent of freeing the American corporation or citizen from including the income from this foreign business if the income is received by him in the United States, which makes it practically the same as I understand the British law to be.

Mr. KING. The purpose is to give the American trader the same rights and advantages, as far as taxes are concerned, in the Philippines as the British or French trader, or any other national, might have?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; and it would prevent his having any greater rights by reason of the money coming into the United States.

Mr. KING. What does the Senator say with respect to the provision which seeks to make this retroactive and to exempt from taxation——

Mr. McCUMBER. That is another feature of the bill which I wish to consider by itself. That we undoubtedly will want a separate vote upon. I am simply correcting what I consider to be an error.

Mr. KING. As some Senators have come into the Chamber since the amendment was offered, may I trespass upon the patience of the Senators to have the amendment read again?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; let it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 129, after line 15, insert:

(b) Notwithstanding the provisions of subdivision (a) there shall be included in gross income under this act and under the revenue act of 1918 all amounts received by such citizen or corporation within the United States whether derived from sources within or without the United States.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I would like to direct the attention of the Senate for a few minutes to the significance of the passage of a general revenue bill at this time.

Mr. McCUMBER. Let me ask the Senator if he would object, if no one else wishes to argue this proposition, to taking a vote at this time upon the amendment?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. We can get a vote later just as well as now.

Mr. McCUMBER. Very well.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. This is the fiscal year 1922, which began on the 1st of last July, and will end on the last day of next June, when the fiscal year 1923 will begin.

This bill as reported from the committee does not affect in any degree the revenues to be derived under existing law between now and the 1st of January; in other words, this bill if enacted into law as the committee now presents it to the Senate would not affect the revenues or the taxes of anybody until after the 1st of next January. It is, in truth and effect, legislation designed primarily for the purpose of affecting the revenues for the fiscal year 1923, beginning July 1, 1922.

I desire to call attention to the fact that the Government of the United States, including the Congress and the President, have decided to make a very radical departure from the old method of providing revenues from which to defray the expenses of the Government. Last spring we had under consideration a budget bill. It was finally approved by the President on June 10 this year.

The passage of that legislation was considered by a great many people of the country a remarkable achievement. It was referred to by the President of the United States last September in a letter addressed by the President to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. McCORMICK], in which he detailed the wonderful achievements of the Congress of the United States under this Republican administration. In that letter the President referred to the budget in very laudatory terms. With respect to that bill he said:

We shall be greatly aided in a policy of progressively reducing expenditure by the budget law, Republican in origin, design, enactment, and execution. It was the first of a series of measures placed on the statute books at the present extra session of Congress, but I do not hesitate to say that in ordinary times it alone would have been considered a highly creditable chief product of a year's legislative program.

This budget law, which received the approval of the President of the United States on June 10, was looked forward to as an advanced step toward economy in public expenditure, and toward a more systematic method of raising the revenues and estimating the amounts which would be required. It is referred to in that statement of the President as a matter Republican in its initiation, design, and so on, and as a great achievement.

I believe that it was first proposed to the Congress of the United States by the ex-President who is now Chief Justice of the United States. Finally, in the last Congress, a special committee was created for the purpose of devising a budget bill. There were several Members of the House and several Members of the Senate appointed upon that joint committee, and I was honored with a position on it.

We framed a budget bill, having in mind certain definite objects to be accomplished. It was considered that if its provisions were carried out in the spirit in which they would be enacted by the Congress, there would be a sane way in which the Congress of the United States might act regarding just such legislation as is now pending before us, and that law provided a very definite method of procedure.

Title II of that act provides:

SEC. 201. The President shall transmit to Congress on the first day of each regular session the budget, which shall set forth in summary and in detail:

(a) Estimates of the expenditures and appropriations necessary, in his judgment, for the support of the Government for the ensuing fiscal year—

Mark the language—

Estimates of the expenditures and appropriations necessary in his judgment for the support of the Government for the ensuing fiscal year, except that the estimates for such year for the legislative branch of the Government and the Supreme Court of the United States, shall be transmitted to the President on or before October 15 of each year, and shall be included by him in the budget without revision.

(b) His estimates of the receipts of the Government during the ensuing fiscal year, under (1) laws existing at the time the budget is transmitted and also (2) under the revenue proposals, if any, contained in the budget.

(c) The expenditures and receipts of the Government during the last completed fiscal year.

(d) Estimates of the expenditures and receipts of the Government during the fiscal year in progress.

(e) The amount of annual, permanent, or other appropriations, including balances of appropriations for prior fiscal years, available for expenditure during the fiscal year in progress, as of November 1 of such year.

(f) Balanced statements of (1) the condition of the Treasury at the end of the last completed fiscal year, (2) the estimated condition of the Treasury at the end of the fiscal year in progress, and (3) the estimated condition of the Treasury at the end of the ensuing fiscal year if the financial proposals contained in the budget are adopted.

SEC. 202. (a) If the estimated receipts for the ensuing fiscal year contained in the budget, on the basis of laws existing at the time the budget is transmitted, plus the estimated amounts in the Treasury at the close of the fiscal year in progress, available for expenditure in the ensuing fiscal year, are less than the estimated expenditures for the ensuing fiscal year contained in the budget, the President in the budget shall make recommendations to Congress for new taxes, loans, or other appropriate action to meet the estimated deficiency.

SEC. 205. The President, in addition to the budget, shall transmit to Congress on the first Monday in December, 1921, for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, only, an alternative budget, which shall be prepared in such form and amounts and according to such system of classification and itemization as is, in his opinion, most appropriate, with such explanatory notes and tables as may be necessary to show where the various items embraced in the budget are contained in such alternative budget.

SEC. 206. No estimate or request for an appropriation and no request for an increase in an item of any such estimate or request, and no recommendation as to how the revenue needs of the Government should be met, shall be submitted to Congress or any committee thereof by any officer or employee of any department or establishment unless at the request of either House of Congress.

In section 209 we find that—

The bureau—

That is, the Bureau of the Budget—

when directed by the President, shall make a detailed study of the departments and establishments for the purpose of enabling the President to determine what changes (with a view of securing greater economy and efficiency in the conduct of the public service) should be made in (1) the existing organization, activities, and methods of business of such departments or establishments, (2) the appropriations therefor, (3) the assignment of particular activities to particular services, or (4) the regrouping of services. The results of such study shall be embodied in a report or reports to the President, who may transmit to Congress such report or reports or any part thereof with his recommendations on the matters covered thereby.

Now, those are the principal provisions of the budget bill, but it may be advisable to read just a few other paragraphs:

SEC. 210. The bureau shall prepare for the President a codification of all laws or parts of laws relating to the preparation and transmission to Congress of statements of receipts and expenditures of the Government and of estimates of appropriations. The President shall transmit the same to Congress on or before the first Monday in December, 1921, with a recommendation as to the changes which, in his opinion, should be made in such laws or parts of laws.

SEC. 212. The bureau shall, at the request of any committee of either House of Congress having jurisdiction over revenue or appropriations, furnish the committee such aid and information as it may request.

SEC. 215. The head of each department and establishment shall revise the departmental estimates and submit them to the bureau on or before September 15 of each year. In case of his failure so to do, the President shall cause to be prepared such estimates and data as are necessary to enable him to include in the budget estimates and statements in respect to the work of such department or establishment.

Now, Mr. President, after some years of consideration, after the creation of a joint committee of the two Houses of Congress, the budget law, from which I have been reading, was enacted. The President of the United States approved it, and in his letter to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCCORMICK] referred to it as a monumental achievement. I submit that the presentation of a revenue bill to the Congress of the United States at this time, while, of course, we have the right to consider it, is in direct violation of the spirit of the budget law, to which we devoted so much of our time and efforts, and to which the President has referred in such laudatory terms.

If we are going to have a budget law, as we have, if it is going to effect any reform in the expenditures of the Government now that we have it, is it not time that law should be put into operation? Only 30 days from now, on the 1st of next December, under that law the President will be required to submit to the Congress estimates for what? For the fiscal year 1923, beginning July 1, 1922, the very year which this revenue bill is designed to affect.

As I stated a while ago, the revenue bill will not go into operation until January 1, 1922, so far as affecting any of the taxes of anybody in this country or the repeal of any taxes. The estimate submitted by the majority of the Finance Committee shows that for the whole of the fiscal year 1922, operating until July 1, 1923, the only reduction contained in the proposed bill as it came from the Senate committee as against the present law will be about $133,000,000. Then I wish to inquire, in the face of the budget law which we so sincerely considered last spring, which we so solemnly discussed, and in which the President has placed so much store, why it is that in the very first piece of legislation bearing upon the subject the Congress of the United States proposes to relegate the budget bill to the scrap heap?

That is just what the pending bill means. Why should we do it? What is the purpose of doing it? Is it because any emergency exists to bring relief to the country? I say no, because it does not operate upon any of the taxpayers until after the 1st of next January.

I would like to have some member of the committee tell us why the bill comes in here at this time in defiance of the budget law which we all so solemnly enacted. I do not wish by innuendo or otherwise to suggest what the reason is, but when we consider the nature of the bill which is brought in here, when we observe after scrutinizing it that its only real effectiveness is to take off the high surtaxes and to repeal the excess-profits taxes, somebody is going to inquire whether the bill is not brought in here now for the purpose of paying campaign debts.

Mr. President, by the presentation of the revenue bill at this time we are directly violating the very system of legislation to which we devoted so much time and effort during the early stages of this special session of the Congress. Moreover, it was considered during the last Congress. Senators will all recall how during the last of the administration of President Wilson we considered the budget bill. It was really then when it was framed. We devoted our time and best efforts to it. I can see here now Senators who, along with myself, on those nights gathered together for the purpose of framing that legislation. We felt that it was going to be productive of good to the country. We thought it was going to bring about economy in expenditure. We thought it would furnish a remedy, bring about reduction in appropriations, and balance the revenues and expenditures of the Treasury. We thought it was of great good to the country. Finally in the early stages of the special session we passed the bill and it became the law, and now what are we doing? The very first time that revenue legislation is considered we are acting in absolute violation of the spirit of our own law.

Mr. President, I desire in this connection to refer to the pending bill as the closing scene in a tragedy which is being enacted by the Congress of the United States. The prologue of that tragedy was witnessed by us when there was read in this Chamber a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Mellon, to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN], the letter being dated July 2 of this year. At that time the Senate was considering the ex-service men's adjusted compensation bill. It had been considered during the previous Congress by the Committee on Finance. It had been reported to the Senate at that Congress with the unanimous approval of the members of the Finance Committee. It had been passed by the House of Representatives by a vote of nearly 3 to 1.

Finally in this Congress, in the special session, the Finance Committee reported the bill again. It came here without a dissenting voice from the Finance Committee, and by a vote of the Senate, with only four in opposition, the Senate decided to take up that bill for consideration. It was being debated from day to day. Then the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury came in, as I say, a prologue to this tragedy. Finally the time arrived when it seemed that the beneficiaries of that bill might look forward to its final enactment and to a consummation of the result which was sought by most of the Members of Congress. The President of the United States appeared and asked that it be recommitted.

On that same afternoon I uttered my protest against its recommittal. I thought I saw then the conclusion of most of this tragedy. As I sat here and listened to the words of the President of the United States, my mind went out over the country to those millions of men who were interested in the result of that legislation. I thought I could see the thousands and hundreds of thousands of young men of the land whose education had been interrupted by reason of their being called into the service of their country. I thought I could see them deprived of the means for completing their education and fitting themselves for the walks of life in order to give them a better advantage and a better opportunity in life. I thought also that I could see others of those soldiers who wanted to get litte farms or homes somewhere disappointed because the President of the United States came before the Senate and requested that the bill be recommitted. I thought I could visualize the chills of the coming winter and see those young men who had served their country suffering from cold and hunger, who would be looking forward to benefits that they would receive from the bill; but I could see them in my mind's eye suffering the pangs of disappointment as the President uttered his words.

However, Mr. President, there was one hope held out. The acting chairman of the Finance Committee [Mr. McCUMBER], on the 15th day of July, just after we had taken the vote which resulted in the recommittal of the bill, sang his swan song over the disappearance from the Senate Chamber of that great measure. He had a prepared speech; I do not know whether or not it was inspired from any other source. In that speech evidently he intended to indicate that the administration did not want the boys throughout the country to give up hope; he wanted them still to feel that their country would do justice to them; that this administration would do justice to them; and so the distinguished Senator from North Dakota used the language which I will read. He said:

> Therefore, Mr. President, while I regret that it is thought necessary to recommit this bill, and while I am unable to bring my judgment into exact agreement with that of the President and the Secretary of the Treasury as to the effect of this proposed legislation on any funding or refunding of the national obligations or debts due to the country, I have risen rather to correct an entirely erroneous impression as to what effect the action of the Senate in recommitting the bill will have on the bill itself. Several Senators have declared that it means the death of the bill. Telegrams from posts in my State indicate a like fear on the part of the beneficiaries of the bill.

I am still willing, Mr. President, to class myself among those who said at that time that it meant the death of the bill. The Senator from North Dakota continued:

> Mr. President, while I can not join the chairman of the committee in a vote to recommit the measure, let me say most earnestly and positively to every veteran of the World War that no such result will follow. The bill will not be defeated. On a yea-and-nay vote to take up this bill and make it the unfinished business the vote was 46 for to 4 against.
> This vote very accurately, in my judgment, shows the proportion of those who favor the legislation to those who oppose it, and when 46 Senators favor the enactment of a proposed measure as against only 4 who oppose it, can anyone think for a moment that those 46 will not see to it that the legislation will ultimately be enacted? What effect, then, will its recommitment have on the status of the proposed legislation? Will it delay its enactment into law?—

Mark the word "delay"—

> Will it postpone the time within which in its present form the legislation would become effective? I assume, Mr. President, that these questions are now being asked by the American soldier, and I answer both questions: The recommitment will, of course, delay the date on which the compensation bill would in all probability have become a law. The recommitment, however, will not, in my opinion, postpone the time at which the legislation proposed will become effective.
> Under the terms of the bill the cash payment and the insurance plans are to come into effect as of July 1, 1922. Long before that date the bill, in its present or amended form, will be placed upon the statute books of the country.

Mr. President, that adjusted compensation bill for the ex-service men provided that, beginning with the 1st of next July, compensation might be paid. If it is to be paid out, there must first be an appropriation, and there must also be the revenue raised with which to meet the appropriation. What is proposed in the pending bill? It is admitted by everybody that the pending revenue bill as it comes here from the Finance Committee does not contemplate the payment of a single dollar on account of any adjusted service compensation provision of any law which may follow. We read a very significant statement in the report of the majority of the Finance Committee regarding the fiscal year 1923, which I wish again to remind the Senate begins on the 1st of July, 1922. That report states:

> It is not possible to make an accurate forecast of the expenditures for the fiscal year 1923, but your committee has acted on the assumption that—with the exception of the special railroad expenditures (transportation act and Federal control) which will be nearly if not wholly completed in the fiscal year 1922—the aggregate expenditure for the fiscal year 1923 will be substantially as large as in the fiscal year 1922. The special railroad expenditures included in the 1922 estimates amount, in round figures, to $500,000,000; and the receipts from customs and miscellaneous sources for the fiscal year 1923 are estimated at $700,000,000. Deducting both amounts ($1,200,000,000) from the total estimated expenditures for 1922 ($4,034,000,000) leaves in round figures $2,835,000,000 to be supplied by internal taxes for the fiscal year 1923. The revenue bill as recommended by your committee will raise during 1923, it is estimated, $2,740,400,000. The difference or deficit of $100,000,000 can and should be avoided by savings and economies. Your committee deliberately recommends a tax program which, while providing revenue substantially sufficient to meet ordinary expenditures on the present scale, assumes that a reasonable measure of retrenchment and reduction will be accomplished.

To my mind, Mr. President, that is the formal obituary of the adjusted compensation service bill. It tells the story. The pending bill provides only for raising revenue to meet the ordinary expenses of the Government upon the present scale of expenditures, and even $100,000,000 less than that. There is no intimation from beginning to end of the report that the Congress ever intends to pass an adjusted service compensation bill. While the acting chairman of the committee, the Senator from North Dakota, extended to the ex-service men throughout the country a certain hope, I ask whether or not it has become a vain hope? Despite the numerous times the Finance Committee has met between that good day and the present hour, not one word has been said regarding the passage of such a law.

I want Senators to understand just what the pending proposed legislation means. In the haste to pass some kind of a revenue measure the Republican majority are closing this tragedy, a tragedy which affects four and a half million of the best men on earth, who were willing to go out and serve their country at the time of its greatest crisis. Are we willing this thing shall be done?

Not only that, Mr. President, but we are deliberately violating the spirit of our own law. We thought we had framed and enacted legislation which would bring about a systematic method of estimating the expenditures of the Government. We have at the present time, according to the newspaper reports, a very active and industrious Director of the Bureau of the Budget. He is supposed to be making great reforms in the public service.

Only a short month from now, under the budget law, the President must send to us the estimates of the expenditures for the fiscal year 1923. If those estimated expenditures shall exceed the revenue estimated to be raised from the operation of the present tax laws, he is then to suggest what changes should be made in those laws to increase the revenue. If the estimated revenues under existing law should exceed the estimated amount of expenditures for the fiscal year 1923 he is then to propose to us how he thinks the laws should be changed so as to raise by taxation only the requisite amount of revenue.

We have adopted this scientific plan to aid us in legislating regarding expenditures and the raising of revenue, and shall we now—and, as I believe, for the purpose primarily of reliving the wealthiest people of our country from taxation—relieve those corporations which are making excess profits from taxation under the present law and put the burden upon those who are less able to pay? If that is the purpose, I submit that the Congress should hesitate. Let us act under the budget law, and let us await the report of the President in pursuance of that budget law. He will doubtless send to us a scientific estimate of the expenditures for the next fiscal year, and then, as I understand, and with all the responsibility which that law imposes upon him, make such suggestions as he may deem wise, and we will not have to rely upon mere guesswork on the part of the Finance Committee.

In truth and in fact the Secretary of the Treasury under that law is prohibited from giving the Finance Committee any information or estimate as to what the expenditures for the next fiscal year will be. That was prohibited in the law because we felt that all these estimates should come to us supported by the responsibility of the President of the United States. It was deliberately designed that the President should be responsible for these estimates. Now we are undertaking to pass a law here in violation of that principle. If we pass this law, I submit that it is not reasonable to believe that in the next few months we are going to pass another revenue law. Then why do this thing now?

It has not been pointed out by any Member upon this floor, I believe, why this bill should be brought in at this time, except that they want primarily to remove the high surtaxes and the excess-profits tax. We have been discussing here in the last few days the effect of the removal of the excess-profits tax. Instead of relieving business, it puts an additional burden upon all business which has the least ability to bear it. It reduces the taxes of those who are making profits beyond 8 per cent. It increases the taxes of every corporation in this country which is making less than 8 per cent upon its invested capital, and increases those taxes by 50 per cent.

To-day, in the argument here, the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] called attention to the fact that these corporations are mere aggregations of stockholders. That is true, and the largest aggregations are those owning stock in corporations which are making a very low rate of income upon their invested capital. Those corporations are owned by large numbers of stockholders throughout the land; and upon that class of stockholders you propose to increase taxation 50 per cent while you are reducing taxation upon those who are making excess profits.

Mr. President, I have thought it wise to make these statements at this time so that Senators may have clearly before them just what the effect of this legislation is. I do not want to have it said by anybody hereafter that the Senate of the United States violated the spirit of the budget law unadvisedly. I want them to realize that by the passage of this revenue bill they deliberately violate and to my mind enter a denial of the statement of the President of the United States that this budget law is a law worthy of the achievements of a full session of Congress. If you think it is that kind of a law, if you agree with the President, then, I appeal to you, do not violate the spirit of it. Let us wait until we get the estimates of the President in pursuance of that law. Let us then revise our revenues according to his recommendation. Let us look over those estimates, and see whether they contain the items which we believe should go into the bill. It is barely possible, if the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] was warranted in making his statement, that the President may make an estimate for an adjusted service compensation bill. I do not believe he will, but there is a ray of hope that he may. There are four weeks of time to elapse before he must decide that tremendous question, when he must bring in his estimates. Moreover, his estimates for the Army and the Navy may be very much less than any guesswork that we now have. Under the estimates for the fiscal year 1922 we are to expend upon the Army and the Navy between eight and nine hundred millions of dollars. It may be that the President will advise a great reduction in the estimates for those two purposes, and thus enable us to lower taxation. At any rate, it will give to the Congress of the United States intelligent information. Why rush through this bill, which appears to me to be designed only for the relief of a few people in this country and to impose additional burdens upon the great masses of the people?

I sincerely trust that this thing will not be done. Moreover, this bill goes further. It is enacting a revenue law which shall provide all the revenue for the fiscal year 1923. I want to say to the ex-service men of this country that if this bill is enacted they must give up all hope.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I move to strike out, on page 129, lines 16 to 20, inclusive. I will say that that is the retroactive feature of the law. When the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] spoke to me about the retroactive feature I thought he meant in the title, but this is really the retroactive feature of section 262.

Mr. SIMMONS. I thought the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota struck that out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 129, in the committee amendment, it is proposed to strike out subdivision lettered (b), beginning with line 16, all of that line, and lines 17, 18, 19, and 20 in the following words:

(b) In case an amount of tax has been paid under the revenue act of 1918, as in force prior to the passage of this act, in excess of a tax determined with the benefit of this section, the amount of such excess shall be credited or refunded in accordance with section 252 of this act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. I now ask unanimous consent for the reconsideration of the vote by which the amendment, on line 20, page 128, was agreed to, inserting the words "this act and under."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the reconsideration? The Chair hears none, and the vote is reconsidered.

Mr. SMOOT. Now I ask that the Senate reject that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SMOOT. I also move to strike out the following words, beginning on line 20, after the word "income," down to and including the word "act," on line 21, and the comma:

Under the revenue act of 1918, as in force prior to the passage of this act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. In the committee amendment on page 128, lines 20 and 21, it is proposed to strike out the words:

Under the revenue act of 1918, as in force prior to the passage of this act—

And the comma.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any further amendments to the committee amendment?

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I should like to inquire whether subdivision "(b)" still remains as a part of the committee amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has been stricken out. The question is on the committee amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The next amendment passed over is in the excise taxes on page 197.

Mr. MCCUMBER. Mr. President, it seems to me that before we go into the excise taxes we should determine definitely the question as to the capital-stock tax, because if the capital-stock tax provision is adopted we can perhaps dispense with some of these excise taxes.

I therefore ask unanimous consent to take up the proposed amendment with regard to the capital-stock tax.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I call the attention of the Senator from North Dakota to the fact that when the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] was the pending amendment it was laid aside until section 261 was disposed of. Would it not be better to dispose of the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts at this time?

Mr. MCCUMBER. Yes; but that is an amendment to the capital-stock provision, so if we go back to the capital-stock provision the Lodge amendment will be the first matter before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from North Dakota state on what page the capital-stock tax is?

Mr. MCCUMBER. It is on page 212, and it is the amendment numbered 60.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment to the amendment, the second amendment having been offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. It will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the first paragraph, or the paragraph numbered (1), a comma and the following words:

but if the taxpayer owns at least a majority of the voting stock and at least a majority of the total number of shares of all other classes of stock of any other domestic corporation liable to the tax imposed by this section, the fair average value for the preceding year ending June 30 of the stock so owned by the taxpayer shall be deducted.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the statement was made on the floor of the Senate that the Senator from Massachusetts desired to modify that amendment in some manner. Is that the case, or is the amendment to stand as it is offered?

Mr. LODGE. No; I have not made any suggestion of that kind. That is the way I have offered it. I offered it first in a different form, making the deduction one-half. As it now stands, it provides for the deduction of the whole amount.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I presume the Senator desires to address the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. Not particularly. I can only repeat what I said before.

The purpose of the amendment which I have offered is to remove what seems to me and has always seemed to me, from the time when the provision was previously adopted, a great injustice. The object of the amendment is to eliminate the existing double or multiple taxation which now prevails in the case of certain associated corporations. The Treasury Department, I know, has recognized this injustice, but under the present language of the statute it felt powerless to prevent it.

There are different and inconsistent requirements in the laws of different States which often make it necessary for corporations operating in several States to do so partly through subsidiary corporations. For instance, in some States foreign corporations may not hold real estate, and in some cases what is required by the law of one State is forbidden by the law of another State.

The result is that an enterprise which is so fortunate as to be able to do business through one corporation is taxed only once, while an enterprise which must do business through several corporations is taxed twice or more than twice, to the extent that the value of the stock of one constituent corporation is represented by stock owned by it in another constituent corporation.

This situation, which exists in the case of most corporations whose business is widely scattered, is particularly acute in the case of public utilities, such as railroads and telephone and telegraph companies. If it be deemed desirable—and I think it is most desirable—to relieve such necessary facilities as public utilities from any extra burden of taxation, this amendment must be adopted.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], when we had this matter up the other day, cited cases where a corporation acquires the majority of the stock of another corporation for monopolistic or speculative purposes, but I believe those, from all the inquiry I have been able to make, to be trifling in number, and not to be weighed against the entirely legitimate demands of companies against which no such charge can be made. If the corporations to which the Senator from Missouri referred are acting unlawfully, they should be prosecuted under the Sherman Act or the Clayton Act. The capital-stock tax, it seems to me, is a pure question of just taxation, and double or multiple taxation is, in my judgment, not defensible.

Granting that the capital-stock tax is imposed for the privilege of doing business as a corporation, the question comes as to the fair and proper measure of the tax. The excise tax on corporations of 1909 was imposed with respect to doing business, but Congress recognized that in adopting as the basis of the tax the net income of each corporation, there should be deducted the income which it received by way of dividends from other corporations which were themselves subject to the tax. In the existing income tax statute the same deduction is allowed, and in further recognition of the principle that it is a corporate enterprise as a whole which should be taxed, and not the mere component part, without reference to their interrelations, provision is made for consolidated returns in the case of affiliated corporations.

As the tax is necessarily an excise tax imposed with respect to doing business, the holding corporation, therefore, which merely holds the stock of other corporations and does no business on its own account, is entirely free from taxes, while another holding corporation which may do a little business on its own account is taxed on the whole value of its capital stock, which may be chiefly dependent upon its ownership of stock in other corporations.

For example, a corporation whose capital stock has a fair value of $1,000,000 may own the stock of two other corporations each having a fair value of $500,000, and may do no business on its own account. Such a corporation is free from the tax. On the other hand, another corporation whose capital stock has a fair value of $1,000,000 may own stock in another corporation having a fair value of $500,000, and in another corporation having a fair value of $400,000, the remaining $100,000 of fair value of its own stock representing property with which it does business on its own account. Such a corporation would be taxed on the entire $1,000,000 unless the proposed amendment is adopted. Under the proposed amendment, and I think properly so, the basis of its tax should be the $100,000 of property which it owns in addition to the stocks of other corporations which are themselves taxed.

Mr. President, that is the case so far as I understand it. I happened to be on the committee when the present law was originally adopted, and it seemed to me very unjust then, and it appears to me not to have become more just since. I think there ought to be relief given, and I know of no other way of giving relief except to allow them to deduct for the preceding year a fair valuation of the stock owned by the taxpayer.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, the Senator from Masssachusetts [Mr. LODGE] and the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] have already explained this paragraph quite fully, and I do not intend to go into it any further. This matter was up during the consideration of the existing law, and has been discussed during the consideration of this bill, and it seems to be one of the grossest inequalities existing in our whole tax system.

If these activities could be conducted by one corporation, they would carry no taxes. The mere fact that the laws of a certain locality relating to foreign corporations holding real estate compel a business that extends all over a continent to organize different companies in different States to meet the local requirements should not incur the liability of this taxation under the existing law. It certainly could not be contemplated, and as these taxes continue and become yearly more burdensome and oppressive, taxation which could be tolerated for a while becomes intolerable. I think it is part of our duty not only to provide sufficient revenues for the Government but to correct inequalities and rank injustices where they evidently exist. The injustice and inequality are evident on the face of it. That is all I have to say.

Mr. MCCUMBER. Mr. President, supplementing what has been stated by the chairman of the committee and for the purpose of clarifying what was in the minds of the committee proposing this amendment, let us take this kind of a case: A number of business men in the State of Ohio desire to organize a manufacturing corporation, and they need a capital of $500,000. They wish to have a branch in Indiana and another branch in Illinois. They may require $300,000 in Illinois, $100,000 in Indiana, and another $100,000 in Ohio.

They issue $500,000 of stock and receive $500,000 in cash for it. Being a foreign corporation, they may not be able to do business either in Indiana or in Illinois unless they incorporate under the laws of Indiana and Illinois, and they organize a corporation in Illinois with a capital of $300,000, which takes $300,000 of the cash, and the same stockholders form another corporation in Indiana with a capital stock of $100,000, which makes $400,000, and the $100,000 in Ohio makes up the $500,000.

Without this amendment that corporation would pay a dollar for each thousand on the Ohio corporation of $500,000. It would pay also a dollar for each thousand of the $300,000 in Illinois and another dollar per thousand for each thousand in the State of Indiana, so that it would pay a corporate tax on $900,000, whereas it would have only actually invested in its stock the $500,000.

It would seem to me that there should be a remedy to meet a simple case of that character.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, this matter is very important, and as the other side of the question is to be discussed, I would like to have as full an attendance as possible. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MOSES in the chair). The Secretary will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gooding	McKellar	Simmons
Broussard	Hale	McLean	Smoot
Bursum	Harreld	McNary	Stanley
Calder	Harris	Moses	Sterling

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-seven Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I present an amendment which I have prepared in collaboration with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH]. It relates to the soldiers' bonus and proposes to pay the annual installments of the bonus from the interest derived by this country from our foreign debtors. I shall not offer it formally until the bill is in the Senate, and after the vote upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. If that amendment is agreed to I shall not offer this one at all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator wish the amendment to be received, printed, and lie on the table?

Mr. SIMMONS. That is my desire.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, however much it may be descried, the effect of the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts will practically exempt from taxation every holding company in the United States.

It is all well to talk about the necessity of organizing subsidiary companies to do business in States because of the laws of the various States. To begin with, the best we can say about that argument is that it is a proposition to perfect a device to defeat the laws of the sovereign States and to allow a company to enter those States and transact business in the form of a subsidiary company when it could not enter the States and do business if it honestly came forward and offered itself for business in such States. That is a very poor argument to advance in favor of a tax exemption.

Suppose that it is the law of Massachusetts that a corporation, in order to transact a certain kind of business in Massachusetts, shall incorporate in Massachusetts, ought not that law to be obeyed if it be constitutional? Ought the Congress of the United States to grant its aid and assistance in any way to a corporation seeking to enter the State of Massachusetts in practical defiance of its statutes? Ought we to assist a device in form for the entering of the State of Massachusetts, that device consisting in the organization of a subsidiary company and the incorporation of the subsidiary company in the State of Massachusetts? Surely the Congress can not afford to make itself a party to that sort of a fraud upon the laws of the respective States, and yet that is exactly the argument that is advanced. Of course, it is advanced in different language that sounds better than that, but that is the argument.

I said the other day and I repeat that this is an excise tax. It is a tax for the privilege of doing business in corporate form, and surely if a corporation is organized in such manner and form as to enable it to defeat the purpose of the laws of the respective States it ought to be willing to pay $1 on each $1,000 of its stock for the privilege of that sort of buccaneering.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, this does not interfere with the taxes of the States at all.

Mr. REED. I am not saying it interferes with the tax of the States.

Mr. LODGE. If we put on a tax in the State of Massachusetts or require certain taxes to be paid for the privilege of doing business there, they are paid. It only allows the parent corporation to deduct it from its taxes.

Mr. REED. I have not made that argument. The Senator was engaged in conversation I think and did not hear what I said.

Mr. LODGE. No; I was not engaged in conversation. I was endeavoring to the best of my ability to follow the argument of the Senator from Missouri, but I confess I found it very difficult.

Mr. REED. The Senator found it difficult?

Mr. LODGE. I did.

Mr. REED. I think I shall make it so plain that an ordinary man can understand it, and I know if I do that the Senator from Massachusetts can understand it.

The proposition which the Senator advances in support of his amendment is that various corporations are obliged to organize subcorporations in order that the subcorporations may enter the various States in compliance with the laws of those States and that, being taxed by the Federal Government upon the capital stock of those subcorporations which have thus entered the States, we should exempt the parent or large corporation to the aggregate amount of the capital stock of its subsidiary corporations.

I have said that if a corporation enters the State of Massachusetts, it would not be required to pay any additional taxes to the Government, but it would only be required to pay once. If in order to defeat the laws of the State of Massachusetts, which may require a company doing business there to incorporate, or in order to defeat any other statute of the State it proceeds to the organization of subsidiary companies and thrusts a subsidiary company in when the parent company could not go, or if it did go would go under certain restrictions or penalties or taxes, then if we adopt the amendment of the Senator we will be assisting the corporation in perpetrating what is nothing more nor less than an avoidance or evasion of the laws of the State. We will assist it just that much.

Mr. LODGE. The subsidiary corporation which goes into the State of Massachusetts, of course, has to comply with the laws and obeys those laws and pay its taxes there. This has nothing to do with the State taxes.

Mr. REED. I have not said that it had anything to do with the State taxes.

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] made the argument that there were reasons frequently in different States why a corporation could not enter, and, therefore, in order to do business in such a State it was obliged to incorporate a smaller company and incorporate that company in such manner that it could do business in the State. I think that is a fair statement of the Senator's argument.

Mr. MCCUMBER. Mr. President, I know the Senator wishes to be fair. My intention was to say as clearly as I could that in some States persons could not do business as a corporation unless incorporated within the State, no matter what the business was, and, therefore, it was necessary for a corporation to reincorporate in the State in order to do business in such State as a corporation.

Mr. REED. If it reincorporates, and is in fact the same corporation, it will not, under the present law, be obliged to pay a single additional dollar to the Federal Treasury.

Mr. MCCUMBER. It could not be the same corporation if it reincorporated, because it would have to be a new corporation under the laws of that State.

Mr. REED. There is no State in the Union, as far as I know, that goes further than to compel the corporation doing business in the State to file its articles of incorporation and thus subject itself to the laws of the State in so far as suits are concerned and in so far as its property held within the State is concerned. I know of no instance where a State has gone further, except that States may have laws against trusts and combinations and they may be of such a character that a particular corporation is barred from that State because of the character of its business. In that event, undoubtedly there have been instances where there have been subsidiary corporations organized and the laws of that State defeated by that device; but there is nothing in the claim—and I assert it boldly—that if a railroad company, for instance, organized in the State of Illinois, having lines running through the State of Missouri, and compelled to file its articles of incorporation in the State of Missouri, would thereupon be treated by the Federal authorities as two corporations and compelled to pay two taxes. It is one corporation, treated as one corporation, with its articles filed with the secretaries of state of the various States of the Union.

There is no duplication of that kind under the present law, and I challenge the production of a statement from the Treasury Department to that effect. The kind of duplication that the bill will reach is a very different thing. The bill exempts every holding company of the United States in whole or in part from paying its taxes. As I said a moment ago, I think I can demonstrate by a very simple illustration that it will exempt from taxation the actual capital invested in business.

Let us take an illustration. Here are 10 companies with $2,000,000 capital each, doing business in rivalry with each other, a very wholesome condition. A gentleman comes along with a scheme to combine them under one control. He organizes a holding company with $20,000,000 of capital. He acquires, I will say, 50 per cent—it would have to be a fraction over that, 51 per cent, under the bill—of the stock of the 10 independent companies. He puts that stock, which is a little over $10,000,000, into his holding company as the assets of the holding company. He has paid into the holding company nearly $10,000,000 of fresh capital.

We come now under the terms of the pending bill to levy a tax. It is ascertained that there are paid in taxes upon the 10 subsidiary companies an amount which is equal to 1 per cent on their total capital stock, which is $20,000,000. The holding company that has 51 per cent of that stock, and has in addition to that nearly $10,000,000 of cash, comes to pay its taxes. It pleads under the terms of this amendment that it is entitled to deduct from the tax on its capital stock the amount of tax paid by the 10 subsidiary companies. The capital stock of the subsidiaries being $20,000,000 and the stock of the holding company being $20,000,000, the stock of the holding company pays no tax whatever, although it controls $20,000,000 of the stock of other companies and although it has nearly $10,000,000 in cash capital in its own coffers.

Let those of us who want to consider this measure read the amendment together, and I put it to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] if what I have just stated is not true, if he will follow my reading of the amendment. I will again read the language of his amendment, but will first read the context:

(1) Every domestic corporation shall pay annually a special excise tax with respect to carrying on or doing business equivalent to $1 for each $1,000 of so much of the fair average value of its capital stock for the preceding year ending June 30 as is in excess of $5,000. In estimating the value of capital stock the surplus and undivided profits shall be included.

Now, that is the tax that is to be levied, and under it—I am going back to my illustration—10 corporations, each with $2,000,000 of capital stock, are now about to be taken over by a company with $20,000,000 of capital stock, and 51 per cent of the $20,000,000 of capital stock of the subsidiary companies is to be put in the treasury of the new holding company. I now read the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts:

But if the taxpayer—

This is the holding company—

owns at least a majority of the voting stock and at least a majority of the total number of shares of all other classes of stock of any other domestic corporation liable to the tax imposed by this section, the fair average value for the preceding year ending June 30 of the stock so owned by the taxpayer shall be deducted.

In simple language the proposition is that there is to be deducted from the stock of the holding company the taxes which have been paid upon the stock of the subsidiary companies. The subsidiary companies have $20,000,000 of stock; the holding company has $20,000,000 of stock; the holding company only has 51 per cent of the stock of the subsidiary company in its treasury. The result is that when the subsidiary companies have paid their tax it is credited to the tax upon the holding company, and that company pays no taxes because there is $20,000,000 of stock in each instance.

But what has happened? First, a new corporation has been formed. Second, that new corporation has as its assets only a little over $10,000,000 of the stock of the subsidiary companies. It may have sold its stock and acquired a capital of nearly $10,000,000 of cash. With that cash it may have entered into business and be not only a holding company but a producing company.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me to interrupt him, in that case the holding company would pay taxes on every dollar of its assets.

Mr. REED. Oh, no; it does not pay taxes upon assets; it pays taxes on the value of the capital stock.

Mr. LODGE. It would pay taxes on every dollar on which it did business and which was not included in the stock of the subsidiaries.

Mr. REED. It is not so provided by the Senator's amendment.

Mr. LODGE. But that is the fact under my amendment.

Mr. REED. Oh, no; the Senator from Massachusetts is mistaken.

Mr. LODGE. I think not.

Mr. REED. I beg to differ with the Senator from Massachusetts, with all due respect.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Missouri again read the amendment in order that Senators may understand it? It seems to me that the tax would be paid on the value of the amount of stock held instead of on the entire capital stock.

Mr. REED. The amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts reads—

> But if the taxpayer owns at least a majority of the voting stock—

There are some other qualifications and I will read them, though they do not need to be considered so far as the point we have in mind is concerned. The amendment continues—> and at least a majority of the total number of shares of all other classes of stock of any other domestic corporation liable to the tax imposed by this section, the fair average value for the preceding year ending June 30 of the stock so owned by the taxpayer shall be deducted,

Mr. McCUMBER. Of course, Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, if the holding company held but 51 per cent it could get a deduction for only 51 per cent of the stock and not all of the stock of the subsidiary corporation.

Mr. REED. That is correct.

Mr. McCUMBER. And the subsidiary corporation would pay a tax on the entire amount of its stock.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, so far as the phraseology of the provision is concerned, I was incorrect in my first statement. I will inquire if it has been changed since offered? Is the language as originally offered?

Mr. LODGE. It is now in exactly the form in which it was first offered and as it appeared printed in the RECORD of Friday last.

Mr. REED. Very well. I was under a misconception as to the last line of the amendment, and I frankly state that fact, as I ought to do; but, Mr. President, regardless of that—which I consider is a matter of minor importance—we are here presented with a scheme for the taxation of the right to do business in corporate form, and we are asked now to exempt from such taxation those corporations which hold stock of other corporations to the value of that stock; in other words, we are asked to exempt the holding company from the greater part of its taxes.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. SWANSON. To what extent would the amendment, if adopted, legalize what was declared to be illegal in the Northern Securities case? Would it indirectly legalize the holding company that was declared illegal in that case?

Mr. REED. I think that it would only legalize it in this sense: For illustration, it used to be claimed by our prohibition friends that when the Government collected a license tax on the manufacture or sale of liquor it legalized its sale even in prohibition States. I never thought it amounted to a legalization; it meant a recognition, and this amendment means a recognition.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, before the Senator takes up another line of argument, will he yield to me for a moment?

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. KING. A number of years ago, as I now recall, although the facts are not very clear, when the laws of some of the States were a little narrower—and I think properly so, because they have gone too far in the liberality of their incorporation laws in the rights granted to corporations—one corporation could not engage, say, in mining and irrigation at the same time. The stockholders of a company desired to engage in mining, and in order to engage in mining, it being mining of a hydraulic character, they had to have water, but under the laws of the State they were not permitted to engage in mining and in irrigation at the same time. So two corporations were formed, one to carry on irrigation work and the other to engage in mining. Then a holding company was formed. The stockholders of the two companies were the same as those of the holding company; in other words, there was an identity of stockholders. Under the pending amendment, how would three corporations of that character be treated? I fear I have not made the question very clear, but perhaps the Senator can understand it.

Mr. REED. Under the amendment, the small corporation—to begin with the small corporation—would pay its taxes upon its capital stock. Then, if that capital stock was all in the treasury of a holding company, and the holding company's assets were altogether of that kind of stock, the holding company would not have to pay any taxes at all.

Mr. KING. The assets of the holding company were wholly of that character.

Mr. REED. If only 51 per cent of the stock of the subsidiary company was owned by the holding company, then the 51 per cent of the stock which it held in its assets would be deducted. In that respect I was wrong in my first statement. Under this amendment, however, there is no question about the fact that a holding company can be organized and can take over all of the stock of 20 or 30 other companies, and when they have paid their capital-stock tax the holding company will escape taxes altogether. As to that there can be no dispute. A holding company can be organized for a holding company and still, again, a holding company can be organized for the holding company of the holding company. That is a device that has been actually employed in our country.

Let us state this amendment in plain, brutal language. It is calculated and intended to exempt all the great combinations of this country from a part of their taxes by allowing them to credit as against the taxes they pay for the privilege of doing business as a holding company the taxes that have been paid by their subsidiaries upon their corporate-stock tax. That is all there is in this amendment. Let us see just how it would operate. It will be worth some millions of dollars to the Steel Trust, and some millions of dollars to the Standard Oil Co., and some millions of dollars to the American Tobacco Co., and some millions of dollars to the General Motors Co., and it will not be worth one dollar to any individual man in the United States unless he is interested in some such concern.

Let us take the American Tobacco Co. It has outstanding capital stock, common and preferred, of $142,000,000, in round figures. It controls, as a subsidiary, the American Cigar Co., with a capital of $25,000,000 and a surplus of nearly $10 000,000. It controls the Mendel Co., with a capital of $8,124,000 and a large surplus. It controls an almost infinite number of smaller concerns—cigar companies, cigarette companies, cigar-box and paper companies, chains of retail stores, and so forth.

It has spread itself over the country through these subsidiary organizations, so that it is almost like a spider's web, reaching into every community of the land. I have not the slightest doubt in the world that under the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts the American Tobacco Co., the parent concern, the boss of it all, will escape taxation entirely for the privilege of being a great monopoly and having this great issue of stock. Have we grown so tender of these great concerns that we propose to aid them by exempting them from the ordinary excise tax which other corporations pay on their capital stock?

Let me see if I can find the Bell Telephone Co.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Before the Senator leaves the American Tobacco Co., may I just give him these facts with respect to it?

The trust controls 85 per cent of the smoking tobacco manufactured in the United States; 85 per cent of plug tobacco, fine cut, and cigarettes; 90 per cent of snuff; 95 per cent of small cigars; and about 50 per cent of large cigars. It controls the United Cigars Stores Co., which controls the Riker-Hegeman chain of drug stores throughout the country. The United Cigar Stores Co. owns and leases real estate in New York City assessed at $100,000,000, and about $300,000,000 throughout the United States, and operates more than 1,000 stores—a very healthy little organization.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I have not the books with me, but I want to tell you something about the American Bell Telephone Co. I do not know whether that company is now incorporated and organized exactly as it was a few years ago, but I had occasion in some litigation to go very deeply into its method of organization. It will furnish a fitting example of the way this bill will work.

There is a parent company, I think organized in New Jersey, but I am uncertain, and that is immaterial. It proceeded, through its agents, to divide this country into territory. Every large city constituted a separate unit. It then proceeded to have organized in each of these large cities a local telephone company, and that local company immediately upon its organization turned over to the Bell Telephone Co. 51 per cent of its capital stock for the alleged privilege of using the patents of the Bell Telephone Co. Thus the Bell Telephone Co. became the holder of 51 per cent of the shares of the capital stock of each of these companies organized in the various cities of the United States. The companies organized in these various cities then had assigned to them a territory which would embrace perhaps many towns and many villages. In each of these towns and villages there would be organized local companies, and 51 per cent of the stock in the local companies was turned over to the company in the large city. The entire property was built out of the 49 per cent of money that was paid in by the local people. In a word, as the parent Bell Telephone Co. controlled 51 per cent of the capital stock of the large companies organized in the cities, and as the large companies organized in the cities controlled 51 per cent of the capital stock of all the small companies organized in their territory, the parent Bell Co. in that way controlled every telephone exchange in the United States that was run under its auspices, and they embraced practically all there were.

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. PHIPPS. I should like to inquire if the Senator is informed as to whether the new issues of stock were allotted to the American Bell Telephone Co. on that same basis, pro rata, 51 per cent, without the payment of any further consideration?

Mr. REED. I do not quite catch the Senator's question.

Mr. PHIPPS. The Senator's statement is that on the formation of these companies the American Bell Telephone Co. was allotted 51 per cent of the holdings for the right and privilege of using its patents and inventions.

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. PHIPPS. The capitalizations when those various companies were formed were inconsiderable as compared with what they stand at to-day. Based on the Senator's statement, without any further explanation, one might be led to think that as the capitalizations of these various companies were increased the American Bell Telephone Co. was handed 51 per cent of such increased capitalization without consideration. Is that the Senator's understanding?

Mr. REED. My understanding is this: I speak now with reference to the company that we investigated in this particular case. The evidence in that case showed that only a very small amount of capital was originally invested in the local telephone exchange; that the rates were very high; and that as fast as the money was collected it was nearly all used for extensions and betterments of the plants.

The subsidiary companies of the company of which I am now in particular speaking pursued similar methods, so that at the end of a few years they had a property in which the primary investment of money was very small, but the value of the present holdings was exceedingly large. The Bell Co. in the meantime held its 51 per cent, and gained the advantage of that arrangement.

Mr. PHIPPS. Now, Mr. President, if the Senator will yield——

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. PHIPPS. I should like to give, from personal knowledge, a statement regarding one of the affiliated companies which covers a larger extent of territory than any single Bell Co. in the United States. I refer to the Mountain States Co., which covers Colorado, Wyoming, Utah, parts of Texas, and goes into Arizona and clear down into Nevada. I know that for at least the past 15 years—I might be safe in extending that one or two years, but I will say for 15 years—whenever the business of that company required additional capital, notice was given to all of the stockholders that the stock would be allotted pro rata, based on their holdings of stock. The stock was all issued at par, paid for at 100 cents on the dollar, and the American Bell Telephone Co. paid in cash for the additional stock which it acquired, so that to-day the initial 51 per cent which may have been allotted to the American Bell Co. for the right to use its patents would be an inconsiderable amount of the total capitalization; but I do not even concede that. I very much doubt that the American Bell Co. was awarded 51 per cent of the stock of the original company, which was the Colorado Bell Telephone Co., without other consideration.

Mr. REED. How familiar is the Senator with that company? Is he a member of it, and does he know it from the inside or from the outside?

Mr. PHIPPS. I know it from the inside. I may have been a director at one time. I have been a stockholder for many years, and I know how the stock has been allotted. My stock is not a considerable amount. I hold no brief for the American Bell Telephone Co.——

Mr. REED. Oh, no; I did not mean to intimate that.

Mr. PHIPPS. Nor even for the Mountain States Co. It is something that I might buy to-day and sell to-morrow, so far as that is concerned; but I know that the Senator does not want to leave the impression in the minds of Senators that every time an increase of capital stock is made by any one of these subsidiary companies of the American Bell Telephone Co. 51 per cent of that increase is turned over to the treasury of the American Bell Telephone Co. without consideration.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, that is not necessary. I want the Senator to understand that when I ask my questions there is no thought in my mind reflecting upon him. If a Senator has outside information in regard to a company, it is quite different from information he would get from the inside.

Mr. PHIPPS. I did not take the Senator's question as a reflection. My information is intimate.

Mr. REED. If the American Bell Telephone Co. owns originally 51 per cent of the stock of one of these subsidiary companies, and that subsidiary company proceeds to organize subsidiaries to it, and those other companies build new plants, nevertheless the control is still held by the company which owns the original stock, unless there is a new issue of stock, in which event it would either have to buy new stock or receive new stock as a gift, or it would cease to be the majority holder. I grant that. Mr. President, I do not know what has been going on in the Mountain States. I know what went on in Missouri, for we took testimony for two weeks in a lawsuit and demonstrated the situation to be exactly as I have told the Senate.

We demonstrated, in addition to that, that the Bell Telephone Co., through its majority control, was exacting from the subsidiary companies for the use of its various devices royalties which were simply plain, unadulterated, unmitigated robbery; that it was exacting as much as $3 a year royalty for the right to use one of those little instruments which you put to your ear, a transmitter, when a better apparatus could be bought from an outside company for less than the annual rental.

Mr. PHIPPS. Of course, I have no desire to question the Senator's knowledge of the local company which he mentions.

Mr. REED. We took the books of that company; we had them examined by probably the greatest expert then living, and finally we got the key to those books and found where they had set aside the money with which to bribe councils and legislatures, and we filed those papers in court and they are in court now, where they are accessible. So I know what I am talking about when I speak of that company.

But suppose, Mr. President, that they had put in new capital in order to keep their 51 per cent. Let us apply that to this particular case. This great company, which enjoys this enormous privilege, and whose assets consist largely of the capital stock of subsidiaries, by this bill will be relieved of all the taxes added together which have been paid by its subsidiaries, and if that capital stock shall equal in amount and value in the market the capital stock of the parent company the parent company will pay no capital stock tax. Yet it has the corporate privilege of existing in a form so that it can control a multitude of smaller corporations, and it makes immense sums of money by virtue of that control. Should it not pay an excise tax for that, if a man must pay an excise tax on a little $10,000 corporation which he has organized for the purpose of running a grocery store? It is the privilege of existing in that form which we are taxing, and this capital-stock tax is the only thing which to-day reaches the great overcapitalized corporations and compels them to pay upon their swollen capital.

We have been told here, in argument after argument, that the reason we should take off the excess-profits tax is because it does not reach the great corporations that are so overcapitalized that they make no excess profits, because excess profits are estimated upon capital, and now you propose to take off the only tax that is levied upon them and reaches their excess profits.

You can drive through if you wish; you have the votes and you have the power; but I intend to utter my protest.

Let us take the Rock Island holding companies. There never was a transaction in the United States, probably, more fraught with damage to good and honest railroad properties than the organization of the chain of Rock Island holding companies. Yet I have not the slightest doubt, after all the stock jobbing had been worked out, after that stock had been unloaded on the people and had been depreciated in value by the most scandalous kind of speculation, that the stock of the subsidiary companies could be added together and reach an aggregate which would enable them to escape all taxes upon those holding companies.

You have been standing here arguing now for two weeks that the reason we should take off the excess-profits tax was because of the great capital of those companies, which pay no excess-profits tax because they have a great capital, and now it is proposed to take the tax off that capital stock.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll, the Senator from Missouri having yielded the floor for that purpose.

Mr. REED. I did not yield it at all. A Senator can rise at any time to suggest the absence of a quorum without the Senator on the floor yielding. Of course I did not yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator not having yielded for that purpose, the roll will not be called. The Senator from Missouri will proceed in order.

Mr. REED. I do not understand the ruling of the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair asked if the Senator from Missouri yielded for the purpose of the calling of a quorum, and the Senator having said that he did not the roll will not be called. So the Senator from Missouri retains the floor.

Mr. REED. I do not care to discuss the question, because it is not very material; but under the custom of the Senate a Senator can rise at any time and suggest the question of the want of a quorum. We do not want to depart from that rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. However, if business has not intervened——

Mr. REED. If that is the point, that is a different question.

Mr. LODGE. The point of no quorum is a point of order and can be made at any time. It does not take the Senator occupying the floor from the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gooding	McKinley	Shortridge
Borah	Hale	McLean	Simmons
Brandegee	Harreld	McNary	Smoot
Broussard	Harris	Moses	Stanley
Bursum	Heflin	New	Sutherland

Gerry	McKellar	Sheppard

Mr. TRAMMELL. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. FLETCHER] is temporarily absent from the Chamber on account of illness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-five Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I have no desire to prolong the discussion of this matter. I wish to have Senators understand the proposition. It simply means to exempt holding companies from taxation. The estimate of the expert of the Treasury I understand is that it will take $20,000,000 out of the public revenues. We lose that much money. It will be saved practically exclusively to the concerns that have enormous capital. So far as I am concerned if the Senate wishes to do that I shall not delay its action. I could proceed at great length in order to illustrate the question by the different companies, but I am willing we shall vote.

Mr. LODGE. I did not understand the Senator's proposition.

Mr. REED. I say that as far as I am concerned I am willing to proceed to a vote. I do not know whether other Senators desire to speak or not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] to the amendment offered by the committee.

Mr. REED. On that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I am going to insist on a record vote on this question if I have to stand here and talk all night.

Mr. PENROSE. That will not be difficult for the Senator to do.

Mr. REED. But it would be difficult for the Senator from Pennsylvania to listen.

Mr. PENROSE. It would.

Mr. REED. And it certainly would be very difficult for the Senator to be polite under any circumstances. So far as I am concerned I am growing just a little weary of standing insults from the chairman of the committee in charge of the bill. He has not hesitated here or in the committee to pursue that course of conduct. However, I wish to be polite to him, as I do to any gentleman. I wish to have a record vote upon this and I desire to know why the Senate is not willing to give us a record vote.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator from Missouri takes this much to heart and I do not blame him. I wish to tell him and to tell the Senate that there are others on this side of the Chamber who take some things to heart. Only three days ago the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] offered an amendment which proposed that we should collect the interest from the Governments that owe the United States much money. On that question some Democrats refused to give us a yea-and-nay vote. But one Republican would help us try to get a yea-and-nay vote.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. LODGE. I am perfectly willing to have a record vote. I will do anything to facilitate business. I think probably the quickest way will be to give the Senator the vote he desires, and therefore I ask that there shall be a yea and nay vote.

The yeas and nays were ordered and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. TRAMMELL (when Mr. FLETCHER'S name was called). I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. FLETCHER] is absent from the Senate on account of a temporary indisposition. He is paired with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL]. If my colleague were present he would vote "nay."

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] to the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] and vote "yea."

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] and vote "yea."

Mr. PENROSE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]. I am informed that he is absent. I transfer that pair to my colleague [Mr. CROW], who is absent and who would, if present, vote "yea." I vote "yea."

Mr. SIMMONS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] who is absent. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] and vote "nay."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. TRAMMELL (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT]. In his absence I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HALE. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] to the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] and vote "yea."

Mr. McLEAN (after having voted in the affirmative). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] to the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. WELLER] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. EDGE (after having voted in the affirmative). I transfer my general pair with the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] to the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I wish to announce that the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] is necessarily absent. He is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS]. I am authorized to announce that if the Senator from Mississippi were present he would vote "nay."

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] to the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. STANFIELD] and vote "nay."

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS];

The junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL];

The senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL] with the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER]; and

The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH].

The result was announced—yeas 32, nays 30, as follows:

YEAS—32.

Brandegee	France	McCumber	Oddie
Bursum	Frelinghuysen	McKinley	Penrose
Calder	Gooding	McLean	Phipps

So Mr. LODGE's amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. REED. I reserve this proposition for a separate vote in the Senate.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. I will say to the Senator from Tennessee that I have an amendment applying to this particular section which I should very much like to call up now.

Mr. McKELLAR. Very well.

Mr. REED. I offer the amendment to the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri offers an amendment to the committee amendment, Title X, which the Secretary will state.

The READING CLERK. On page 212, after line 12, it is proposed to insert the following:

SEC. 1000. That on and after July 1, 1922, in lieu of the tax imposed by section 1000 of the revenue act of 1918—

(1) Every domestic corporation shall pay annually a special excise tax with respect to carrying on or doing business. Said tax shall be levied on each $1,000 of the fair average value of its capital stock for the preceding year ending June 30, as follows: Upon the value in excess of $5,000 and not in excess of $250,000, a tax of $1 for each $1,000; upon the value in excess of $250,000 and not in excess of $1,000,000, $2 for each $1,000; upon the value in excess of $1,000,000 and not in excess of $5,000,000, $3 for each $1,000; upon the value in excess of $5,000,000 and not in excess of $100,000,000, $4 for each $1,000; upon the value in excess of $100,000,000, $5 for each $1,000. In estimating the value of capital stock the surplus and undivided profits shall be included.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I wish very briefly to explain the amendment. Under the present law, which is to be retained as emasculated by the last amendment, a tax of $1 is laid on each $1,000 of the value of capital stock. It has been claimed here that the great corporations escape taxation because they are overcapitalized. This amendment to the amendment proposes a graduated corporation tax upon exactly the same principle as the graduated income tax; upon exactly the same principle as the graduated estate tax. It does not propose to interfere with the present rate as applied to corporations having a capital of $250,000.

Upon the capital stock in excess of $250,000 and less than $1,000,000 it is proposed to levy a tax of $2 on each $1,000 of value; upon capital stock in excess of $1,000,000 and up to $5,000,000, a tax of $3 per $1,000 of value; upon stock between $5,000,000 and $100,000,000, of $4 per $1,000 of value; and upon stock in excess of $100,000,000 a tax of $5 per $1,000 of value.

Mr. President, I wish I could lasso the "agricultural bloc" long enough to hold it in the Chamber for about five minutes. The Senators composing that so-called "bloc" made a trade in consideration of their support for the proposition to repeal the excess-profits tax by which they would have, among other things, the capital-stock tax restored, which amounted to $75,000,000. The majority have just taken $20,000,000 of that away by the last amendment. The majority are not keeping faith; they are not delivering the goods; they are giving it to you and taking it away from you again. It seems to me that ought to release you from your bargain so that you could now vote your conscience and your judgment on an amendment that applies to exactly the same proposition.

The provision as it stood before the Lodge amendment was adopted would raise $75,000,000. That has been reduced to $55,000,000 by the Lodge amendment, and every dollar of it will stay in the treasury of a big trust or a big combination of some kind. It is for the benefit of combinations and for nobody else. Only the company that holds the stock of other companies will get any benefit from it.

The amendment which I now offer will raise $217,000,000 in taxes. It will not raise quite that much with the Lodge amendment in the bill to emasculate it, but I hope that ultimately we will get that amendment out. Let us see who will pay the $217,000,000. Not a dollar of it will be paid by the corporation with only $250,000 of capital stock, except its original $1 for each $1,000. Such a corporation at the maximum will only have $245 to pay. The great mass of the business of the country that is done in honest competition is done by corporations of that size. None of them will need pay an additional dollar over the amount of the present assessment. But when we pass from the $250,000 corporation to the corporation with a million dollars of capital stock, the excess over $250,000 is assessed $2 per annum on each $1,000 of the value of the capital stock; so a corporation with a million dollars of capital stock, according to this amendment, would have to pay only $1,500 plus $245. It would not be a great burden. We are trying to raise taxes here. All taxes are burdensome, but this tax is one any corporation with $1,000,000 capital stock can well afford to pay.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, in view of the importance of the subject and the fact that we ought to have a large attendance to hear the able argument of the Senator from Missouri, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hale	McKinley	Shortridge
Borah	Harreld	McLean	Simmons
Brandegee	Harris	McNary	Smoot
Calder	Heflin	Moses	Stanley
Cameron	Hitchcock	New	Sutherland
Capper	Jones, N. Mex.	Newberry	Swanson
Caraway	Jones, Wash.	Nicholson	Townsend
Curtis	Kendrick	Norbeck	Trammell
Dial	Kenyon	Oddie	Wadsworth
Edge	King	Overman	Walsh, Mass.
Ernst	La Follette	Penrose	Warren
France	Lodge	Phipps	Watson, Ga.
Frelinghuysen	McCormick	Pomerene	Watson, Ind.
Gerry	McCumber	Reed	Willis
Gooding	McKellar	Sheppard

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-nine Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present. The question is upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED].

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I need not follow further the illustration that I was giving as to the workings of this bill. Let us see now just what the bill means to the country.

As I have said, the corporation under $250,000 pays only $1 a share; but there is a cumulative or increasing tax, a graduated tax, according to the size of the corporation, which reaches a maximum of $5 on each $1,000 of value of capital stock for corporations with a capital above $1,000,000.

Mr. President, I desire to print at the conclusion of my remarks a table showing the aggregate amount of capital stock of some of the great concerns of this country and the amount of money that such corporations would contribute to the general welfare. Let us take for illustration, however, the Standard Oil group.

The Standard Oil group under the present law will pay $2,165,800, as estimated. Under this amendment it will pay $9,684,000. These groups carry a surplus of $1,392,015,725. Do you need to be particularly tender with that institution? I am not asking for its destruction. I should like to see its dissolution. I should like to see a court decree obeyed once. A vote in favor of this amendment will put into the public coffers practically $7,000,000 paid by the Standard Oil Co. When you are raking all the earth for sources of taxation, here is one source that I point out to you.

The Anaconda Copper Co. under the present law would pay $201,000. Under the amendment I offer it would pay $898,000, if the figures are correct.

The American Tobacco Co.—which, as I said a moment ago, spreads itself over this country, takes its tribute in every hamlet, and has crushed all competition, or practically crushed it, with a remorseless and a merciless hand—will pay under the present law $201,000 and under the proposed law $898,000.

The Allied Chemical & Dye Corporation, under the present law, would pay $174,000, and under the proposed law it will pay $768,745.

The American Smelting & Refining Co. under the present law will pay $136,000 in round numbers, under the proposed law $578,000.

The American Woolen Mills Co., which is buying wool and has bought wool at the lowest prices ever paid, which is selling its goods to-day at almost war prices, which sent its lobby here to Washington at the time the Payne-Aldrich bill was written and put its own clerk in the confidential employment of the Finance Committee, will pay under the present law $111,500, and under the proposed law $448,000.

The Du Pont de Nemours Co. under the present law will pay $226,000, and under my amendment $1,023,745. I am making no attack whatever upon such a concern. I am simply insisting that those shall pay who have the money. Remembering how speedily this vast fortune has been accumulated, and that it came largely out of this war; remembering that the soldiers are denied their bonus because we have not any money, I am inquiring why it should not pay $5 on each $1,000 of the value of its capital stock to be put into the Public Treasury for the purpose of discharging public obligations? It will make a difference of nearly three-quarters of a million dollars to the Public Treasury.

The Ford Motor Co., an impoverished concern, pays under the present law taxes of this character of $199,000. Under my amendment it will pay $893,745. That would represent the profit on a few of the cars, but it is a tax that could well be paid by that exceedingly prosperous institution. Its capital to-day is $17,264,500. Its surplus is $182,877,696.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, would it interrupt the Senator if I should make an inquiry there for information?

Mr. REED. Certainly not.

Mr. KING. I observe, in the amendment which the Senator has offered, that the concluding sentence reads as follows:

> In estimating the value of capital stock the surplus and undivided profits shall be included.

May I inquire whether or not by that sentence it is meant that they shall be taxed separately, or that, in so far as they augment the market value of the stock, to that extent the market value of the stock shall not be diminished by reason of the surplus and undivided profits?

Mr. REED. It means that they shall augment it, and that is the language of the bill. I simply took the language of the law as it is now, and changed the rate of taxation. That is in the law at present; and it means, of course, that the surplus and undivided profits shall be added to the capital, and it has been so construed.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I will state to the Senator from Utah, if the Senator from Missouri will pardon me, that that is the language of the present law—that it shall be included in ascertaining the fair value of the stock.

Mr. KING. One other question, if the Senator will permit me. In lines 7 and 8 it reads:

> Said tax shall be levied on each $1,000 of the fair average value of its capital stock for the preceding year.

I apprehend that that means the market value.

Mr. REED. That is the language of the present law, and I did not change it. It has been construed, I presume, to mean market value where there is market value, and where there is no market value they have to otherwise ascertain it.

Mr. SIMMONS. The present law expressly provides that the value of the stock shall be the fair market value.

Mr. REED. Let us take the General Electric Co. It has a capital stock of $164,000,000 and a surplus of $70,000,000. Under the present law its taxes would be $214,000; under my amendment, $1,063,745.

Why not? Why should not my friends on the other side of the aisle, who insist upon an excise tax on corporations, join in making these great concerns pay this small stipend of $5 on a thousand dollars of value for the right to do business in their great corporate, if not their monopoly, form?

The General Motors Co. has a capital stock of $303,955,000 and a surplus of over $121,000,000. Its tax under the present law is $425,000, and under my amendment $2,118,000. When we are taxing everything from the cradle to the grave, why should not these great combinations be compelled to pay a just tribute? The General Motors Co. was an attempt to monopolize the automobile industry with an absolutely conscienceless cruelty. They proceeded to destroy smaller concerns and force them to turn their property over to this institution. If the institution itself was not guilty, then those who organized it and controlled it, or some of them, were parties to these destructive tactics to which I have referred. Out of that it has made an immense sum of money, and it is able to command this enoormous capital and enormous surplus. Why should it not pay this moderate tax?

The National Biscuit Co. has a capital stock of $54,000,000, a surplus of $21,000,000; its tax under the present law is $26,000, and under the proposed amendment it would be $293,000.

The Sinclair Oil Co. has an outstanding capital stock of $192,478,000 and a surplus of $34,624,000. Its tax under the present law would be $227,000, and under my amendment would be $1,028,000. It is rapidly approaching the proportions the Standard Oil had a few years ago. Why should it not pay?

The Texas Oil Co. has a capital of $143,000,000, a surplus of $83,342,000; its tax under the present law is $226,000, and under the proposed amendment would be $1,023,000.

Mr. President, I desire to print a table which will give further figures, but I want to call attention to the United States Steel group. Senators on the other side have been telling us that that group was overcapitalized. They have insisted that they would not tax the profits on the ground they could not reach this concern, because its capital was so great that excess profits would not accrue. That group, Mr. President, is capitalized as follows:

The United States Steel has an outstanding capital stock of $868,583,600, with a surplus of $664,353,805. Its tax under the present law is $1,332,000, and under my amendment would be $7,568,745. I wish my friends of the agricultural group, if they are represented here this afternoon, would ponder those figures.

The Bethlehem Steel Corporation, a subsidiary of the United States Steel, and one of the companies which I presume will add its capital stock tax together and have it subscribed by the great parent company under the Lodge amendment, has a capital of $105,000,000 and a surplus of $80,000,000, dropping the odd figures. The tax under the present law is $185,800, and the tax under my amendment would be $823,745.

Mr. PENROSE. It has no connection whatever with the United States Steel Corporation.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, it is listed as one of the United States Steel group in Poor's Manual.

Mr. PENROSE. It never was so listed, and I challenge the Senator to produce the evidence. The companies are situated in different parts of the country and have no possible connection. However, let it go.

Mr. STANLEY. What company is that?

Mr. REED. The Bethlehem Steel. I have had these tables prepared from Poor's Manual and the other industrial authorities, and I think they are absolutely correct. If there is anything wrong about them, I shall be glad to have them corrected.

The Midvale Steel Co. has a capital stock of $164,000,000, a surplus of $64,000,000; under the present law it is taxed $228,000 and under my proposition would be taxed $1,033,000.

The Cambria Steel Co. has a capital of $53,000,000 and a surplus of $74,000,000. The tax under the present law is $127,000 and the tax under my amendment would be $533,000.

The Replogle Steel Co. has an outstanding capital stock of $12,000,000 and no declared surplus.

The Republic Iron & Steel Co. has a capital stock of $75,000,000 and a surplus of $57,000,000.

In a word, this great group under the present law will pay $2,018,900 of taxes and under my amendment would pay $10,560,070 of taxes, and the plea, I repeat, which has been made on the floor of the Senate for two weeks against an excess-profits tax was that these great concerns were escaping taxation on all profits above the normal, because they were so heavily capitalized, and now I bring Senators a measure which will compel these companies to pay some small proportion of what they ought to pay.

It is understood that there will be relieved of excess profits all these great and small institutions, and now we will have a chance to vote on whether, at least upon their capital stock, we will tax them a fair amount.

Mr. President, of course it would have a tendency to drive water out of stock, or to keep others from watering stock in the future.

Now, let us take the packing companies for illustration of the working of this tax. For instance, Armour & Co. under the present law pay $232,376. Under the proposed amendment they would pay $1,048,745.

Swift & Co. under the present law pay $231,547. Under the amendment which I offer they would pay $1,050,245.

I understand the futility of arguing these questions, and I am only speaking of this for the purpose of putting it in the RECORD as a part of my solemn protest against the boldest piece of naked effrontery that has ever been manifested in any legislative body in America.

The proponents of this bill proposed to take all the excise taxes off of corporations. They were balked in that by the agricultural bloc, and they have just taken $20,000,000 away from the agricultural bloc by the Lodge amendment.

They proposed to take off the surtaxes on incomes, and they were partially balked in that by the agricultural bloc.

They proposed to take off $450,000,000 of excess-profits taxes, and the agricultural bloc surrendered to them, and within the last few moments they have taken $20,000,000 more off the big corporations, off the great trusts and combinations.

So, Mr. President, I am now bringing this proposition before the Senate with full knowledge that unless the agricultural bloc will join with the Democrats the case is helpless. I am wondering whether they are going to operate with those who have been saving big business and put the burdens on the people by taking the burdens from the ultra rich, or whether they are going to join the Democrats in an effort to compel the great corporations to pay a just proportion of the burdens of the Government.

Mr. REED. I ask for the yeas and nays on my amendment to the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of the opinion that no business has transpired since the last roll call.

Mr. REED. The yeas and nays have been ordered. That is business transacted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct. The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. FLETCHER] is detained on account of temporary indisposition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-two Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on the substitute offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] for the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER].

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, the effect, or one of the effects of the substitute offered by the Senator from Missouri is to discourage the watering of stock as well as to obtain much needed revenue. Time and again in the argument favoring a capital-stock tax and the argument for the imposition of an excess-profits tax we were reminded that overcapitalized concerns could conceal their excess profits; that the concern which was capitalized at something like its actual value was subjected to this heavy tax; that the small concern, the new concern, the concern that was openly and disingenuously capitalized and operated, had no place to shelter its enormous earnings; but that these great concerns could cover up excess profits for the reason that it was impossible to ascertain just what those profits were. As illustrative of this practice, I wish to call the attention of the Senate to a few well-known operations in high finance.

Stocks are watered for three purposes among others—first, to cover up actual gain, enormous earnings; second, to avoid taxation; third, to exploit the public. I have reached the conclusion from a rather cursory study, I must admit, of this enormous question that it would be much better for business if the great bulk of stocks in all corporations bore no par value whatever and were a simple and accurate statement of the actual per cent of ownership of the holder of the stock in the concern, especially industrial concerns.

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] has questioned the accuracy of the statement of the Senator from Missouri touching the status of the Bethlehem Steel Co. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Pennsylvania and others to this fact. Originally, the basis of the United States Steel Corporation was the Carnegie Steel Co. The Senator from Pennsylvania laughs. I mean those plants upon which it was built and in which it had its genesis.

Mr. PENROSE. It had about as much connection with them as the man in the moon.

Mr. STANLEY. That is a statement which the Senator, with all his learning and his experience, will have some difficulty in sustaining.

The Carnegie Steel Co. prepared, if the Senator from Pennsylvania cares to hear it, for war with all the other steel companies in the United States. I have before me extracts from the minutes of the Carnegie Steel Co. and the United States Steel Corporation in which they admit that this consolidation was formed for the purpose of absorbing competitors, of limiting production, of stifling competition, of evading the operation of the Sherman antitrust law.

If further proof were necessary, Carnegie himself, under oath, admitted that but for the formation of this consolidation he would have carried out Schwab's plan to construct the greatest tube mills in the world at Conneaut and at Erie and to have duplicated every tube in the United States at 20 per cent less than tubes were selling for at that time. He admitted that but for the formation of this combination he would have completed his prospective railroad line between Pittsburgh and Toledo, and would have put hors de combat all the independent steel companies in that region.

Conference after conference was held, and they agreed to pay Carnegie his price for his holdings. Prior to this time the Carnegie Steel Co. was a partnership. I have before me the sworn statements of Carnegie, Schwab, Gary, Singer, and others in the celebrated suit brought by Henry Frick, who was a party to this ironclad contract, in which each one of the holders of this vast stock agreed that they would take an inventory of the plant. This inventory was to determine the value of the holdings of each man in case of his death. He agreed that in the event of his death his estate should have his proportion of the valuation placed upon that property. He agreed that in case of a disagreement with his partners he was to take according to these book values. They all swore in that suit that these inventories were made by men who knew every detail of the business and knew the actual values of the property.

In spite of what the Senator from Pennsylvania has stated, it is the most perfect instance in all the history of high finance of daring capitalization and the motives that inspired it. The value of this property was fixed. The value of every blast furnace, every steel mill, every line of railroad and every other apparatus, every acre of land, every right in ore, every coal mine was inventoried, tabulated, and established under oath at $75,610,104.06. That property was afterwards, within less than two years from the time that inventory was taken, sold by Carnegie to the United States Steel Corporation for over $500,000,000.

More than that, the new company concluded to take over the steel business of the United States. Kennedy, the greatest engineer in the world then or now, who constructed blast furnace after blast furnace for the Carnegie Steel Co. and who has constructed steel works all over the world, was employed to make an inspection of these properties.

I established years ago, and no man has ever questioned it, that of these great properties the Federal Steel Co. had a value of $32,741,454.70, the National Tube Co. a value of $19,000,000, the American Bridge Co. a value of $12,670,000, the American Steel & Wire Co. a value of $40,000,000, the National Steel Co. a value of $25,000,000, the American Steel Hoop Co. a value of $11,000,000, the American Sheet Steel Co. a value of $17,000,000, the American Tin Plate Co. a value of $13,825,000, and the Carnegie Steel Co. a value of $160,000,000. Yet these properties were capitalized for the prodigious sum of $1,399,051,229. Judge Gary before the Ways and Means Committee guessed that $1,000,000,000 of the capitalization of the Steel Corporation was "capitalized profits," pure water.

As a further illustration take the Federal Steel Co., which is composed of the Illinois Steel Co., with a capital of $12,750,000; the Minnesota Iron Co., with a capital of $12,000,000; the Lorain Steel Co., with a capital of $2,641,454.70; and the Elgin, Joliet & Eastern, with a capital of $5,520,000, or a total of $32,741,454.70. It seems not credible, but it is true, that upon this slender base of less than $33,000,000 of actual, tangible values Rogers, Ream, Bacon, and others, guided and sustained by the powerful house of J. P. Morgan & Co., could have erected this mountain of securities, $200,000,000—$100,000,000 preferred and $100,000,000 common stock.

Mr. President, overcapitalization of this company made the Sherman Antitrust Act impotent. Behind this confusion of securities, behind this pile of paper, bonds, and stocks, preferred and all other kinds, it sheltered itself as behind an ambuscade, a screen that protected its operations in restraint of trade. In addition to that, Mr. President, by virtue of this same capacity to manipulate and to water stocks, they forced an exchange of stocks upon the Tennessee Coal & Iron Co. and took over another $100,000,000 worth of property.

This overcapitalization of properties is not only evident in the steel business, but in the railroad business, and has resulted in the utter demoralization of that business. If I were called upon to-day to give one of the reasons for the utter collapse of the carriers in this country, I would attribute it to the fact that the men who should have attended to the business of transporting commodities became imbued with the gamblers' passion and preferred to manipulate the securities rather than to operate the properties. I see before me the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], who has spent years in the study of that great question and is perhaps the best-informed man in either House of Congress upon the subject, and I dare say he will not disagree with me.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I certainly shall not.

Mr. STANLEY. To-day the trouble is that railroads are being operated not by men of the type of James J. Hill, Milton Smith, of Kentucky, and Harriman and Gould and Vanderbilt. Those men had their faults; they were not particularly scrupulous about tariffs; they placed on the traffic all that the traffic would bear, but they knew, Mr. President, what the traffic would bear. Those who now control the securities know nothing about what the traffic will bear, and they have crushed the traffic in an effort to force dividends upon fictitious valuations.

I know of nothing that would tend more to bring American business—big business—back to normal, put it on a wholesome basis, than to find some method of compelling an honest valuation of properties by those who own them; by compelling the issuance of securities in keeping with the values of the property.

More than that, Mr. President, whenever properties are overcapitalized, whenever the common stock especially is a mere promise to pay, a mere matter of good will, a mere speculation upon anticipated profits, this mass of securities furnishes the most ample opportunity for every character of nefarious operation. The practice, for instance, of authorizing the exchange of securities for bonds, conceived in iniquity and born in sin, is the ready method by which honest business may be wrecked and honest holders may be penalized and plundered.

For these reasons, Mr. President, I most earnestly commend the amendment suggested by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. If these stocks actually represent value, they can pay the tax; if they are inflated balloons, if they represent nothing but water, if they are like a gambler's dice, and are made to sell and not to represent values, the quicker such stocks are called in and the quicker the companies are reorganized the better.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FERNALD in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri as a substitute for the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER]. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN (when his name was called). Making the same announcement regarding my pair and its transfer as heretofore, I vote "nay."

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as heretofore as to the transfer of my pair with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE], I vote "nay."

Mr. SIMMONS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG], who is absent from the Chamber. I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as heretofore with reference to my pair and its transfer, I vote "nay."

Mr. TRAMMELL (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] and will vote. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HALE. Making the same announcement as heretofore with regard to my pair and its transfer, I vote "nay."

Mr. PENROSE (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], who is absent and will be, as I am informed, for the remainder of the evening. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CROW] and will permit my vote to stand. I ask that the arrangement just stated by me may stand for the evening without further announcement.

Mr. EDGE. Making the same announcement as heretofore with regard to my pair and its transfer, I vote "nay."

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Transferring my general pair with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] to the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], I vote "nay."

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I desire to announce that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] is necessarily absent. He is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS]. I am also authorized to announce that if the Senator from Mississippi were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. TRAMMELL. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. FLETCHER]. He is paired with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL].

Mr. WARREN (after having voted in the negative). I find that my regular pair, the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], has not voted. I transfer that pair so that the Senator from North Carolina will stand paired with the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. MCLEAN. Making the same announcement as heretofore with reference to my pair and its transfer, I vote "nay."

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL] with the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER];

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL]; and

The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH].

The result was announced—yeas 17, nays 41, as follows:

YEAS—17.

So Mr. REED's amendment as a substitute for Mr. MCCUMBER's amendment was rejected.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I understand the question now to be on the committee amendment as amended, and I ask that the question be submitted to the Senate.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN in the chair). Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. PENROSE. Yes; I yield.

Mr. SIMMONS. I desire to offer an amendment in the language of the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] with a change only in the rates. I have changed it so as to read:

Upon all stock in excess of $5,000 and not in excess of $2,000,000, $1 per share for each $1,000.

Upon all stock in excess of $2,000,000 and not in excess of $3,000,000, $1.50 per share for each $1,000.

Upon all stock in excess of $3,000,000, $2 per share for each $1,000.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I move to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, that is a very unusual proceeding.

Mr. PENROSE. The motion is a thousand years old.

Mr. SIMMONS. It is a very unusual thing in the Senate to move to lay an amendment to a tax bill upon the table.

Mr. PENROSE. I make the motion, and it is not debatable, so I can not give my reasons.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania moves to lay on the table the amendment, in the nature of a substitute, offered by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] to the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER].

Mr. SIMMONS. Upon that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SIMMONS. I make the point of no quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of no quorum is made. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gerry	McCumber	Sheppard
Brandegee	Gooding	McKellar	Shortridge
Broussard	Hale	McKinley	Simmons
Bursum	Harreld	McLean	Smoot
Calder	Harris	McNary	Stanley

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-four Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] to lay on the table the amendment, in the nature of a substitute, offered by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] to the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER]. The yeas and nays have been ordered. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before, I vote "yea."

Mr. EDGE (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to transfer, I vote "yea."

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before, I vote "yea."

Mr. HALE (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before, I vote "yea."

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to the transfer of my pair, I vote "yea."

Mr. SIMMONS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG], which I transfer to the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before with reference to my pair and its transfer, I vote "yea."

Mr. TRAMMELL (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as upon the last ballot with regard to my pair and its transfer, I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I desire to announce that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] is necessarily absent, and is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS]. If the Senator from Mississippi were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL] with the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER];

The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]; and

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL].

So Mr. SIMMONS's amendment, in the nature of a substitute for Mr. MCCUMBER's amendment, was laid on the table.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I offer an amendment, which I ask to have printed and lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BRANDEGEE in the chair). Without objection, the amendment will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, before I have taken my seat I shall offer an amendment. It will be the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri, except that I shall change the brackets. The amendment which I propose later to offer will read as follows:

Upon all stock in excess of $5,000, and not in excess of $3,000,000, $1; upon all stock in excess of $3,000,000, $2.

Mr. President, I have spoken upon this bill and upon no collateral subject since we began the consideration of the bill. I have confined myself always to the question at issue, and no man in this Chamber can charge me with having wasted any time in useless discussion. I have managed, since I have been a Member of the Senate, one great tariff measure, and, as I now recall, three great revenue measures. In addition to that, I have managed the bill which created the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, and the bill which created the War Finance Corporation, as well as all the bills raising money by the issuance of bonds.

During that period of time, in the consideration of all those measures, I do not recall that I ever moved to lay an amendment with respect to any of those measures upon the table. So far as I know, since I have been a Member of the Senate, now more than 20 years, no motion has been made to lay an amendment to a tax bill upon the table, especially when there was no reason under the sun why the mover of the amendment should be suspected of having any purpose to filibuster, or to delay the measure. So far as I am concerned, I have not only not filibustered, but I do not think there has been any; if there has been any filibustering I have not been in any way a party to it.

The Senator from Pennsylvania and other Senators have known that, so far as I was concerned, I was ready to cooperate with them in every proper way to facilitate the consideration of this bill, and I have sat at my seat when amendment after amendment dealing with administrative matters of great importance, offered by the Finance Committee, was agreed to, without interposing any objection whatsoever and without any objection being made by anybody else on this side of the Chamber. It does seem to me, under those circumstances, that the Senator who is the chairman of the Finance Committee should not demand that we vote without consideration for an amendment discussion of which, I am satisfied from conversations I have had with gentlemen upon the other side of the Chamber, would have met their approval, as well as mine.

This amendment, Mr. President, is not offered for the purpose of delay. It is an amendment upon which there would have been little discussion, probably little more than an explanation on my part, and it is an amendment which is very vital and very meritorious at the same time. I think that feeling is entertained not only by myself and by Senators on this side of the Chamber but by quite a number of Senators on the other side of the Chamber.

What is the situation, Mr. President? We have been reducing taxes. We had a margin of only about $520,000,000, and, as I figure it, we have given to corporations since the adoption of the Lodge amendment $150,000,000 of that reduction, while we have given to the individual income-tax payers of this country a total reduction, including the $70,000,000 brought about through the increase in the exemptions allowed for family expenses, only $128,000,000. So that it is perfectly apparent that the corporations, which nobody will say were paying more than their share of the taxes under the old law, are getting more than their share of the reductions.

There was a tax of $75,000,000 in the present law upon capital stock. That was certainly not an oppressive tax. It was such a tax as the States levy against corporations. It was a license tax to do business. It was the only tax we imposed upon the great franchises which we conferred upon those corporations, the great privileges we permit them to enjoy in the conduct of their business affairs, and deny to the individual citizen of this country.

Think of a franchise to do business in the way that our corporations are permitted to do business, paying only $100 upon $100,000 capitalization, only $1,000 upon $1,000,000 capitalization, and not only upon $1,000,000 capitalization, but upon capital stock worth fairly in the markets of the country $1,000,000. The capital stock may be $2,000,000, but it is taxed only according to its fair market value.

The majority, through the Finance Committtee, reported a bill absolutely eliminating that tax in favor of the corporations. I do not think that upon second thought the Members of the Senate would sustain that reduction. I do not think they would have said, in the condition under which we are existing now, when money is so much needed by the Treasury, that the corporations of this country should not pay any tax in the way of a license for the privileges they are permitted under the law to enjoy.

When that was presented early in this debate, Mr. President, there was a ready response to the suggestion coming from some twenty-odd Senators on the other side of the Chamber, and they made a demand upon the majority members of the committee to recede from that amendment and to restore the capital-stock tax. I said, when they were discussing it, that it was too low, that it ought to be increased, especially in view of the fact that we had just taken $400,000,000 off of the corporations, and I stated that I would later offer an amendment to increase that tax from $1 for each thousand to $2 for each thousand.

In the meantime, what has happened? While the committee, upon the demand of a group of Senators upon the other side of the Chamber, decided to restore this tax by a very small margin of two votes here to-day they have decided to strike off $20,000,000 of that tax. The amendment which I shall offer will in another form restore that $20,000,000, and probably add ten or fifteen million more.

Even then, Mr. President, the amount of taxes remitted to the corporations by this bill would be entirely out of proportion to the amount remitted to the balance of the people of this country. You have taken only $58,000,000 off of the surtaxes of individuals. You have reduced the individual surtaxes in this country, outside of the small exemptions on estates below $5,000, only $58,000,000, and now you will reduce the tax of the corporations as I said before, something like $150,000,000.

On the other hand, the taxes of the miscellaneous taxpayers of this country, amounting in the aggregate to something more than $800,000,000, one and one-half times as much as the corporations will pay, you have reduced only $27,000,000.

You cut off the transportation taxes altogether. Taking all the reductions you have made in behalf of all the other taxpayers of the country, the individual income taxpayers, the miscellaneous taxpayers, you have taken more off of the corporations than you have taken off of all the balance put together. Can you justify that? When you do that sort of thing are you not guilty of the charge I made when I opened the debate that your bill is a bill to relieve the great, rich, powerful corporations of the country at the expense of the balance of the taxpayers of the country?

Mr. President, I do not wish to prolong the discussion, but I do wish to appeal to Senators on the other side of the Chamber, who helped force back into the bill the provision imposing a capital stock tax upon corporations, to assist us in reasonably increasing this tax, at least to an extent which will make up for the loss sustained by the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts. I myself do not know how much this increase to $2 will amount to upon corporations with a capital stock of an actual market value above $3,000,000, but I have discussed it with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], and he, I think, expressed to me the opinion that it would at least make up the amount we have lost by the adoption of the Lodge amendment. I appeal for aid to that group of Senators on the other side who from pure patriotism are moved by the same motives that move me, who are anxious to see that everyone shall pay his fair share of taxes just as I am, and who do not want, just as I do not want, to make any man, rich or poor, high or low, pay one dollar more than his fair, legitimate, logical share of the taxes necessary to raise the money to run the Government and to pay the great indebtedness of the United States.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I voted for the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] and the other amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS]. I intend to vote for this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from New Mexico permit the Chair to interrupt him? The Chair would like to ask the Senator from North Carolina whether he has formally and actually offered his amendment?

Mr. SIMMONS. No. If I offer it, it will be laid on the table at once, and I suggest to Senators who desire to discuss it that the only chance to discuss it is before I offer it.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I was out of the Chamber temporarily, endeavoring to get something to eat, and supposed the Senator had offered his amendment, but I shall be glad to say what I have in mind.

Mr. SIMMONS. I will state to the Senator what the amendment is.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I understand what the amendment proposes when offered, and when offered I expect to vote for it. This may appear to be somewhat inconsistent with the attitude which I have taken heretofore regarding taxation upon the incomes of corporations, but it can be very easily reconciled. I have taken the position that any tax upon a corporation creates, so far as the distributed net income of the corporation is concerned, an inequality between the stockholders of the corporation and other individuals. I still believe that is true, but I recognize the fact also that there are certain advantages which corporations have and which the individuals do not enjoy.

There is the right of limited liability. There is the right to have the corporation continue in business regardless of the death of any of the stockholders or board of directors. It is a continuing concern. Moreover, there is vested in corporations a power dependent upon size. There can be no question that a corporation with very large capital has a great power in the particular industry in which it is engaged, more power than a small corporation with a small capital. I submit that these things may very well be taken into consideration by the Congress in a revenue bill levying an excise tax. The larger corporation, of course, has a greater power to control prices, to bring about a monopoly in any given industry, than has the small corporation. There can be no question about that, and the Congress of the United States would be justified, therefore, in levying a graduated capital-stock tax.

I believe if you are going to levy any tax upon corporations because they are corporations, you can not do it in a more advisable way, in a more equitable way, than to levy upon the capital stock issued. It, of course, should be based upon the values of capital stock, taking into consideration the actual capital invested in the business, and as that increases in volume it is perfectly proper, it seems to me, to levy a graduated tax upon it. There is this greater reason at this time and in connection with the other provisions of the bill for levying such a tax. The Senator from North Carolina has just made some statements in that regard which can not be controverted. His reason and his logic can not be met.

I desire, however, to call attention to another phase of the bill in which Senators may recognize that it is important at this time to levy a graduated tax upon corporations' capital stock. In the bill as presented by the committee and as it has been adopted by the Senate thus far there is a vast discrimination between the tax upon individuals and partnerships on the one hand and a corporation upon the other.

I desire to call attention to the fact that under the bill, as it has been voted upon thus far and as proposed by the committee, wherever there is an income in excess of $20,000 an inducement is offered to organize corporations in order to reduce the amount of the taxes. Under the bill as it is now framed it is provided that the corporation shall pay a flat tax of only 15 per cent upon its entire net income. As to the individual and the partner, it is proposed that they shall pay 8 per cent normal tax and then surtaxes graduated, but up to the point where the total income is $20,000 the surtaxes then amount to 7 per cent, making the total tax at that point on the individual income or the income of the partner equal to the 15 per cent of the corporation.

What will happen? I ask Senators to ponder upon what is going to happen under the bill to the revenues which it is expected to derive from taxation upon individual incomes and upon the incomes of partners. I desire to make the prediction that Senators will be grossly disappointed when they come to estimate the amount of taxes which we are going to derive from individual incomes, because whenever the individual or the member of a partnership finds that his net income is going to be in excess of $20,000 a year we are going to find him organizing a corporation.

In the bill there is a provision, for instance, that the tax upon the increment of real estate or properties which have been held over a period of years shall be fixed only upon the basis of 40 per cent of the increased value since 1913. That amounts to 6 per cent upon the net increase in value from 1913 down to the present time if the property belongs to a corporation, but if the property should belong to an individual, and his net profit, including his other income, from the transaction should amount to $20,000 or more, we are going to find that he will incorporate the transaction merely for the purpose of making a sale.

Take the case mentioned here the other day where some man had invested his money in nonproductive real estate for the purpose of avoiding taxation. He is hoping for an increase in the value of that property. When the time comes for him to make a sale, if his net profits, together with his other income, shall exceed $20,000 for that year, we will find that he will convey that property to a corporation organized for the specific purpose. Under the bill as presented he is specifically authorized to convey the property to a newly organized corporation, and take in lieu of it capital stock without any charge upon the exchange and without any charge upon the transfer. So I desire to make the prediction that in all these transactions wherever the income exceeds $20,000 we will find a corporation organized. The organization of these corporations will not bring revenue into the Treasury of the United States, but it will bring revenue into the treasuries of the various States of the Union where the corporations will be formed. I ask Senators in all earnestness to ponder upon the step which they are taking in creating this great disparity of taxation between the incomes of individuals and partners, upon the one hand, and of corporations upon the other.

The fact that there is a discrimination is exemplified in a provision of the bill itself. As to personal service corporations which are organized with small and only nominal capital, where, in the main, the income is dependent upon the exertion of the individual stockholders of the corporation, it is provided under existing law that such a corporation may make a return as a partnership, but by this bill as reported by the Senate committee it is proposed to take away that privilege.

Not only that privilege is taken away, but such corporations are required to make an income-tax return as corporations. Why? Because as corporations their taxes will be less. Senators on the other side of the Chamber do not want to require them to make returns as partnerships, which exemplifies the fact that there is this disparity. I do not believe Senators can justify that before the country. Senators may search this bill through and they will find that taxes upon individuals and partnerships are far beyond those which are imposed upon corporations if the income amounts to any considerable sum.

As I have said, when the point is reached of an income of $20,000 and more Senators will find that corporations will be organized for the specific purpose, and yet in a perfectly lawful way under this bill, so as to escape the payment of high taxes. I want to ask Senators if that can be justified?

I called attention the other day to another inequality. Take an individual or a partnership whose income fluctuates from time to time owing to the exigencies of business, owing to the variations of good times and bad times, of fat years and lean years; the individual or the partnership which makes an income in one year of $100,000 will pay a surtax upon that, making a far higher rate than a flat rate of 15 per cent; for the next year they may make little or perhaps no income and will pay no tax; the next year they may make but little income and they will pay a small surtax; but there stands out that prosperous year in which a high surtax has been paid. So individuals and the partnerships are penalized as compared with corporations.

A corporation may have a high income one year and a low income the next year and then a little higher income the next year; but always upon its net income only 15 per cent is levied. I submit that that can not be justified. I do not believe that the people of the country will ever permit us to say that the corporations of the country shall pay a less tax than that paid by individuals and partnerships doing a like business.

Moreover, I want again to call attention to the fact that when we levy a flat tax upon corporations we are levying a tribute upon the large corporations which are earning a low rate of net income; we are increasing that tax which must be borne in its last analysis by the stockholders of the concern who get modest dividends from the corporation; we are increasing that tax at the rate of 50 per cent; but we are lowering the tax upon those who are earning the excess profits and higher incomes.

It is true, as I have said, that a tax levied upon corporations works unequally; but I recognize the fact that there is an advantage which the large corporations have over small corporations, over individuals, and over partnerships of small capital. So I say that Senators are not doing any great injustice when they levy a slightly graduated tax upon the capital stock of corporations. However, I again say, Mr. President, that when we take up the question of taxation of corporation incomes and put it in the balance with the income of individuals and partnerships, there is only one fair way, so far as the income is concerned, and that is as to the distributed income, let the stockholders pay the entire tax, both the normal tax and the surtax, and levy the tax against the corporation only upon the undistributed income.

In that way we minimize the inequality which is created under this proposed law as between the stockholders of a corporation and the individuals and partnerships.

I want to make the suggestion that every Senator seriously consider this question when it comes to the enactment of permanent legislation. It has been stated that the pending measure is only a temporary bill. My prediction is that that is true, that it is only a temporary bill. If the majority in this Congress insist upon making the pending measure a permanent law the people of this country will rise up in their might and insist that it shall be only a temporary law. When Senators come to consider the question of equality they will find that this bill is upon a wrong foundation, and that the people of the country will demand equality there can be no doubt. As soon as they understand this question, as soon as they understand that we are making favorites of the corporations of the country, that we are imposing a higher tax upon individuals and partnerships than is imposed upon corporations, they will make this a temporary measure, and we must sooner or later come to found our revenue legislation upon a correct principle. This bill is not founded upon a correct principle. It neither applies a tax upon those who are best able to bear it nor does it bring about an equality of the burden of taxation among the people of the country. The measure proposes a very slight increase in the capital stock corporation tax. I submit that under the bill as it has been framed that is the least the majority could do; but will they not recognize in the slightest degree that there is a disparity in favor of corporations?

I have no prejudice against corporations; I believe that corporations provide a legitimate way in which to do business; I believe that the stockholders of corporations ought to be treated as fairly as individuals or partners. I do not, however, believe we ought to allow the cloak of a corporation to be used for the purpose of escaping just taxation, but rather that we should make the burdens of the Government at this time, in this period of depression, rest as equally as they can be made to rest upon the various citizens of our country.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, we have lost through the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] $20,000,000 of the capital-stock tax on corporations. I believe that certainly should be restored in some form. I see no injustice in requiring a larger capital-stock tax upon very large corporations, because the majority report of the committee on this bill expressly states that the large corporations have escaped almost wholly the excess-profits taxes. That being true, and considering the overcapitalization of so many of them, there is no injustice in proposing a higher tax upon very large corporations.

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] has suggested that he will offer a substitute, and I take it he will offer it in the same form as the substitute offered by the Senator from Missouri. That, however, Mr. President, changes the phraseology of existing law with reference to the capital-stock tax, and I do not think that phraseology ought to be changed.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, I had no purpose to do that.

Mr. LENROOT. Then, I misunderstood the Senator. So I shall offer the amendment which I send to the desk, retaining the phraseology of the present law but creating two brackets, imposing the present tax of $1 on all corporations having a capital stock up to $3,000,000, and a tax of $2 on the excess over $3,000,000 in each case.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, those are the same rates as my amendment carried, and I think that I will not offer the amendment which I intended to offer, but will content myself with voting for the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LENROOT. I have only to say that I am informed that if this amendment is adopted it will just about equal the $20,000,000 lost through the adoption of the so-called Lodge amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I understand that the Senator from North Carolina has accepted the proposition made by the Senator from Wisconsin?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina has offered no amendment. The Senator from Wisconsin has offered an amendment and the Senator from North Carolina has said he will vote for that amendment. The Secretary will state the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. In the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota, in paragraph 1, line 5, after the numerals "$5,000," it is proposed to strike out the period and insert the following words:

And not in excess of $3,000,000; and $2 for each $1,000 of such value in excess of $3,000,000.

Mr. McCUMBER obtained the floor.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Dakota yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield.

Mr. SIMMONS. In view of the fact that the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin imposes the same rates upon capital stock as the amendment suggested by me, I said that I would not offer my amendment, but would vote for the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, the Senator from Wisconsin states, and states correctly, that one of the reasons for the adoption of the amendment in regard to the tax on capital stock is the fact that large corporations are not paying any excess-profits tax. Of course, that necessarily means that they are not making more than 8 per cent on their invested capital. As a substitute for the excess-profits tax, which only operated upon the smaller corporations in which the personal element was the earning factor, we made this change. There is an element of injustice, I must admit, in imposing a heavier tax upon a corporation that is not making more than a small net income, or more income than they are entitled to make, so as to make amends for the amount that is deducted from the smaller corporation which is making an excessive profit. But the Senator's amendment goes further than that. He is putting it on a little thicker than the committee dared to go.

Let us take a simple illustration: A man who owns 100 acres of land requires $10,000 of capital, probably, to operate and farm that land; another man who owns 500 acres of land, having five times as many acres, is compelled to invest $50,000 capital for the purpose of operating his land. Now, it is proposed to say to the man who has to put that much more capital in—I am assuming both of them are dealing honestly and fairly—"While we will, as to the man who had invested only $10,000 capital in order to operate his land, tax him 10 per cent, we will raise your tax, you having invested $50,000 capital, to 20 per cent," although each might represent dollar for dollar the same percentage. It seems to me that that is hardly fair. There is no element of real justice in it. It simply says: "If you are compelled to put more capital into your business"—and I am assuming now that you are doing the business honestly—"the very fact that you are compelled to put more capital into the business requires you to pay a bigger percentage upon your capital investment." It will undoubtedly bring us in $20,000,000 of revenue, but to my mind it lacks very much of the element of justice.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I should just like to ask the Senator whether he thinks there is any more injustice in that than in imposing a tax of 15 per cent on the income of a corporation which makes 3 per cent, and only 15 per cent on the income of a corporation that makes 50 per cent, as his committee proposes to do?

Mr. McCUMBER. I admitted that I thought there was quite a little element of injustice; but the fact that you have gone over the line of exact justice is not any excuse for going headlong over the line, increasing the injustice and exaggerating it.

Mr. LENROOT. No; but I will say to the Senator that I am very confident that before the bill leaves the Senate we will have at least in part cured the injustice proposed by the committee in increasing the taxes upon corporations that are earning less than 5 or 6 or 7 per cent.

Mr. McCUMBER. Possibly; but even that would be hardly adequate compensation for inequality of taxation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] to the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER].

Mr. REED. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. TRAMMELL (when Mr. FLETCHER'S name was called). I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. FLETCHER]. He is paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL].

Mr. SIMMONS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG], which I transfer to the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON], and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]. Not knowing how he would vote on this question, I withhold my vote.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before with reference to my pair and its transfer, I vote "yea."

Mr. TRAMMELL (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as made upon the last vote, I vote "yea."

Mr. HEFLIN (when Mr. UNDERWOOD'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. UNDERWOOD] is paired with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Making the same announcement as before, I vote "nay."

Mr. EDGE. Making the same announcement as before, I vote "nay."

Mr. HALE. Making the same announcement as before, I vote "yea."

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I desire to announce that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] is necessarily absent. He is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS]. If the Senator from Mississippi were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. LODGE (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDER-

WOOD]. In his absence, I transfer that pair to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN (after having voted in the negative). I transfer my general pair with the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] to the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. McCUMBER (after having voted in the negative). I find that my pair, the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], has not voted. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CROW] and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL] with the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER];

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL]; and

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON].

The result was announced—yeas 45, nays 16, as follows:

YEAS—45.

So Mr. LENROOT's amendment to Mr. McCUMBER's amendment was agreed to.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I do not think this incident should be allowed to pass without some slight comment.

The first thing that the Senate did, by a strict party vote, was to relieve from taxation as far as possible the great holding companies by adopting the Lodge amendment. Having done that, they voted down an amendment which proposed to levy a cumulative tax on corporations in regard to their capital stock. They had already let out the great holding companies. Then, when that was defeated by a party vote—of which I make no complaint—the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] offered the amendment in a milder form, and that was promptly moved to be laid on the table, although that is in fact cloture. He then prepared an amendment which is identical with the amendment adopted, and it was well known that that was to be laid on the table; but when the same amendment in substantially the same words was offered from the other side, Senators who had intended to vote against the Simmons amendment voted for the Lenroot amendment. In other words, there has been some talk about playing politics. If that be not politics of the baser sort, of the more contemptible sort, of the less respectable sort, then I am unable to pass on any of those questions.

I make no complaint when a great political party outlines its program and marches straight forward toward its destination, taking the responsibility as it goes; but when I see that same political party ready to reject, even by the adoption of cloture methods, a matter so meritorious that they dare not stand upon their record, and turn around and face about just so long as it is offered from their side, and hope that they are going in that way to fool somebody in the country, that sort of tactics, in my judgment, sinks to a point so low that there is no nethermost.

I congratulate the Republican Party on this wonderful victory that it has just attained. It is worthy of its best traditions.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Having listened to the thrice-told tales of the official scold of the Senate, may I ask what is the next amendment?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, there is no official scold of the Senate; there is simply a recorder of the Senate. The tale may be thrice-told, but it would have to be many times told to impress a Senator who is in full accord with the tactics I have just described.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, he will have to let me out on that, because I voted against the amendment which has just been voted upon.

Mr. REED. Yes; but I think the Senator is in accord with the tactics.

Speaking about this matter in a more serious vein—and I think it is worthy of being treated seriously, and I am scolding nobody; I am just expressing the way I feel—whenever a Senator will sit in this body and vote against a matter purely because it happens to be offered by a political opponent, I ask, is he considering his duty as a Senator? Is he performing his duty by the country? That is all I ask, and I submit the question to the country now, as I shall take great pleasure in submitting it later on, possibly ineffectively; but I have never seen the arrogance of power yet that was not rebuked, and I saw it rebuked not many months ago.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I was as much surprised as the Senator from Missouri at the last vote, and fully realize that I can not understand the sudden change. But I want to correct one statement made by the Senator from Missouri, that it was well understood that there would be a motion made to lay on the table the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina. I let it be well understood, as having charge of the bill at the present time, that I would not make such a motion and that the amendment should be voted for on the merits.

Mr. REED. I assumed, if the Senator will pardon me, that that was the situation. A motion had been made of that character, and came from the other side; I exculpate the Senator from North Dakota from any part of the responsibility for that.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I want to say that the Senator from North Dakota expressed the assurance that he would not make such a motion.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I do not care to occupy more than a moment in this controversy. But, as a matter of fact, the amendment which has been adopted by the Senate had never been proposed by either side of the aisle before. The Senator from North Carolina offered an entirely different amendment, which amendment was laid upon the table. The Senator from North Carolina then rose and stated that later he intended to offer an amendment which would impose an additional tax of $1 on corporations upon their excess over $3,000,000.

The Senator from Missouri states that that is a trick.

I ask the Senator from North Carolina whether the proposition which has been adopted did not come to him in the first instance from the Republican side of the aisle?

Mr. SIMMONS. I will state to the Senator that in a conversation I had with him this morning he said he would agree to this proposition.

Mr. LENROOT. And I made the proposition to the Senator. I told the Senator from North Carolina that I would be glad to support a proposition which would make an increase of $1 in the taxes on incomes in excess of $3,000,000.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator stated that to me this morning, and I stated to him that I would be willing to accept that, with this difference, that I wished the first million dollars——

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order. The hour is growing late, and this is no time for post-mortems. Let us take the business in hand.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, the Senator is too abrupt. I stated to the Senator from Wisconsin that I was willing to accept his proposition and offered my amendment. The first amendment which was laid on the table was an amendment in which I proposed to place a dollar and a half tax on the difference between two and three million dollars. That having been tabled, I announced my purpose to offer the other amendment. I knew at the time I did that that the Senator from Wisconsin would favor it, and I expected to get support on the other side.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NEW in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. LENROOT. I yield.

Mr. REED. Let me interject that the Senator from North Carolina stated not less than eight or nine days ago, in his opening speech, that he was in favor of doubling the tax, making it $2 on the larger corporations——

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I do not yield for any purpose of this kind. The Senator from Missouri rose in his place and charged Senators on this side of the aisle with voting down an amendment because it was proposed from the Democratic side and then voting in identically the same amendment because it was proposed from the Republican side. In the first place, the RECORD does not bear out the statement made by the Senator from Missouri; in the second place, the proposal finally adopted came, not from the Democratic side but from the Republican side of the aisle.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, this is getting to be very amusing. The Democratic side of this Chamber stood as a solid body against the repeal of the tax on corporate stocks. It was slated to be repealed. A little group on the other side—and I am glad they operated—got together and agreed that they would resist it, and thereupon it was brought in as a Republican proposition, although it would not have been enough of a baby to have been entitled to swaddling clothes if it had not been for the Democratic position.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. CARAWAY. What strikes me as curious about the whole matter is that the Lodge amendment was adopted to-night, and the Senator from Wisconsin premised his argument in favor of his amendment by saying that the Lodge amendment had relieved the corporations of $20,000,000.

Mr. REED. Yes. The next step was the repeal of the surtax upon incomes. It was well known that the accumulation beyond 32 per cent was slated to be taken off, and that the Democrats would stand against it and were standing against it. Then this group on the other side, knowing that, agreed to stand with the Democrats, and they came in and said, "We did it."

The Democrats were in favor of taking off the whole of the tax upon transportation. The group on the other side, utterly powerless, instead of saying, "We will join the Democrats," said, "No; we will do this if we can be credited with it."

What are the facts about this amendment? Two weeks ago, nearly, the Senator from North Carolina declared that he intended to propose an amendment to raise the tax upon corporate stock to $2. He got no encouragement from the other side—not a word. Then the amendment came forward which I offered, and which was more radical, and it got no votes on the other side. The Senator from North Carolina offered a modified amendment, and it was tabled; then the Senator from North Carolina had substantially this amendment written out on his desk.

Mr. SIMMONS. I stated that I was going to offer it, but I would not offer it before I made my speech, because I apprehended that it might be tabled.

Mr. REED. The Senator stated on the floor that he would offer his amendment, and then there came forward from the other side a gallant champion, who offered the same amendment, and it was accepted. That is the truth about the matter. I am not complaining because the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] offered it.

I am glad he offered it, because I am glad it is to go into this bill, for the good of the country; but the peculiar spectacle is that men who stay most of the time in the cloak room and in other places, and only come in to vote, will vote for this proposition because it comes from a particular side, and vote against it because it comes from another side.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. REED. I have finished.

Mr. MOSES. I wanted to ask the Senator, in view of the curtain lecture he has just read us so recently, if he is taking the position that because a Senator here on the floor or elsewhere announces his intention to offer an amendment or to do something else, that is the same thing as doing it?

Mr. REED. No; I am taking the position that when a Senator anticipates that his amendment will be laid on the table, and says that for that reason he proposes to discuss it in advance, and reads it, and then somebody on the other side picks it up and offers it, the gentleman on the other side of the Chamber has some difficulty in convincing anyone that he is the father of that particular child; that is all.

Mr. MOSES. The Senator is making a wholly gratuitous assumption. He is proceeding upon the theory that because he rose here the other day and announced grandiloquently that he intended to proceed to Kansas City to make a speech before the American Legion, he had already made it.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, the matter in this connection which interests me is what may involve an important proposition which I can not understand. If I have the situation correctly in mind, it is this:

The Senator from North Carolina offered an amendment providing for a tax of $1 per $1,000 upon the capital stock of corporations having a capital stock not in excess of $2,000,000; upon the capital stock not in excess of $2,000,000 and less than $3,000,000, $1.50; and above $3,000,000, $2. That amendment was tabled.

The amendment which was adopted provided for a tax of $1 upon capital stock below $3,000,000, and $2 per $1,000 upon capital stock above $3,000,000. I would like to have some discriminating individual point out to me the logic for making any such change. If you want to put a capital-stock tax upon corporations and you are going to jump from $1 to $2 per $1,000, I would like to know why you could not have a little step in your jump, and I would like to have some scrutinizing mind, founded in logic, determined to act upon scientific principles, explain that most remarkable difference. One amendment proposed a tax of $1 a $1,000 up to $2,000,000, $1.50 per $1,000 up to $3,000,000, and $2 per $1,000 above $3,000,000. You turn that down with scorn, you will not even discuss it, you have tabled such an amendment as that; but when you strike out your $1.50 in there, it is all glorious, the sun is shining, the goose hangs high, the flowers are all in bloom. I would like to have some astute mind upon the other side of the Chamber explain the change of heart, if it was not the thing pointed out by the Senator from Missouri.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. MCCUMBER. Mr. President, there are some other amendments which follow, merely clerical, renumbering the sections.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the next amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 221, on line 22, strike out "1000 or 1001" and insert "1000, 1001, or 1002."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on agreeing to the committee amendment known as Title X as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the amendment on page 176, at the end of subsection K, may be reconsidered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the motion by which the amendment to the provision providing for tax on beverages and constituent parts thereof was agreed to, be reconsidered. Is there objection?

Mr. MOSES. Reserving the right to object, I would like to have the amendment to the amendment stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment to the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert after subdivision (k), the last subdivision in the amendment, the following proviso:

Provided, That the provisions of this subdivision shall not be construed to impose an additional liability upon alcohol upon which the $2.20 tax rate has been paid as provided in subdivision (b).

Mr. MCKELLAR. I wish to say to the Senator, and to other Senators who are interested, that this is merely for the purpose of clarifying the provision. It does not change anything. It was understood by everyone that the tax on medicinal alcohol should be $2.20. It has been determined by experts and lawyers that there might be some doubt about it, and this is offered, I think, by practically unanimous consent.

Mr. MOSES. It is intended to clarify any doubt in the so-called Wadsworth amendment?

Mr. MCKELLAR. It is added to the Wadsworth amendment merely for the purpose of fixing it beyond controversy, which I think most of the Senate understood, that the tax should be but $2.20 on so-called medicinal alcohol.

Mr. MOSES. In other words, the purpose of the Senator's amendment is to make no change in the existing amendment?

Mr. MCKELLAR. None whatever. It is merely to make it clear.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to a reconsideration of the vote by which the section was adopted? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, now that the amendment of the other evening is being reconsidered, if the suggestion made by the Senator from Tennessee has been adopted I have one more suggestion to make.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has not yet been agreed to. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee to the amendment.

Mr. MCCUMBER. I wish to ask the Senator if it covers withdrawals for both medicinal and industrial purposes?

Mr. MCKELLAR. For all the purposes stated in subdivision (b).

Mr. MCCUMBER. If the Senator is certain I have no objection to it, and I think it is proper.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I should apologize to the Senate for bringing this matter up again. I know how weary it is of having these matters brought up a second time. In the amendment adopted the other evening it is clear that there is an imposition of a double tax, which, of course, was not intended. In the paragraph placing a tax upon vinous liquors withdrawn and sold for medicinal purposes a tax is imposed of $1.20 per wine gallon upon such vinous liquors, but it does not provide that that tax shall be paid in lieu of existing taxes nor that from that tax shall be deducted those internal-revenue taxes which have already been paid upon vinous liquors heretofore manufactured.

I am going to take advantage of this incident to offer an amendment to section 601 of the amendment that was adopted the other night which simply provides that the $1.20 tax shall be in lieu of other internal-revenue taxes and that there shall be subtracted from that any taxes which have heretofore been paid thereon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the amendment offered by the Senator from New York to the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. In lieu of the amendment as agreed to, section 601, after the numerals, strike out and insert so that section 601 will read as follows:

SEC. 601. That upon all vinous liquors, including such vinous liquors as are used in those medicinal preparations which are authorized to be manufactured under the regulations of the Treasury Department pursuant to the national prohibition act, and which liquors are or have been produced in or imported into the United States, there shall be levied, collected, and paid, when sold or removed for consumption, in lieu of the revenue taxes now imposed thereon by law, a tax of $1.20 per wine gallon, less the amount of any internal-revenue taxes previously paid thereon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, for several days past I have been receiving letters and telegrams urging me to vote for a maximum surtax of 32 per cent instead of the 50 per cent surtax already adopted. I have replied to those letters and telegrams stating my position fully. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a copy of that reply.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

Your telegram requesting that the maximum individual surtax in the pending tax bill shall not exceed 32 per cent received and noted.

The grounds upon which you base your argument are two: First, that under a higher tax large incomes will be placed in tax-exempt securities; and second, that it will prevent these large receivers of incomes from investing same in foreign securities, which purchase of foreign securities would help our foreign trade and thus benefit the entire country. Both of these arguments have been presented to the Senate, but the one principally relied on is the first one.

Now, the present law provides for a maximum rate of 65 per cent on individual incomes. The Senate by an overwhelming majority (all but 13, and the most of these from New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, and New England, where the large incomes are had) voted to make the maximum 50 per cent instead of 65 per cent. I believe this was a right and proper and reasonable reduction of these surtaxes and a much fairer one than the one you propose in your telegram.

In my judgment, the argument that the maximum of 50 per cent surtax ought to be reduced to 32 per cent so that the money derived from these large incomes would not be placed in tax-exempt securities is fallacious. The bonds sold by States, counties, municipalities, and the Farm Loan Board, which bonds constitute the principal tax-exempt securities, will be sold, regardless of whether the surtax is reduced to 32 per cent or not. The sale of such bonds is absolutely necessary to carry on the governmental activities vitally necessary to the prosperity of our country. Just at this time, when there are perhaps 6,000,000 unemployed in the country, it is necessary that these activities should be fostered; and whether these securities are tax free or not, they must necessarily be sold, and if the money to purchase them does not come from the receivers of large incomes manifestly it will come from the receivers of smaller incomes. We all know that these bonds will be sold and the proceeds used to carry on the business of government. When the receivers of large incomes put these incomes into tax-exempt securities it at once puts this money back into the channels of trade and commerce, and is enormously helpful to the prosperity of our country.

I think it is also quite as important, in so far as our national prosperity is concerned, for our investors to expend their incomes in American securities as it is for them to purchase foreign securities. Indeed, more so. I agree with your telegram that we should make every effort to increase our foreign trade, because we make more than we consume, but I do not believe that taking the surtaxes off of large incomes or reducing them from 50 per cent to 32 per cent will effect that purpose. Indeed, I do not believe that reducing the higher brackets of income surtax will affect our foreign trade in the slightest degree.

As I said before, all these questions have been thoroughly gone over in the Senate and the Senate has reached by an overwhelming majority a different conclusion from that stated in your telegram. I am absolutely confident, knowing you as I do, that if you had been present and had heard the arguments you would have reached the same conclusion that we have reached here, fixing the maximum at 50 per cent instead of 32 per cent. The excess-profits tax we have repealed, beginning next year. The tax bill also takes off the taxes from the very large incomes, both corporate and individual, and puts an increased burden on incomes of smaller and less prosperous corporations, and makes very little difference as to the incomes of less prosperous individuals. My own idea is that we should cut down the expenditures of government, collect the $500,000,000 of interest due us annually on our foreign loans, and that then we could have reduced the taxes in equal step on all taxpayers.

I wish to call your special attention to the fact that if these surtaxes are reduced from 50 per cent to 32 per cent it would mean that we would have to put additional burdens on smaller incomes of corporations and individuals—additional burdens upon taxpayers like you. In other words, the Government is compelled to raise so much money in order to function, and that money must come from some taxpayers. If it does not come from those receiving these high incomes, it must be put upon those who receive smaller incomes.

If your net individual income is $68,000 or over, then the surtaxes in the bill above 32 per cent will affect you adversely; but if your net individual income does not exceed $68,000, then in one form or another your taxes must be increased to make up the deficiency, if we reduce the maximum surtaxes from 50 per cent to 32 per cent.

Of course, I do not know what your individual income is, but if it is not over $68,000 then your telegram is in effect a request to increase your own taxes and to reduce the taxes on your more prosperous friends having incomes in excess of $68,000. To say the least of it, such a request, asking in effect that taxes be reduced on others and increased on the senders of the telegram, is unusual. Ordinarily we all know that taxes are very unpopular. I am inclined to believe that some one must have misinformed you about this particular tax question.

I wish to add that this tax bill is the most burdensome, unfair, unequal, and unjust tax bill ever passed by an American Congress. Many of its provisions are absolutely indefensible. As it was first presented to the Senate by a majority of the Finance Committee it was so ill-smelling that it soon lost practically its every friend, and its passage as presented was not to be thought of and was abandoned. After its errors and deficiencies had been pointed out by us from day to day it was taken in hands and revamped and made somewhat better, but even now its inequalities are frightful, as you gentlemen will soon find when you come to pay the taxes. As originally drafted by our Republican friends it was presented to the Senate, and the majority party insisted upon its passage without any explanation at all by them. Their idea was that they had an overwhelming majority in the Senate and that they would simply sit mute until we had finished talking about it, and then pass it with their great majority. But the discussion by the Democrats so convinced the public of its monstrous inequities and inequalities that the Republican majority was compelled to agree to its revision. While it has been modified it still carries out the main purpose of the original bill, which was to take the taxes off of the very rich and place them on those corporations and individuals of more moderate means.

In my consideration of the matter I have been guided primarily by what I believed to be the interests of the taxpayers of my State, with the view that no additional burdens should be placed upon them and that such reductions as were made should apply to them in the same way that they applied to the taxpayers of the rest of the country.

I want to ask you, in view of the facts stated in this letter, to reconsider the matter, and having done so advise me of your further views. I respect your opinion most highly, but can not help believing that you have been misinformed in reference to the effect of this and other provisions of the bill.

With kind personal regards, I am,
Sincerely, your friend,

KENNETH MCKELLAR.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I understand the next proposition is the excise tax, which I ask may be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the pending amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 197, the text of the bill reads, beginning on line 15:

(5) Tennis rackets, nets, racket covers and presses.

The committee proposes, after the word "presses," to insert:

Skates, snowshoes, skis, toboggans.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I think we can perhaps better reach what I desire by not agreeing to the committee amendment and then striking out all of lines 15 to 25, on page 197, and lines 1 to 5, inclusive, on page 198. I ask that the Senate disagree to the amendment, and then the whole thing will be subject to be stricken out.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, from the manner in which the Senator stated the matter, it does not appear whether it is an amendment of the committee or not. The nature of the proposal of the Senator is not very clear.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will explain the purpose of the amendment.

Mr. MOSES. I was about to ask the Senator to do that.

Mr. McCUMBER. If the Senator will look on page 197 he will observe that No. 5 is partially amended. It is not all of it a single amendment, but it is proposed to be amended by the committee. I desire to strike out all of that subdivision (5).

Mr. MOSES. The House provision and all the other provisions?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; the House provision as well as the Senate committee provision.

Mr. MOSES. May I ask the Senator if that is the first amendment?

Mr. McCUMBER. It is.

Mr. MOSES. I assume, the Senator being in charge of the bill, that the amendment which he now offers is in the nature of a committee amendment.

Mr. McCUMBER. It does not come from the committee as a committee amendment. It comes, however, from a majority of the committee.

Mr. MOSES. There are some of us who desire to strike out all of the excise taxes.

Mr. McCUMBER. There will be ample opportunity to make such a motion.

Mr. MOSES. This being tantamount to a committee amendment I suppose that it is privileged, being reported by a majority of the committee.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from North Dakota to what page he is referring?

Mr. McCUMBER. To page 197 of the bill.

Mr. REED. Does the Senator intend to strike out the tax on art? Is that included in that bracket?

Mr. McCUMBER. It is to strike out all of paragraph numbered (5)—sporting goods, tennis racquets, and so forth.

Mr. REED. The Senator does not propose to leave any taxes on tennis racquets, nets, and so forth.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is correct.

Mr. REED. Is it proposed to take the tax off of pianos and organs also?

Mr. McCUMBER. Not yet. Wait until we come to that. There is no proposition thus far to take off that tax.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state the inquiry.

Mr. MOSES. Just what is the status of the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota? Does it include paragraph 4?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It does not. The amendment to which the Senator from North Dakota refers relates merely to paragraph (5).

Mr. REED. I know that the Senator from North Dakota will be very candid with me. He is attacking one paragraph of a title, that title containing many things. He is proposing to strike out the tax on sporting goods. I desire to know whether substantially all the title is to be stricken out and whether we are merely getting rid of the excise taxes, or whether we are getting rid of excise taxes upon sporting goods, and propose to leave that form of tax upon other goods which are more necessary.

Mr. McCUMBER. If the Senator will take the list that is printed, he will see the items that are proposed to be stricken out. There will be amendments all along through the title referred to and it is impossible for me to answer the Senator and say just what is proposed to be stricken out. However, there will now be a large number of amendments to strike out certain sections of the excise tax provision.

I will state to the Senator, though I think he has the list now before him, that if he will read the list he will see that it would include sporting goods, chewing gum, photographic apparatus and accessories, candy selling in excess of 40 cents per pound, electric fans, thermos bottles, smokers' articles, hunting and shooting garments, articles made of fur, toilet soaps and soap powders, tooth and mouth washes, dentifrices, tooth pastes, and toilet powders; a reduction of tax on sculpture, paintings, statuary, art porcelains, and bronzes, from 10 to 5 per cent; a repeal of the 5 per cent tax on motion-picture films leased, and a repeal of the stamp tax on parcel-post packages.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I thank the Senator. He has, as usual, been very courteous. The point that I had in mind is now made plain to me. As I understand it, the program is to reduce the tax upon works of art, to take the tax entirely off of sporting goods, chewing gum, and articles of that kind, so the proposed amendment ought to be discussed in the light of the program which has been agreed upon.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is true.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. MOSES. Of course, I understand that the list of articles which are to be exempted from the excise tax, which the Senator from North Dakota has just read, is more or less sacrosanct, because it represents the view of a majority of the majority of the committee. It is a somewhat novel procedure in the Senate, I assume, to make privileged an amendment adopted only by a majority of the majority. Nevertheless, assuming that to be the case, I wish the Senator from North Dakota might set aside that privileged proceeding and allow the committee to go through Title IX in some degree of order by taking up the paragraphs in sequence, because there are some Senators on this side who wish to offer amendments striking out and reducing the excise tax on all the articles enumerated in Title IX.

If, however, the amendments thus adopted by a majority of the committee are to be privileged, we may have a very helter-skelter method of approach to the articles embraced in this title.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I think the Senator understands as well as I do the rules of the Senate. If an amendment is not a committee amendment, of course, it has no privilege whatever. The amendment which I am now offering not being a committee amendment but one of a list of amendments some of which are termed the so-called "bloc" amendments——

Mr. MOSES. Which "bloc," may I ask?

Mr. McCUMBER. I am offering them, inasmuch as I have charge of the bill now, as the chairman of the committee is at present necessarily absent from the Senate. I myself may not agree with all of them, but I think the Senator from New Hampshire has made a very good suggestion; and if he shall ask unanimous consent that we may take up this entire title and dispose of it without reference to committee amendments, starting from the beginning, I certainly shall not object, and would agree most heartily with the proposed procedure.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, I ask such unanimous consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent for the consideration of Title IX, beginning with section 1. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. MOSES. Then the Secretary will read the paragraphs one by one for suggested amendments from the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read paragraph 1.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, just a moment, in order that we may understand the matter. The program which has been outlined embraces the levying of taxes upon automobiles, trucks, and automobile wagons. Whatever an automobile may be, an automobile truck is not a luxury; it is employed in business just as much as is a steam engine employed in business.

We come, then, to the question of pianos, graphophones, phonographs, and music boxes. They relate to the cultivation of the finer qualities of the human mind; they are educational in their character, and ought not to be taxed unless it is necessary to tax them in order to raise revenue.

Mr. EDGE. Will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. REED. I will gladly yield if the Senator wants to ask me a question about this matter.

Mr. EDGE. Will the Senator yield for a question in relation to what he is discussing?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. EDGE. I think, perhaps, the object of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES] in asking to go back and take up Title IX in order was that we might reach section 4 with reference to a tax on musical instruments. I have in my hand an amendment to strike out section 4 of Title IX, in its entirety—that is, from line 7 to line 12—and when we reach that point I propose to offer that amendment.

Mr. MOSES. A point of order, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would like to make a statement. The Chair finds that the situation is this: The Senate has made certain amendments to Title IX, on page 196, beginning with line 8 and going down to and including line 14, on page 197.

Mr. MOSES. Have those amendments already been agreed to?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. They have been agreed to. It will, therefore, be necessary in order to proceed in the manner suggested by request of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES] to reconsider the vote by which those amendments were adopted.

Mr. McCUMBER. I understood, of course, that when the Senator from New Hampshire wished to consider this title it was with the intention simply to consider that part of the title which we had not already passed upon. We had only passed upon a little more than one page of it, and I assumed that the Senator would desire to go right along from that point. It seems to me that we had better go through with the title, taking it up without respect to the committee amendments, from where we left off when the title was last before the Senate. Then, when we have gone through with it, the Senator from New Hampshire can ask to reconsider the amendment in relation to automobiles, and so forth, if he desires.

Mr. MOSES. If the statement which has just been made by the Chair is completely accurate, the Senate has agreed to nothing with reference to these taxes except the language—

That from and after January 1, 1922, there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid—

Mr. WADSWORTH. The whole page was agreed to.

Mr. MOSES. I thought the Chair stated it was agreed to down to and including line 15 on page 196.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Chair did not say that.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Chair said down to line 15, on page 197.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The announcement of the Chair was that the Senate had agreed to Title IX, down to and including line 14, on page 197.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. One at a time.

Mr. MOSES. I move that the Senate reconsider the vote by which paragraph 4, page 197, was agreed to.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. If in order, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. McCUMBER. The question of taxes upon automobiles involves about $125,000,000 of revenue. That amendment has already been adopted, and before I could consent again to open up that subject I should have to see what we were going to do with the other excise taxes. So I object to the reconsideration of that provision at the present time.

Mr. MOSES. I am not objecting at the minute to the imposition of the tax which the bill proposes upon automobiles, and so forth. I am moving to reconsider the vote whereby paragraph 4, on page 197, was agreed to. That is the tax upon pianos, organs, and so forth.

Mr. McCUMBER. Paragraph 4 has not been agreed to as an amendment; that is a part of the House text.

Mr. MOSES. Then I desire to ask a further parliamentary inquiry. In view of the action already taken and the amendments made to Title IX, can I now move to strike out paragraph 4?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes.

Mr. MOSES. I wish to move to strike that paragraph out.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. The Secretary has an amendment which I have offered striking out paragraph 4.

Mr. MOSES. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 197, it is proposed to strike out paragraph 4, as follows:

(4) Pianos, organs (other than pipe organs), piano players, player pianos, graphophones, phonographs, talking machines, music boxes, and records used in connection with any musical instrument, piano player, player piano, graphophone, phonograph, or talking machine, 5 per cent.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I should like to know just when I lost the floor for the offering of the amendment. I yielded for a question to the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair was under the impression that the Senator from Missouri had taken his seat.

Mr. REED. I did not; but I have been good natured about it. I shall conclude, however, what I have to say in a very few minutes.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. No; I shall not yield again; I am afraid to yield to the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. EDGE. Far be it from me to take the floor from the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. I know the Senator did not mean to do so, but I wish to conclude what I was saying.

Here is a proposition which, taken broadly, proposes to retain a tax, first, upon many articles of prime necessity; and, second, upon instruments of music and upon works of art, and then proposes to take every penny of tax off of chewing gum and sporting goods. That is the proposition. It is proposed to retain the tax upon a little statue that might be used to beautify a home, but we are to take the tax off of baseball bats and tennis rackets and skis.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. And dice.

Mr. REED. And dice and playing cards and articles of that kind. We are to put a tax on pianos, and take it off of billiard tables. I have said enough to illustrate the scheme, and do not care to take the time of the Senate further.

So far as I am concerned, however, if we must tax all of these things in order to get revenue to run the Government, well and good; but if we do not need to tax all of these things, then let us take the tax off of the necessities, let us take the tax off of art and of music, and let us keep the tax on baseball bats and billiard tables and toboggans and canoe paddles and polo mallets and gloves, which I suppose means boxing gloves, and masks. By all means take the tax off of masks—I can see now why there should be a desire to make masks cheap [laughter]—and basket-ball goals and uniforms, and golf bags and clubs, and keep it on every instrument of music; keep it on the auto trucks that a man buys to haul his produce to town or to haul his goods about town; keep it on a statue of Venus de Milo, but take it off of billiard balls, pool balls, and billiard tables, and games and parts of games, except playing cards and children's toys. Keep it on toys by all means—the toy that the little toddler passes the hours away with and in a manner educates himself by playing with—keep it on the baby's toys and take it off of basket balls, and do not forget to take it off of billiard tables.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, will the Senator point out to me where the tax is kept upon toys?

Mr. REED. I will ask the Senator to read the twenty-fourth line on page 197.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is an exception.

Mr. McCUMBER. That does not impose a tax; that is the present law.

Mr. REED. That is the bill.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is the present law, and the committee moves to strike it out and except toys from taxation. It is proposed to strike out the whole provision.

Mr. REED. It is not proposed to strike out the exception, is it?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; to strike out the entire provision.

Mr. REED. Very well; if it is proposed to strike out the exception along with the subject matter itself, that is some improvement, but I think the exception only happened to be stricken out because it happened to be included in the provision. I do not think anybody ever thought of it until this minute. Think of a man who would draw a bill in that way to start with, taking the tax off of tennis racquets and putting it on children's toys; that is the sort of bill that was brought in here.

Mr. President, that is all I wish to say about it.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Vote!

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I wish again to ask the Senator from Missouri where he finds justification for stating that a tax is imposed on children's toys when children's toys are especially excepted from the tax?

Mr. REED. It is proposed to leave the section in, is it not?

Mr. McCUMBER. No.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Vote!

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota desire the question to be put on the amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. McCUMBER. I would just as lief that be acted upon first.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Jersey, which the Secretary will state.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 197, after line 6, it is proposed to strike out:

(4) Pianos, organs (other than pipe organs), piano players, player pianos, graphophones, phonographs, talking machines, music boxes, and records used in connection with any musical instrument, piano player, player piano, graphophone, phonograph, or talking machine, 5 per cent.

Mr. McCUMBER. If that paragraph be stricken out, Mr. President, it will mean the loss of $12,000,000 of revenue.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey.

The amendment was agreed to.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. In the next paragraph there are four amendments offered by the committee printed in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments will be considered en bloc. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments to paragraph (5), Title IX, page 197.

The amendments were rejected.

Mr. McCUMBER. I now move to strike out subdivision (5).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out subdivision (5), or all of lines 15 to 25, both inclusive, on page 197, and lines 1 to 5, both inclusive, on page 198.

Mr. REED. How much revenue will that lose, may I ask the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The estimate for 1921, may I say, is $4,283,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. REED. I should like to have a yea-and-nay vote on that.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. REED. This is a motion to strike out the tax on sporting goods.

Mr. ASHURST. Let it be stated, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays have been ordered. The Secretary will state the amendment.

Mr. ASHURST. There are four amendments in the paragraph which it is proposed to strike out.

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; they have all been rejected. The question is on striking out the entire paragraph.

Mr. ASHURST. Let the paragraph be read.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. As it now stands the paragraph reads:

(5) Tennis rackets, nets, racket covers and presses, canoe paddles and cushions, polo mallets, golf bags and clubs, lacrosse sticks, balls of all kinds, including tennis, golf, lacrosse, billiard and pool balls, fishing rods and reels, billiard and pool tables, chess and checker boards and pieces, dice, games and parts of games (except playing cards and children's toys and games), and all similar articles commonly or commercially known as sporting goods except skates, snowshoes, skis, toboggans, baseball bats, gloves, masks, protectors, shoes and uniforms, football helmets, harness, uniforms and goals, basketball goals and uniforms, baseballs, basketballs, and footballs, 5 per cent.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, all I desire is that we understand that the articles named under the amendment, these sporting goods, bear a 5 per cent tax under the bill as reported; and we are now asked to strike out the provision which levies a 5 per cent tax upon these sporting goods. Under the present law they pay 10 per cent.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. And it will sacrifice $2,000,000 of revenue.

Mr. REED. Four million two hundred and eighty-three thousand dollars.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do not know where the Senator gets those figures.

Mr. REED. They were given to me by the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH].

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I think it is $2,000,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] to strike out paragraph (5). On that question the yeas and nays have been ordered. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before, I vote "yea."

Mr. HALE (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before, I vote "yea."

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. SIMMONS (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before with reference to my pair and its transfer, I vote "nay."

Mr. TRAMMELL (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before as to my pair and its transfer, I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MCKELLAR. The junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] is unavoidably detained from the Chamber. I have a pair with him for the evening. If he were present, he would vote "yea" and I would vote "nay." I am going to transfer my pair with him to the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I desire to announce that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] is necessarily absent. He is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS]. If the Senator from Mississippi were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. MCCUMBER (after having voted in the affirmative). I transfer my general pair with the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] to the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CROW] and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Making the same announcement as before with reference to my pair and its transfer, I vote "yea."

Mr. TRAMMELL. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. FLETCHER]. He is paired with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL].

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH];

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL] with the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER];

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL];

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON];

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]; and

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

The result was announced—yeas 31, nays 30, as follows:

YEAS—31.

Brandegee	Hale	McLean	Shortridge
Calder	Harreld	Moses	Smoot
Cameron	Keyes	New	Sutherland
Edge	Lenroot	Nicholson	Wadsworth
Ernst	Lodge	Oddie	Warren
Fernald	McCormick	Phipps	Watson, Ind.
France	McCumber	Poindexter	Weller
Frelinghuysen	McKinley	Pomerene

NAYS—30.

Ashurst	Gooding	McKellar	Stanley
Broussard	Harris	McNary	Swanson
Bursum	Heflin	Myers	Townsend
Capper	Jones, N. Mex.	Newberry	Trammell
Caraway	Jones, Wash.	Overman	Walsh, Mass.
Curtis	Kendrick	Reed	Watson, Ga.
Dial	Kenyon	Sheppard
Gerry	La Follette	Simmons

NOT VOTING—35.

Ball	Fletcher	Norbeck	Smith
Borah	Glass	Norris	Spencer
Colt	Harrison	Owen	Stanfield
Crow	Hitchcock	Page	Sterling
Culberson	Johnson	Penrose	Underwood
Cummins	Kellogg	Pittman	Walsh, Mont.
Dillingham	King	Ransdell	Williams
du Pont	Ladd	Robinson	Willis
Elkins	Nelson	Shields

So Mr. MCCUMBER's amendment was agreed to.

Mr. REED. I reserve the amendment just agreed to for a separate vote in the Senate.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The next amendment is, on page 198, where the committee proposes, beginning on line 6, to insert the following subdivision:

(6) Chewing gum or substitutes therefor, 2 per cent.

Mr. MCCUMBER. Mr. President, I ask that that amendment be rejected.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator a question. That would leave the present tax, would it?

Mr. MCCUMBER. No; it would leave no tax.

Mr. REED. No tax at all?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It would make chewing gum free.

Mr. MCCUMBER. It would leave it just as the House left it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. REED. How much revenue do we lose?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. We sacrifice a million dollars in revenue on chewing gum.

Mr. REED. I made some remarks about it the other day, which I think fully cover the question. This is a million dollars out of the revenue. All I ask is the yeas and nays upon the question.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, this is a proposition to which the Senator from Missouri addressed himself a few days ago. The head of one of these chewing-gum trusts was very prominent in the Republican campaign last fall. He played a very important and conspicuous part about Marion, Ohio, and, as I said the other day, was inviting people to come over and hear the President speak from the front porch.

Mr. CARAWAY. Not many went, did they?

Mr. HEFLIN. Well, a good many went over upon the invitation of this chewing-gum magnate. Mr. President, the concern which he controls is about to be exempted entirely. I understand that it pays more than a million dollars taxes to the Government. This is one tax that the manufacturer can not pass on to the consumer. We have been collecting this tax of a million dollars a year and chewing gum remained at 5 cents a pack. If the tax is taken off the public will continue to pay 5 cents a pack and the Chewing Gum Trust will keep the million dollars that we now get in the form of taxes to help pay the war debt and run the Government. You have just exempted billiard balls and billiard cues in gambling rooms. You have taken off the big excess-profits tax. You have given the profiteer a clean bill of health and he goes tax free. You are permitting the good-roads appropriation bill to be held up at the other end of the Capitol. You have permitted the currency to be contracted and credits to be curtailed, and as a result of that the farmers of the South and West are forced to sell their products below the cost of production.

The Chewing Gum Trust is to be exempt; the necessities of life are to be taxed. We are going to have the sales tax, which I referred to in a speech here a few days ago. The Senator from Utah has suggested a manufacturers' tax, and in the speech I made I told how that would soon be passed on to the consumer. The Washington Post said the tax they would propose would be paid at the counter by the consumer.

So the necessities of life are to bear the brunt and burden of this tax bill. The excess-profits tax is gone out of the bill and $450,000,000 that we got from this source is lost to the Government. The profiteer is pleased. He is in favor with the Republican Party. The billiard ball man comes in, bows and smiles and gets what he wants, puts on his kid gloves and his high silk hat, picks up his gold-headed cane, and walks out. The auto trucks in which the farmer must haul his cotton and grain are to be taxed, but billiard balls and billiard cues and chewing gum kings all escape the heavy hand of taxation under the reign of the Republican Party.

I understand that you have taken the tax off of dice. The crap shooter is encouraged to break the law. The Republican Party gives aid and comfort to him. The other night you put a tax on medicine. You did not even know that you were taxing all the preparations of medicines that have vinous liquors in them, but it was discovered by us Democrats. The Senator from Florida and I first discovered it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Did the Senator say he discovered vinous liquor?

Mr. HEFLIN. We discovered that you were going to tax vast quantities of medicine that contained vinous liquor, which would have been a tax upon the sick.

My friend Senator TRAMMELL and I said, "There is something wrong with that thing." He said, "I will go down and get it and see just what it is." He copied it and came back and said, "It is wrong. It takes in all these mixtures and taxes the medicine itself." So I made a motion to reconsider the vote by which that amendment was passed.

You were going to tax the medicine of the poor. Under your reign you are making it so difficult to make a living that the average man and woman would be denied the necessities of life, and battling with the terrible things with which they have to come in contact they lose their strength, fall by the wayside, get sick, go to bed, and then they must have medicine, the doctor prescribes it, and you had a tax on it. May the Lord have mercy on the Republican Party!

Now you come and exempt the Chewing Gum Trust. You have just exempted the billiard balls and billiard cues and gambling halls of the country, and now you are going to take the tax off the chewing-gum magnates, who wore high hats in your campaign last fall and contributed to the campaign fund of the Republican Party.

Mr. President, some of us have been fighting this bill for weeks, but I suppose you will pass it. The people are fortunate in that there is a judgment day coming for you; fortunate in that you will soon have to pass muster at the ballot box. Then you will have to give an account of your stewardship.

I know it is easy now for those who have the ear of some of the subsidized press that comes around this Chamber and asks to have put in the bill what they want and weed out what they do not want, but there is a day coming when we are going to arraign you at the judgment bar of the people.

Then I want every man whose millions you have exempted from taxes to vote the Republican ticket and I want every man of small capital and every man of moderate means and every consumer in the country who has had to pay the taxes you have imposed upon him or her to vote the Democratic ticket, and then we will have 15,000,000 majority, or maybe 30,000,000, instead of the 7,000,000 majority that you received last fall. Let all the profiteers, let all the trust magnates, let all the tariff barons, the chewing-gum kings, and money lords vote the Republican ticket, and let the honest men and women in the country who believe in justice and fairness in governmental affairs vote the Democratic ticket, and we will drive the profiteers and trust magnates out of control at the Capitol, as Christ drove the money changers out of the temple at Jerusalem. So far as you have gone you have been weighed in the balance and found wanting.

I never knew a party to be so reckless. You seem to be running away from everything that is fair and just. Senators, you are going to find thousands and hundreds of thousands of Republicans, men and women, who are not going to stomach this bill that you are putting upon the people. If any man dares to stand here and plead for justice, some highbrow suggests that he is a demagogue, but if he gets up and says that big wealth should be exempt and that he wants to put the burden upon the masses they will say, "You know, that fellow is a real statesman." We have a kid-glove and dollar aristocracy, you know, that feels that the Government should be run for their special benefit. This Government belongs to the American people and it ought to be operated for the benefit of the people.

The time will come again when it will be popular for a man to stand here and plead for the rights of the people. The people have the right to demand that those in control of their Government shall not operate it in the interest of a favored few. They want capital to have due consideration and fair treatment at the hands of the Government, but they do not believe that capital is more sacred than human rights and human life. They do not believe that capital should be permitted to defy the Government and refuse to pay its fair share of the taxes. When war comes we compel the man power of the country to respond, and I submit, Mr. President, that when a boy is compelled to fight to preserve our institutions and prevent their overthrow the debt we incur while he is offering his life for his country ought to be honestly met by those whose wealth is protected, and a party that will shield the slacker capitalist, who is worse than the boy who sought to escape service because he feared that he would lose his life, is an enemy to the country. The capitalist who tries to shirk his duty in this regard is indeed a miserable slacker.

I hold that it is just and right for a boy to fight for his country, and I hold that it is just and right for those who have the means to pay the debts incurred in the battle that saved the life of the country. Senators, you are going to have to meet the record that you are here making out on the firing line in the next battle of the ballots. When we assemble around the ark of the covenant where the ballots are deposited that will register the will of the American people, all that you are doing here now will rise up to haunt you. You have carried out your pledges to those who have contributed to your campaign funds; but what about the millions who voted the Republican ticket under the promise that you would give them a fair deal and administer the Government in a spirit of fairness and justice? And now you are in power what have we got? Paralyzed industries, curtailed credit, contraction of the currency, stagnation of business, dead agriculture, millions of unemployed. They can not even get money to carry on cooperative road building in the various States, and the soldiers in session out at Kansas City find the party in power ready to table an amendment that asks for them a fair and just settlement, while billiard balls are being exempt from taxation, and billiard cues go tax free, and dice are placed on the free list. Verily, you are making a glorious record.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I regret very much that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] descends from his lofty position as the defender of the poor man's medicine with only a reasonable quantity of spirituous liquor therein and becomes an advocate upon the floor of the Senate of the cause of the Wrigley Chewing Gum Co. The Senator undoubtedly does not fully realize just exactly the present condition of the chewing-gum industry. There is one great trust that the Senator speaks of. That trust is the Wrigley Co. That trust has driven out of business practically every other one of the great companies. There is only one that is still struggling for an existence against it.

The Wrigley Chewing Gum Co. is rather desirous of keeping the tax upon chewing gum. With its enormous business it is able to pay it. The smaller concerns all over the country are unable to pay it and continue. Let us remember that the chewing gum is the child's gum, and the greater quantity of it is sold in sticks that cost 1 penny. That is the universal price. It stayed at 1 penny during all the inflation of prices, and it still remains 1 penny per stick. That is what the child pays. While some gum is sold in little packages for 5 cents, the rule is that the great majority is sold for 1 penny per stick.

I have a list here of all the chewing-gum companies doing business in the United States two years ago. There were at that time 204 companies, little companies and all. In the last two years 116 of these gum companies failed or stopped manufacturing. One hundred and sixteen out of two hundred and four have gone to the wall, and just to the extent that you can drive out the little concerns that manufacture throughout the United States, just to that extent are you building up the great Wrigley Co., because it gets the customers that the others had. If there were 204 companies manufacturing chewing gum in the United States two years ago and 116 of them have gone out of business, you have just to that extent practically increased the business of the Wrigley Co.

Now, there is another company, the most important company, the American Chicle Co. That attempted to unite a number of little corporations and manufacturers into one greater company to be able to compete with the Wrigley Co. Two years ago I think they had about 20 factories. I am informed that to-day they have 3 and those only running half the time.

I do not desire to play with figures or to try the rich and the poor. I assume that gum will still be sold, if it is sold at all, by these companies to the child for a penny, but it is only a question whether one great company shall do all the selling, because with its increased business it can stand the tax, or whether it may be distributed among the 116 companies that went out of business because they were unable to pay it.

Mr. President, that is practically all there is in it. Not being a gum chewer myself I have not taken a great deal of interest in the chewing-gum question heretofore, but when I see 116 companies—some pretty fair size and some rather small—going to the wall, and they can not pass the tax on because they have to sell their gum at the same price, 5 cents a package, or 1 penny per stick, I think that it is time we called a halt and say that we will not levy a tax that will drive practically all of the companies out of existence that their business may go to one that is sufficiently capitalized or which is doing business on such an enormous scale that it can still pay the tax and absorb the other companies.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TOWNSEND in the chair). The question is on the amendment offered by the committee.

Mr. SIMMONS. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. WADSWORTH. May we have the question stated?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the pending amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 198 the committee proposes to insert after line 5 the following:

(6) Chewing gum or substitutes therefor, 2 per cent.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, in what form is the question to be put, on a motion to strike out or a motion to agree to the committee amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

Mr. REED. In what form is the motion put? Is it a motion to strike out or a motion to agree to the amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

Mr. REED. I am confused about what is the committee amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was the committee amendment which was read.

Mr. REED. Very well. Then a vote to keep the tax on chewing gum would be a vote "yea" and a vote to take the tax off would be a vote "nay." So we now understand it.

The Assistant Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. REED. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. REED. A dispute has arisen. Is the question on a motion to agree or to disagree?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is a motion to agree to the committee amendment.

The Assistant Secretary resumed the calling of the roll.

Mr. EDGE (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to my pair and its transfer as on the former vote, I vote "nay."

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before relative to my pair and its transfer, I vote "nay."

Mr. HALE (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to my pair and its transfer as previously, I vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as I have previously made of my pair with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] and its transfer to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE], I vote "yea."

Mr. SIMMONS (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to my pair and its transfer as heretofore, I vote "yea."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as heretofore with reference to my pair and its transfer, I vote "nay."

Mr. TRAMMELL (when his name was called). Making the same announcement with regard to my pair and its transfer as on the last ballot, I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. McCUMBER (after having voted in the negative). Transferring my pair as on the previous vote, I will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. FERNALD (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES]. I see he is absent from the Chamber, and I transfer that pair to the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. GERRY. I desire to announce that the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES], if present, I am informed would vote "yea."

I also desire to state that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS]. If present, the Senator from Mississippi would also vote "yea."

Mr. CURTIS. I am requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH];

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL] with the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER];

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS];

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL]; and

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

The result was announced—yeas 25, nays 34, as follows:

YEAS—25.

Ashurst	Jones, Wash.	Overman	Townsend
Broussard	Kendrick	Pomerene	Trammell
Capper	Kenyon	Reed	Walsh, Mass.

So the committee amendment was rejected.

The next amendment passed over was, on page 198, to strike out lines 8 and 9, as follows:

SEC. 803. Subdivision (7) of section 900 of the revenue act of 1918 is amended to read as follows:

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment passed over will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 198 the committee propose to insert, beginning in line 12——

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, as I understand under the unanimous-consent agreement, reached about an hour ago, it is in order for me to move to strike out lines 10 and 11 on page 198.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that such a motion is in order.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Then I move to strike out lines 10 and 11, which impose a 10 per cent tax upon "cameras, weighing not more than 100 pounds, and lenses for such cameras."

The provision that the tax shall apply to cameras "weighing not more than 100 pounds" is quite without effect, for there are scarcely any cameras made at all that weigh more than 100 pounds; in fact, I can not think of any business that uses a camera weighing more than 100 pounds. So, as a matter of fact, to all intents and purposes, these two lines tax all cameras that are made.

An impression also exists that cameras, like sporting goods, are used only for purposes of pleasure and recreation, in connection with picnics, and pastimes of the people. That, Mr. President, is erroneous to a very large extent. The cameras which are taxed under this provision include cameras used in hospitals for the taking of X-ray pictures and for other scientific purposes in and out of hospitals.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield for a question.

Mr. McKELLAR. I would like to ask the Senator if the same reasoning would not apply to the next item, subdivision (8), referring to photographic films and plates?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think it does to a certain extent, but the taxes on the two are different. On cameras a 10 per cent tax is imposed and on photographic films and plates a 5 per cent tax is imposed; so that I thought I could emphasize the real point a little better by first taking up the paragraph dealing with cameras. I think no one will doubt that a 10 per cent manufacturers' tax is an extremely heavy imposition against a legitimate business which meets the wants and desires of scores and thousands of people engaged in business, for whom the camera is a necessity. Witness the great publishers' business. Hundreds of thousands of photographs are required for publications. They are taken by men and women who make a living in that business. They do not take photographs as a mere pastime, as is the case when a picnic party take along a little kodak camera and take 10 or 12 pictures during a day; but the use of the camera has become essential to the carrying on of many lines of business. It strikes me that a 10 per cent tax is indefensible upon these articles.

In addition to that, Mr. President, while I assume that an estimate has been made that this tax will raise $800,000, that must be based upon the assumption that the business of manufacturing cameras is in the same condition that it was a year ago. The fact is that the manufacture of cameras has almost completely ceased in this country, for the simple reason that people can not buy them; and to add 10 per cent to the cost of making a camera through a measure of taxation such as this will simply result in their complete elimination.

I know that probably when we talk about the manufacture of cameras some Senators have a certain great camera-manufacturing concern in their minds—the Eastman Kodak Co. The Eastman Kodak Co. to-day, in their great plant at Rochester, are employing about 150 men in the manufacture of cameras, where ordinarily they employ 3,000. I happen to know about that, because I live somewhere near that city and have encountered those conditions there.

This tax will not raise any money from them, and, indeed, if anyone can survive it, it will be that concern. Their competitors can not pay the 10 per cent tax; they are practically all closed down now, owing to the peculiarly hard times that are existing in that business. If we impose a 10 per cent tax, if any concern can pay it at all it will be what is left of that big concern, for the little ones can pay nothing and will make no cameras.

I think we are apt to view this matter from the wrong angle. These instruments are used by thousands and thousands of people in their business, and a 10 per cent manufacturers' tax imposed upon a business which is a real business is too high.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator a question or two about this matter. If I understand correctly, there is practically only one company now in the United States which is manufacturing these kodaks.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is, kodaks.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes. Well, they are cameras.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; but there are several other companies that make cameras.

Mr. McCUMBER. I understand that practically all the business is done through this one company; that they will not sell to any retailer who handles anything but the Eastman kodak; and I further understand that they have organized a selling company, and the manufacturer sells all the product to one great company, and that company sells to the retailer, and so they fix their own prices. My information is that there is absolutely no competition and that it is a very profitable concern, although at the present time, with the general slacking in business, of course it is not selling the number of kodaks or cameras that it sold a few years ago.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have given the Senator the information which I gathered in the neighborhood where a goodly portion of this industry is carried on. I can not deny or affirm the Senator's statement about the methods of retailing the products of the concern. I do not know.

Mr. GERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. In just a moment. I seem to have some recollection that the Federal Government brought a suit against, I think, this company, the Eastman Co.—perhaps I am wrong about it—and that the practice that was complained of was terminated; but that, I will say, is merely a recollection. The Senator has taken me without information on that question; but the basic facts are not disturbed by the observations of the Senator from North Dakota. You are taxing the manufacture of a legitimate article 10 per cent which I submit is twice as high as any other thing taxed as a manufacturers' tax in this bill.

Mr. GERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. GERRY. The Senator from North Dakota will correct me if I am in error, but my recollection is that when this matter was before the committee the testimony of the experts was to the effect that this tax was practically all paid by one big corporation, the Eastman Kodak Co., and that there had been no protest against the tax, and it was felt that a certain amount of money could be raised without stopping the manufacture of the cameras. That, of course, is in contradiction to the statement the Senator from New York has just made.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The manufacture has almost ceased.

Mr. GERRY. That is my recollection of the testimony of the experts before the committee, and that is why the provision was put in the bill.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator from Rhode Island remembers it the same as I do. The amount involved, I think, is about $800,000, and I think it is practically all paid by one company.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That estimate is not worth the paper it is written on. You can not raise a tax on anything if it is not manufactured, and to all intents and purposes the manufacture of cameras has ceased. It is rather difficult to explain why a 10 per cent manufacturers' tax is placed upon this article when other manufactured articles, certainly of no more use to the public and many of them of much less use to the public, are taxed at a much lower rate. This is certainly a discrimination against an industry that is valuable to the people.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator whether he thinks that a tax of 10 per cent on a kodak, which is not at all a necessity and which is a small article, is in fact any higher tax than a tax of 3 per cent on an automobile truck which is to be employed in business?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator's question can not be answered either "yes" or "no," for this reason: He simply takes the kodak, which is a small article, and asks if a tax of 10 per cent is too much on that. The trouble is, this provision does not apply to the little kodaks alone. It applies to practically every camera that is used by anybody, and 10 per cent is too much. I am not in favor of the tax to which the Senator has just alluded. When I get a chance I shall vote to strike that out.

Mr. REED. I am not saying that the Senator is in favor of it, but I was trying to get a comparison. I did use the term "kodak," but let us apply it to all photographic instruments.

Here is a photographer who buys a costly instrument—I am going to assume that it is the very best—and he pays a 10 per cent tax upon it. He then starts in taking pictures and charging $125 a dozen for them, or something like that, where he used to charge $15. I am just comparing that tax with a tax which has been adopted—which the Senator, I am glad to know, says he will vote to take off—of 3 per cent on an automobile truck which may cost four or five thousand dollars, and which is an instrumentality of commerce and not a pleasure vehicle at all.

I confess that I would rather see the tax kept on photographic instruments than to see it kept on automobile trucks. The pleasure automobile is a different proposition. I just wanted to get the Senator's view on that point.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator and I feel pretty much like about this proposition. I do not like to see the products of a few legitimate businesses picked out and taxed. I do not see why the automobile truck should be picked out by the Congress and taxed any more than a vast number of articles should be taxed. Why are cameras, which professional photographers and scientists and physicians and surgeons and bacteriologists and publishers have to use, picked out and assessed a 10 per cent tax, twice as high as anything else in this bill? Is it an industry that amounts to nothing?

It is not true that they are used merely for playthings. Their principal use is in connection with legitimate business enterprises and scientific research. Mind you, the lenses are taxed here as well as the cameras. Would anyone say that the manufacture of lenses is conducive only to pleasure? Not at all. They are used in the most important research investigations, in the advancement of science, in all kinds of experiments, and in the professions; and yet the lenses are taxed 10 per cent. It is too much. I do not think we ought to do it.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, just a word as to the amendment offered by my colleague. He very truly says that the vast majority of these cameras—nearly 90 per cent, I am informed—are manufactured and sold in industry, and perhaps not more than 10 per cent are these little cameras that we see boys and girls carrying about. We levy a tax of 10 per cent on this article. We have already voted to relieve musical instruments—and I voted for it—from the tax levied upon them. We have voted to relieve sporting goods—and I voted for that amendment, too—from the tax. Now we have voted to relieve chewing gum of the tax, and under one of these amendments that are proposed we are going to relieve from the tax cigarette holders, merschaum pipes, shooting garments, riding habits, furs, and other things less necessary than this. It seems to me there can be no excuse for this tax being continued, and I hope it will not be.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH].

Mr. REED. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, just a word in reply to the statement made by the Senator from New York that this is a failing business. He stated, as I understood him, that the $800,000 revenue derived from this business was an estimate. We actually collected during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1921, $841,940.06 from the business.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is true.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. So it is not an estimate at all. Moreover, instead of the business running down, the very latest data which the Treasury Department can furnish shows that in the month of August, 1920, we collected $85,923.25 from that business, and in the month of August, 1921, $122,000.51. The business seems to be thriving. Apparently it has not come to a standstill.

I think the question with the Senate is whether we are just going to give up to this one company, which has not had the face to appear before the committee and ask for a reduction, $800,000 and better than that that we collect in revenue; and it is a single company, a complete monopoly. I think that is certain.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I want to say just a word about this matter.

The Senator from New York repeatedly asks, "Why single out this particular item for taxation?" I answer that by asking him, "Why single out this particular article for exemption from taxation from among the hundreds of articles in the present law, most of them continued in the pending bill, while keeping a tax on the other articles?"

Mr. WADSWORTH. I can answer that, so far as I am concerned, by saying that this is the first chance I have had to move to strike out anything of this kind. I am going to make some more motions before I get through. I am not singling this out.

Mr. SIMMONS. So far as the motion of the Senator from New York is concerned, it is not a case of singling this out for taxation, but it is a case of singling it out for exemption from taxation. I do not see any reason why this article should be singled out for exemption rather than the other items in these excise taxes and in these special taxes. I could enumerate them. There are hundreds of them.

Mr. WADSWORTH. We have not reached them yet.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SIMMONS. There are hundreds of articles just as useful as this, just as important as this, and just as much entitled to exemption from taxation, if we did not need the money, as this.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SIMMONS. I yield the floor. That is all I wish to say.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator should not give or seek to give to the Senate the impression that I am trying to single out this industry for exemption.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is the Senator's position, is it not?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is not, and it never has been.

Mr. SIMMONS. I understood the Senator to move that that article be stricken out of the bill and no tax imposed upon it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have, but it is not the only motion of the kind I am going to make.

Mr. SIMMONS. Why should the Senator make that motion as to this article rather than as to many of the other articles?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Because this is the first one that has been reached under these excise taxes. The Senator knows that. The Senator should not jump at conclusions quite so quickly.

Mr. SIMMONS. We have disposed of chewing gum.

Mr. WADSWORTH. We struck that out.

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes; that was stricken out.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the Senator from New York has said several times that it was not just to tax this article alone as much as 10 per cent. There are a great number of other articles in the bill which are taxed 10 per cent. There are firearms, shells, and others.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I may be mistaken about that. There are also dirks and bowie knives.

Mr. LODGE. And then the automatic slot machines are taxed 10 per cent.

Mr. WADSWORTH. If the Senator will permit me to go on, what I meant was that of all the articles used and necessary in professions and businesses and science in a normal way, I think this is taxed the highest. Bowie knives and dirks are not used or necessary in business. Daggers and dirk knives are taxed a hundred per cent. Bowie knives are taxed 10 per cent, and firearms 10 per cent.

Mr. LODGE. Automatic slot-weighing machines are also taxed 10 per cent.

Mr. WADSWORTH. One would scarcely say that they are necessary for the development of science.

Mr. LODGE. Not for the development of science.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Cameras are.

Mr. LODGE. Some cameras.

Mr. WADSWORTH. But all cameras are taxed.

Mr. LODGE. Yes; that is true.

Mr. WADSWORTH. And all lenses are taxed. If my recollection is correct, the present law does not tax lenses separately. I want to know why that item is singled out—and it is singled out—and lenses are not all made by the one concern which has been discussed here. Lenses are made by many concerns.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator from North Carolina a question about this matter. Is this such a tax that it can be passed on?

Mr. SIMMONS. Undoubtedly.

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not know whether it can be passed on, but I do know that a monopoly that has practically the entire trade of the United States, making enormous profits, can afford to pay the tax.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I want to say, in reply to the statement of the Senator from Wisconsin, when he remarked that this company had not appeared before the Finance Committee to protest against this tax, that they did come to Washington.

I happen to be the member of the committee that talked to them about it, and I told them at the time they were here that it was our purpose to continue the imposition of this tax. It was not until the committee had informally determined to recommend the abolition of certain taxes carried in the bill, as first determined by the committee, that they asked the Senators from their State to make this protest for them in behalf of the consuming public.

It is a fact that one company makes most of the cameras taxed under this provision, but it is also a fact that anybody anywhere in the country can set up opposition to them, as they can in any other manufacturing business of like nature. These people have built up a big industry in one city, employing vast numbers of men, paying good wages, and operating under the best of conditions.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, this debate simply demonstrates very conclusively that any attempt on the part of either the Finance Committee or the Senate to single out different manufacturing products is absolutely unscientific and can not be defended. One general sales tax on all manufactured articles will be, in my judgment, a final logical conclusion of a body which attempts to treat all business interests alike.

The Senator from North Carolina asked the Senator from New York why he particularly picked out this provision. As a matter of fact, the Senate to-night has voted on two sections of the bill relating to special war excise taxes. In the consideration of both of them the temper of the Senate seemed to be very emphatic against discriminatory taxes on this or that particular business.

Whatever the business may be, whatever it produces, it is legitimate under the laws of the land, and it seems to me that if we are going to attempt to legislate scientifically as to manufactured products, we must do it all along the line, and I am very glad, indeed, that the temper of the Senate developed to-night, because it looks to me more and more like a regular sales tax covering every product that our enterprising producers turn out.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, among these special taxes and the excise taxes there are a few taxes imposed upon luxuries, such as chewing gum, cameras, sporting goods, furs, and things of that sort; and they are all to be stricken out. But the stamp taxes that are imposed in this very section, the special documentary stamp taxes, are upon the business transactions of the people of this country; they are on the transactions that are taking place every day in every big institution that is engaged in business in this country; and they are to be retained.

The taxes the Senate is engaged in striking out now are luxury taxes, taxes upon things that the people do not need, taxes upon things that are not among the necessaries of life, taxes upon things that do not pertain to the business of the people of the country; and the most of them are controlled, as this one is, by a trust.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, does the Senator from North Carolina for one moment mean to infer that the manufacture and the subsequent use of the camera for the many purposes enumerated by the Senator from New York, which I will not take the time of the Senate to repeat, for the purposes of general development, uplift, social development, and scientific development, all connected with the use of the camera, are properly categoried under the title, "the manufacture and use of a luxury"?

Mr. SIMMONS. I say that the taxes which the majority members of the committee, after they had been imposed by the full committee, met and agreed to take off altogether or to reduce are luxury taxes. They are so described as luxury taxes, and it has been reported that the committee took the taxes off of these articles of luxury.

Mr. EDGE. Apparently the majority of the Senate up to date, as evidenced by three roll calls, does not agree with the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, we are at least enlightened in reference to one thing. The Senator from North Dakota a few minutes ago asked us to take the tax off chewing gum because it was a trust. He now wants to put the tax on cameras because they are made by a trust or a monopoly. It is enlightening to follow the reasoning which prompts them to take the tax off chewing gum because it is manufactured by a monopoly and to put it on cameras because they are manufactured by a monopoly.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I want to make just one observation in reply to the Senator from New Jersey. He tells us that there is no reason to single out this business from other business, and that we are now drifting, according to his idea, to the very sensible conclusion of a general sales tax.

I want to ask the Senator if he is in favor of a general sales tax, levying a flat rate regardless of the question of whether the article is a necessity or a luxury?

Mr. EDGE. I did not catch the question of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. The Senator has indicated that he is in favor of a general sales tax. Would he levy a flat rate upon all articles manufactured, or would he levy a rate which was heavy upon luxuries and light upon necessities?

Mr. EDGE. If I were preparing a general sales tax, I would entirely eliminate certain articles of necessity, food, and articles selling under a certain price. That would be my personal view of a general sales tax.

Mr. REED. After the Senator had gotten through with those, would he place everything else on a level?

Mr. EDGE. Yes; after I eliminated the articles that were deemed articles of necessity, in the way of food, and articles selling under certain prices, then I would tax all manufactured product alike.

Mr. REED. The Senator would tax a work of art just the same as he would tax an automobile truck; he would tax the steel that went into a house just exactly as he would tax something that a man did not need at all; billiard balls, for instance. That is illuminating, if that is the kind of a sales tax we are to have.

The thing I complain about is the fact that we are taking the taxes off of a luxury, and I do not agree with the argument of the Senators from New York that photographic instruments to be taxed under the bill are articles of high necessity. I do agree with them that some of them are used in taking X-ray pictures; but how many, what proportion?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Every hospital in the United States, practically, uses them.

Mr. REED. What proportion?

Mr. WADSWORTH. And in many physicians' and surgeons' offices they will be found. All the lenses that are made for them must be taxed under this provision.

Mr. McCUMBER. Permit me to say that a camera is not used in taking an X-ray picture.

Mr. REED. That was my understanding, but I was not certain about it. I undertake to say, Mr. President, that there are 5,000 kodaks where there is one photographic camera, and when you come to the photographic camera I shall not shed any tears over the photographer as long as he charges $125 for pictures which he used to make for $15 or $20, which may not have been quite so well finished in the past as they are now, but it took more work by the photographer, and the instrument was not as good.

If we are to get any taxes at all on things that are manufactured, the first thing to tax is something nobody needs, or that but very few people need. If you are going to tax automobile trucks, you ought to tax ordinary horse-drawn trucks. They are both in exactly the same class. Both of them are used in commerce and in business; but we have passed that without objection. We took the tax off of pianos without a record vote, a reduction in revenue of $12,000,000. I do think that pianos and musical instruments and works of art are entitled to such preferential treatment as we can give and yet raise the revenue for the country; but as between taxing them, things which can be done without, and taxing the instrumentalities of work, the tools with which men earn a livelihood, I would prefer taxing the piano and the violin. I think, Mr. President, the thing to do is to keep this tax on kodaks, just as a sample, at least, to show that we did not intentionally overlook this question.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER], now in charge of the bill, a question. We have been in session now 12 hours. It seems to me it is time to quit for the day, as we have done a very good day's work here, and I think very effectively.

Mr. McCUMBER. I appreciate that fact.

Mr. McKELLAR. I hope the Senator is not going to keep us here much longer. Some of us have been here the whole time, for 12 hours.

Mr. McCUMBER. I was hopeful that we might run on until midnight to-night, because we are so far behind where we ought to be in the bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. Thirteen hours! That is a very unlucky number.

Mr. McCUMBER. I appreciate that; and it is very hard when at work all the time, but I should like to have a vote upon this proposition at least before taking a recess.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] to strike out lines 10 and 11, on page 198.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, in order that we may all understand the vote to be cast, I desire to get the form of the motion.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The Senator from New York moves to strike out lines 10 and 11, which read as follows:

(7) Cameras, weighing not more than 100 pounds, and lenses for such cameras, 10 per cent.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Let us have a roll call on the question.

Mr. SIMMONS. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the principal legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. EDGE (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before with reference to my pair and transfer, I vote "yea."

Mr. HALE (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before, I vote "yea."

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before with reference to my pair with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] and its transfer, I vote "nay."

Mr. McCUMBER (when his name was called). Making the same announcement of my pair and transfer as on the previous vote, I vote "nay."

Mr. SIMMONS (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to my pair and transfer, I vote "nay."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before with reference to my pair and transfer, I vote "nay."

Mr. TRAMMELL (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as on the previous vote as to my pair and transfer, I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. WARREN. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN]. I observe that that Senator did not vote, and I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. FERNALD (after having voted in the negative). I have a pair with the senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES]. On this question I understand he would vote as I have voted, and I allow my vote to stand.

Mr. McLEAN. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS]. In his absence I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. SWANSON. My colleague [Mr. GLASS] is unavoidably detained from the Senate. I will let this announcement stand for the day. My colleague is paired with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM].

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Making the same announcement as before with reference to my pair and transfer, I vote "yea."

Mr. TRAMMELL. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. FLETCHER], who is paired with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL].

Mr. GERRY. I wish to announce that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS]. If the Senator from Mississippi were present he would vote "nay."

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH];

The senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL] with the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER];

The junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL];

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON];

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]; and

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

The result was announced—yeas 9, nays 44, as follows:

YEAS—9.

Brandegee	Edge	Hale	Moses
Calder	Frelinghuysen	Keyes	Wadsworth.
Cameron

NAYS—44.

Ashurst	Gooding	McKinley	Sheppard
Broussard	Harris	McNary	Simmons

Dillingham	King	Pittman	Walsh, Mont.
du Pont	Ladd	Ransdell	Warren
Elkins	McKellar	Robinson	Weller
Fletcher	McLean	Shields	Williams
Glass	Myers	Shortridge

So Mr. WADSWORTH'S amendment to the committee amendment was rejected.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I move to amend, in line 11, by striking out the numeral 10 and inserting the numeral 5, so that it will read:

(7) Cameras, weighing not more than 100 pounds, and lenses for such cameras, 5 per cent.

Of course, I realize perfectly well the prejudice that is present in this Chamber concerning this industry. Perfectly well I realize it. Senators have for certain reasons, and for those reasons alone, voted to tax it heavier than any other legitimate industry in the list of excise taxes. I am concerned with the people who are dependent upon the prosperity of that industry for their living. I know they are out of work to-day. These works are fast closing down. I now ask the Senate to cut this tax from 10 per cent to 5 per cent and put it on a parity with some of the other things in the bill which are not as legitimate as the business of manufacturing cameras.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from New York to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. WADSWORTH. On that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Assistant Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FERNALD (when his name was called). Transferring my pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES] to the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], I vote "yea."

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before with reference to my pair and its transfer, I vote "yea."

Mr. HALE (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before, I vote "yea."

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as on the previous vote with reference to my pair and its transfer, I vote "yea."

Mr. McLEAN (when his name was called). In the absence of my pair, the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS], I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. SIMMONS (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as heretofore in regard to my pair and its transfer, I vote "nay."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as heretofore in reference to my pair and its transfer, I vote "nay."

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). Again announcing my pair wth the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], I withhold my vote.

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 23, nays 30, as follows:

YEAS—23.

Brandegee	Frelinghuysen	McKinley	Shortridge
Calder	Hale	Moses	Smoot
Cameron	Jones, Wash.	New	Townsend
Edge	Keyes	Newberry	Wadsworth
Fernald	Lodge	Nicholson	Watson, Ind.

So Mr. WADSWORTH'S amendment to the committee amendment was rejected.

The amendment of the committee was agreed to.

INVESTIGATION OF INCAPACITATED SOLDIERS' RELIEF BUREAUS.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I ask unanimous consent to have printed 27,000 additional copies of the report No. 233, part 2, submitted by the special committee appointed to investigate the bureaus of the Government extending relief to wounded and incapacitated veterans of the World War, permission to print the report having been given on August 24.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the order will be made. The Chair hears no objection.

RECESS.

Mr. McCUMBER. I move the Senate take a recess until to-morrow morning at 11 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 11 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Tuesday, November 1, 1921, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, October 31, 1921.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, and was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore, Mr. WALSH.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Gracious Lord, we live because Thou hast not left us. Thy ways concerning us have been ways of compassion and Thy strength has been adjusted to our weakness. Be near us and we shall have no fear; let Thy light be about us and we shall see no darkness; rule over us and sin shall lose its power. O continue to be the ground of our faith and the sky of our hope. Create in every heart a prayer for wisdom and understanding. May we always speak words of truth and purity and never, no never, profane Thy holy name. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, October 28, was read and approved.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. HAWES. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. HAWES. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. On what subject, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. HAWES. It is an address of my own relating to the historical and legal aspects of religious freedom in this country. There is no partisan tone to it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

SWEARING IN OF MEMBER.

Mr. OLDFIELD. Mr. Speaker, Mr. CHESTER W. TAYLOR, who was elected a Member of this House on the 25th day of this month from the sixth district of Arkansas is present. I will state to the Speaker and to the House that there was no opposition to Mr. TAYLOR, and I ask unanimous consent that he be sworn in as a Member, although his certificate has not reached the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. TAYLOR appeared at the bar of the House and took the oath of office.

LEGAL HOLIDAY ON NOVEMBER 11, 1921.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House joint resolution 215.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of House joint resolution 215, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House joint resolution (H. J. Res. 215) to declare November 11, 1921, a legal public holiday.

Whereas armistice day, November 11, 1921, has been designated as the appropriate time for the ceremonies incident to the burial of the unknown and unidentified American soldier in the Arlington National Cemetery; and

Whereas this unknown soldier represents the manhood of America who gave their lives to defend its integrity, honor, and tranquillity against an enemy; and

Whereas the nations of the earth are on that date joining with the United States in paying respect and homage to this unknown soldier: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the President is hereby authorized to issue a proclamation declaring November 11, 1921, a holiday, as a mark of respect to the memory of those who gave their lives in the late World War, as typified by the unknown and unidentified American soldier who is to be buried in Arlington National Cemetery on that day; and the President is respectfully requested to recommend to the governors of the various States that proclamations be issued by them calling upon their people to pause in their usual pursuits as a mark of respect on this solemn occasion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, has this resolution been reported from the committee?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. With a slight clerical change, it is a report from the Committee on the Judiciary. It is unanimous.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. And it applies to only the next November 11, or is it permanent law?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Just this next November. Just one date. It does not make it permanent law.

Mr. SINNOTT. I noticed in the first part of the resolution—it may be in the title—it is referred to as a legal public holiday. In the latter part the President is authorized to call a public holiday.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I assume the resolution itself would control the recital in the whereases.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question is on the third reading of the resolution.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Is that a joint or concurrent resolution?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A joint resolution.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, is not there a committee amendment that should be acted on first?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. There is not a committee amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. What amendment is it?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Minnesota has asked for the present consideration of the resolution which was reported.

Mr. STAFFORD. If I understood the request of the gentleman from Minnesota it was to pass House joint resolution 212.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the resolution.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, has the stage of objection passed?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It has. Those opposed will answer "no." The "ayes" have it. The question is on the third reading of the resolution.

The resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. VOLSTEAD, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the resolution was passed was laid on the table.

UNANIMOUS CONSENT CALENDAR AND SUSPENSIONS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. By agreement previously entered into, business on the Unanimous Consent Calendar and suspensions are in order to-day.

ROADS BILL.

Mr. ROBSION, from the committee of conference, offered for printing under the rule the conference report and accompanying statement on the bill (S. 1072) to amend the act entitled "An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes," approved July 11, 1916, as amended and supplemented, and for other purposes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee reserves all points of order.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Kentucky yield?

Mr. ROBSION. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. May I ask the gentleman from Kentucky if it is his purpose to call up this conference report to-morrow?

Mr. ROBSION. To-morrow.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Immediately after the reading of the Journal?

Mr. ROBSION. Yes.

INCORPORATION OF THE GRAND ARMY OF THE REPUBLIC.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will call the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

The first business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 2908) for the incorporation of the Grand Army of the Republic.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to direct the attention of the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary to an amendment that has been reported to this bill.

The bill now up for consideration, pending an objection, is a bill providing for the incorporation of the Grand Army of the Republic. I notice that the committee has recommended two amendments, one of which I hardly think there is much necessity for and on which I wish to obtain the opinion of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD]. That is as to the need of requiring "as a condition precedent to the exercise of any power or privilege herein granted or conferred the Grand Army of the Republic shall file in the office of the secretary of state of each State the name and post-office address of an authorized agent in such State upon whom legal process or demands against the Grand Army of the Republic may be served."

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Personally I was opposed to that amendment, but it is harmless, as under State laws such things are required whenever they do business in a State.

Mr. STAFFORD. But this organization does not do business in the States, and the provisions of the State law that the gentleman refers to do not cover voluntary associations of this character.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Oh, yes; if they do any business——

Mr. STAFFORD. I never knew the Grand Army of the Republic to do any so-called business in a State.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. They may have buildings. They may want to rent property, and naturally they might be sued for rent and that sort of thing. I do not think there is any necessity for the amendment myself, but the committee thought otherwise. I do not think it is of much consequence one way or the other. The Grand Army is very anxious to have this incorporation.

Mr. STAFFORD. I could not see the need of it and I do not favor that proposition.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. STAFFORD. No. I was just calling the attention of the gentleman to the fact that it was not needed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the organization known as the Grand Army of the Republic, with a membership limited to persons who served as soldiers and sailors of the United States Army and Navy or Marine Corps and Revenue-Cutter Service between April 12, 1861, and April 9, 1865, in the war for the suppression of the rebellion, and of such State regiments as were called into active service and subject to the orders of the United States general officers between the dates mentioned, and have been honorably discharged therefrom after such service, is hereby created a body corporate and politic of the District of Columbia, by the name of "The Grand Army of the Republic," by which name it shall be a person in law, capable of suing and being sued, and of having and exercising all incidental powers as a litigant or otherwise, as if it were a natural person, with power to acquire by purchase, gift, devise, or bequest, and to hold, convey, or otherwise dispose of property, real or personal, as may be necessary or calculated to carry into effect the patriotic, fraternal, and charitable purposes of its organization as such purposes are avowed and declared in its rules and regulations.

SEC. 2. The supreme governing and controlling authority in said organization shall be the national encampment thereof, composed of representatives from the several department encampments, as are now or may hereafter be organized: Provided, That there shall never be any change in the plan of organization of said national encampment that shall materially change its present representative form of government or render possible the concentration of the control thereof in the hands of a limited number, or in a self-perpetuating body not representative of the membership at large.

SEC. 3. The qualifications for membership in said organization, except as they are limited by the provisions of section 1 of this act, and the rights and privileges of the members thereof, shall be such as are fixed by the laws, rules, and regulations adopted by said national encampment, and the meetings of said organization, whether for the transaction of business or otherwise, may be held at any place in the United States.

SEC. 4. The activities of said corporation shall be exercised through and by the following agencies, in accordance with the laws, rules, and regulations now in force, or such as may be hereafter enacted by the national encampment thereof, namely:

First. Through the national encampment, its officers and committees.

Second. Through such department encampments as may have been heretofore, or as may be hereafter organized, their officers and committees.

Third. Through such posts as may have been heretofore, or may be hereafter organized, their officers and committees.

Such department encampments shall be subject and subordinate in authority to the national encampment, and such posts shall be also subject to such control, exercised through the department encampment and department officers of the particular department to which it belongs.

SEC. 5. The corporate existence of the Grand Army of the Republic, and the exclusive rights of its surviving members to wear the insignia of membership therein, shall terminate only when the last of its members dies: Provided, however, That if at any national encampment hereafter held, a memorial shall be adopted by the vote of three-fourths of the members present, reciting that because of the decrease in its membership, or because of the age and infirmity of its surviving members, it is no longer advisable and practicable to hold future annual national encampments, such action shall not operate to deprive said organization of any of its corporate powers, but the government thereof may be modified to provide for such contingency, subject to the restrictions contained in section 2 of this act.

Provided, That nothing in this act shall in any manner affect the right, or the power of such posts or departments to dispose of, or the ownership of property held by any post or department in its own name, nor affect the right of such posts or departments to organize corporations under State laws for the purpose of caring for and disposing of such property.

SEC. 6. The national encampment may, by resolution, provide for the disposition and future ownership of its property and archives, and may declare the event in which such disposition shall become effective, and such ownership vested, and a duly authenticated copy of such resolution shall be filed in the office of the clerk of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia. Upon the happening of the event thus declared, and upon the filing of a petition in said supreme court reciting said facts, said court shall take jurisdiction thereof, and upon due and satisfactory proof being made the court shall enter a decree which shall be effectual to vest title and ownership in accordance with the provisions of such resolution.

With committee amendments, as follows:

Page 1, line 7, strike out the words "in the war for the suppression of the rebellion."

On page 5, after line 7, insert:

"SEC. 7. That the said corporation shall, on or before the 1st day of January in each year, make and transmit to the Congress a report of its proceedings for the preceding calendar year, including a full and complete report of its receipts and expenditures: Provided, however, That said report shall not be printed as a public document.

"SEC. 8. That as a condition precedent to the exercise of any power or privilege herein granted or conferred the Grand Army of the Republic shall file in the office of the secretary of state of each State the name and post-office address of an authorized agent in such State upon whom legal process or demands against the Grand Army of the Republic may be served.

"SEC. 9. That the right to repeal, alter, or amend this act at any time is hereby expressly reserved."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the first committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the next committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. OSBORNE, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

AGRICULTURAL ENTRIES ON COAL LANDS IN ALASKA.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the next bill, H. R. 7948, to provide for agricultural entries on coal lands in Alaska, be referred back to the Committee on the Public Lands.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Oregon asks unanimous consent that the next bill on the calendar be referred back to the Committee on the Public Lands. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7948) to provide for agricultural entries on coal lands in Alaska.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the reference?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill will be stricken from the calendar. The Clerk will call the next bill on the calendar.

SURVEY OF THE PUYALLUP RIVER, WASH.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 1578) to provide a preliminary survey of the Puyallup River, Wash., with a view to the control of its floods.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin objects. The bill is stricken from the calendar. The Clerk will report the next bill.

SURVEY OF THE COWLITZ RIVER, WASH.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 1577) to provide a preliminary survey of Cowlitz River, Wash., with a view to the control of its floods.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin objects. The Clerk will report the next bill.

JUDICIAL DISTRICTS IN TEXAS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 6679) to amend section 108 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. I ask that the bill be read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas asks that the bill be read.

Mr. STAFFORD. I reserve the right to object. Under reservation of an objection, I have no objection to its being read.

The bill was read.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas objects. The bill will be stricken from the calendar.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill retain its place on the calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that H. R. 6679 (Unanimous Consent Calendar 119) retain its place on the calendar. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

BRIDGE ACROSS PEARL RIVER, MISS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 2447) to authorize the construction of a bridge across Pearl River, between Meeks Ferry and Grigsbys Ferry and between Madison County, Miss., and Rankin County, Miss.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to inquire of the gentleman who reported this bill [Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi] as to the need for the language in line 5—

Connecting its timber holdings,

It is not customary to insert in the bill the purpose for which a bridge is constructed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, this bill was drawn by my colleague [Mr. COLLIER]. I think the language to which the gentleman refers is surplusage. I do not think it is necessary. I understand that the people who seek to have this bill passed own the timber on both sides of the river, and that the bridge would connect these two bodies of land. I do not think it is necessary to include that language in drawing the bill, and I have no objection to having it stricken out.

Mr. STAFFORD. The bill describes the location where the bridge is to be established?

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. This merely explains the reason for it, and we do not generally incorporate in a bridge bill the reasons for granting the privilege of building a bridge.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Pearl River Valley Lumber Co. is hereby authorized to construct a bridge, connecting its timber holdings, across Pearl River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, between Meeks Ferry and Grigsbys Ferry and between Madison County, Miss., and Rankin County, Miss., in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STAFFORD: Page 1, line 4, after the word "bridge," strike out the words "connecting its timber holdings."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

BRIDGE ACROSS TOMBIGBEE RIVER, ITAWAMBA COUNTY, MISS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 7394) granting the consent of Congress to the board of supervisors of Itawamba County, Miss., to construct a bridge across the Tombigbee River.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the board of supervisors of Itawamba County, Miss., and their successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Tombigbee River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Ironwood Bluff, in the county of Itawamba, in the State of Mississippi, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all of section 1 and insert:

"That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge and approaches thereto authorized by the act of Congress approved January 15, 1920, to be constructed by the board of supervisors of Itawamba County, Miss., across the Tombigbee River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation at or near Ironwood Bluff, in the county of Itawamba, in the State of Mississippi, are hereby extended one and three years, respectively, from the date of approval hereof."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

By unanimous consent the title was amended to read: "A bill to extend the time for the construction of a bridge across the Tombigbee River at or near Ironwood Bluff, in the county of Itawamba, Miss."

On motion of Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS CHARLES RIVER, MASS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 6152) to authorize the construction of drawless bridges across a certain portion of the Charles River in the State of Massachusetts.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I note that this bill is in the identical phraseology of an act of Congress passed on February 27, 1911, except that it substitutes the words "Massachusetts Avenue" for the name of another street—Brighton Street, is it?

Mr. DALLINGER. Cambridge and River Streets.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think the phraseology of that act and the phraseology of this bill are rather open to criticism. It is rather loose phraseology to authorize the construction of a bridge—

At any other points upon said river at, near, or above said Massachusetts Avenue.

I understand the purpose of this act is merely to authorize the construction of a bridge at Massachusetts Avenue. If so, why not say so, and not grant such uncertain authority as would be covered in the ambiguous language referred to?

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Speaker, the reason is that in constructing this bridge it may be found advisable to build it wider than the present width of Massachusetts Avenue.

Mr. STAFFORD. There is nothing in the statute of authorization to limit the size of the bridge to that which is now existing.

Mr. DALLINGER. I know, but without the words to which the gentleman from Wisconsin objects the authorization would be limited to the exact line of Massachusetts Avenue on the two sides of the river. There should be some leeway on both sides, if it should be decided to build the bridge wider, and without these words the act might be construed not to authorize it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is it contemplated to build the bridge wider than the width of the avenues on either side of the Charles River in Boston or Cambridge?

Mr. DALLINGER. It may be.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman is acquainted with Massachusetts Avenue, and a good many others of us are acquainted with the width of Massachusetts Avenue on the Boston side and on the Cambridge side. I am directing the gentleman's attention to this uncertain phraseology—

At, near, or above said Massachusetts Avenue.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Speaker, there can be no possible objection to having the act drawn exactly as the act of 1911 was drawn. There is practically no commercial navigation on this river now.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am not objecting to the passage of this bill. I am objecting to the phraseology in which it is submitted.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Speaker, the phraseology is the same in this bill as in the act of Congress of February 27, 1911, under which the Stadium bridge already has been constructed, and under which four other bridges, namely, the new River Street bridge, the new Brookline Street bridge, the new Western Avenue bridge, and the new Arsenal Street bridge, are about to be constructed. The legislation that is now proposed in the present bill simply carries the authorization for a 12-foot-clearance drawless bridge down the river to the Massachusetts Avenue bridge or Harvard bridge as it is called. There is no private ownership whatever between the Cambridge bridge, which is more than a mile below the Harvard bridge, and the new Brookline Street bridge that is about to be constructed under the authority of the act of 1911. There are no wharves on either bank of the river between these points.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have no objection, from my acquaintance of the facts, to having a drawless bridge at Massachusetts Avenue, or any point above, but might there not be some objection by the riparian owners along the Charles basin to erect a bridge under this authorization below Massachusetts Avenue?

Mr. DALLINGER. Absolutely not. The State of Massachusetts through its metropolitan park commission owns the land in fee on both sides of the river between Massachusetts Avenue and the new Cambridge bridge which took the place of the old West Boston bridge and which was authorized over 20 years ago to be built without a draw.

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not like this language which would allow a municipality to build a bridge at any place on the Charles River.

Mr. DALLINGER. I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Wisconsin to the fact that this matter was referred to the War Department, and after investigation by the Army engineers at Boston the Secretary of War heartily approves of the bill in the exact form in which it is now drawn.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have read the report, but I can not say that they heartily approve of it; they have no objection to its passage.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6152) to authorize the construction of drawless bridges across a certain portion of the Charles River in the State of Massachusetts.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Metropolitan Park Commission, or any town or city, or any other public body authorized by the State of Massachusetts, all or any of them, be, and they hereby are, authorized to construct, at any time hereafter, drawless bridges across the Charles River in the State of Massachusetts connecting Massachusetts Avenue in Cambridge and Massachusetts Avenue in Boston, and at any other points upon said river at, near, or above said Massachusetts Avenue: Provided, That said bridges shall be at least 12 feet above the ordinary level of the water in the basin over the main ship channel, and the piers and other obstructions to the flow of the river shall be constructed in such form and in such places as the Secretary of War shall approve: Provided further, That before the construction of said bridges or any of them is begun, the State of Massachusetts shall, by legislative enactment, provide for adequate compensation for the owner, owners, lessee, or lessees of property abutting on said river above any of the said bridges, for damages, if any, caused to said property or leasehold interests therein by reason of interference with the access by water to said property, due to the construction of bridges without draws: And provided further, That the said legislative enactment shall provide for the appointment of three commissioners to hear the parties in interest and assess the damages to said property; their decision as to the amount of damages and questions of fact to be final; said commissioners to be appointed by the Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts. Except as inconsistent herewith, this act shall be subject to the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas). The question is on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. DALLINGER, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

APPLICATION OF THE RECLAMATION LAW TO IRRIGATION DISTRICTS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 4382. A bill to provide for the application of the reclamation law to irrigation districts.

Mr. KINKAID. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed and retain its place on the calendar.

Mr. RAKER. Reserving the right to object, would it be asking too much to have the report on the bill printed in the RECORD, as it involves an important matter that everybody ought to know? It refers in the last part of the report to publications by the Committee on Irrigation which are especially valuable and shows the necessity of this legislation.

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not think there is any necessity for inserting that.

Mr. RAKER. If there is any objection, I withdraw the request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

There was no objection.

AMENDING THE BANKRUPTCY LAW.

The next bill on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 6998) to amend section 17 of the United States bankruptcy law of July 1, 1898, and amendments thereto of February 5, 1903.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, does this bill prevent a discharge to a man who is an officer of a corporation which is adjudged bankrupt?

Mr. LONDON. For his individual debts?

Mr. STAFFORD. Suppose a corporation files an application for a discharge in bankruptcy, would the extension of the bankruptcy law apply so that the corporation could not secure a discharge until all the wages of its employees for three months prior to the proceedings in bankruptcy were completed?

Mr. WALSH. Of course not; it does not work that way now. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman has the floor, having reported the bill.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman from Wisconsin has the floor under his reservation to object.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman would have the floor——

Mr. WALSH. I would if the bill was being considered. However, this simply adds two classes of debts from which a bankrupt can not be discharged. It does not prevent his discharge, but it means that when he gets his discharge he is not discharged from debts that he owes to a workman employed, and also is not discharged in cases where the employee has advanced his employer money for the faithful performance of his contract. We have many cases in large cities in small establishments where people in order to procure employment have posted with the employer a sum of money that they will stay and work a certain length of time. This protects that money in the hands of the employer.

The paragraph adds two classes of debts from which the employer is not discharged. It simply enlarges the class. It would seem that if any person goes into bankruptcy and owes some of his employees wages three months before he enters bankruptcy, that he ought not to be permitted by reason of his discharge in bankruptcy to say to these people who probably can not afford to lose the money that he is not obligated to pay them under his discharge.

Mr. CLOUSE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. CLOUSE. Under the present law as it now stands is not the employee given a lien on the assets of the bankrupt?

Mr. WALSH. No; the employees' wages are a perferred claim under the present law.

Mr. CLOUSE. It does not constitute a lien on the assets of the bankrupt?

Mr. WALSH. It may, but it may be that the bankrupt being discharged might not then have the means to pay this debt. He is discharged. He may enter business a little later and become in a situation where he could afford to pay it. If the debt is not discharged, then the employee may recover.

Mr. CLOUSE. It is the purpose of this bill to extend the rights of the employee so that he may, if the bankrupt goes into business again and acquires assets, pursue and collect his claim.

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, getting back to the question which I submitted, I consider that a corporation may make an application for a discharge in bankruptcy just as an individual. A corporation owes a large amount of wages to the employees, it may be in the hundreds of thousands of dollars. The corporation must pay those debts for wages contracted within three months prior to the commencement of the proceedings in bankruptcy, before the corporation may be discharged.

Mr. WALSH. No; that is not what the bill says.

Mr. STAFFORD. It says that a discharge in bankruptcy shall release a bankrupt from all of his provable debts, except such as——

Mr. WALSH. "Except such as," yes. He gets his discharge just the same, but he is not relieved from these debts, and neither is he relieved from various other debts specified in the other four subparagraphs.

Mr. STAFFORD. The other four subparagraphs refer to matters relating to individuals rather than to corporations.

Mr. WALSH. Corporations usually take advantage of receivership proceedings, I think.

Mr. STAFFORD. No; corporations in many instances, in most instances——

Mr. WALSH. I said usually.

Mr. STAFFORD. And I said in most instances take advantage of applications for bankruptcy.

Mr. WALSH. I think the gentleman is in error.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I still reserve the right to object.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Is the matter in subsection 5 and subsection 6 the only new matter in the bill?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I observe that the report says that the bill reenacts the present law down to the subsection numbered "(Fifth)," on page 2, line 11. That is a misstatement, then, in the report?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Does the present law carry the language in the bill on page 2, line 4, "or for breach of promise or property of another," and so forth?

Mr. WALSH. No; that is a misprint. The gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON] has an amendment to offer making it conform to the original, if consent is granted.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. With further reference to the matter of a corporation, as I understand it, a corporation would be discharged in bankruptcy, but would not be relieved from its obligations to workmen and salesmen and others in that class. Of course, the corporation could not continue business under its charter and make further earnings without running the chance of being sued by former employees, and the effect probably would be that the corporation would have to surrender its charter.

Mr. WALSH. There are very few corporations that go through bankruptcy that continue business under the same name.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. If the charter has any value, it ought to be sold for the benefit of the creditors, anyway.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 17 of an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved July 1, 1898, as amended February 5, 1903, be amended so as hereafter to read as follows:

"SEC. 17. Debts not affected by a discharge: A discharge in bankruptcy shall release a bankrupt from all of his provable debts, except such as (1) are due as a tax levied by the United States, the State, county, district, or municipality in which he resides; (2) are liabilities for obtaining property by false pretenses or false representation of an unmarried female, or for breach of promise of property of another, or for alimony due or to become due, or for maintenance or support of wife or child, or for seduction of an unmarried female, or for breach of promise of marriage accompanied by seduction, or for criminal conversation; (3) have not been duly scheduled in time for proof and allowance, with the name of the creditor, if known to the bankrupt, unless such creditor had notice or actual knowledge of the proceedings in bankruptcy; or (4) were created by his fraud, embezzlement, misappropriation, or defalcation while acting as an officer or in any fiduciary capacity; or (5) are for wages due to workmen, clerks, traveling or city salesmen, or servants, which have been earned within six months before the date of commencement of the proceedings in bankruptcy; or (6) are due for moneys received or retained by an employer to secure the faithful performance by an employee of the terms of a contract of employment."

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 5, after the word "amended," insert the words "by the acts of."

Page 1, line 6, after the figures "1903," insert the words "and March 2, 1917."

Page 1, line 6, after the word "be," insert the word "further," and in the same line, after the word "amended," strike out the words "so as hereafter."

Page 2, line 17, after the word "within," strike out the word "six" and insert the word "three."

Page 2, line 19, after the word "of," insert the words "an employee."

Page 2, line 20, strike out the first word "an" and insert the word "his," and at the end of the line strike out the word "an" and insert the word "such."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LONDON: Page 2, lines 4 and 5, strike out the words "of an unmarried female, or for breach of promise of property of another."

Mr. LONDON. That is a printer's mistake.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend, page 2, lines 3 and 4, by striking out the word "representation" and inserting the word "representations" and a comma.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LONDON: Page 2, lines 3 and 4, strike out the word "representation" and insert in lieu thereof the word "representations" and a comma.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk be directed to amend the title to conform to the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the title will be so amended.

There was no objection.

On motion of Mr. LONDON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

JURISDICTION OF COURTS IN CASES OF REVIVOR.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 6053) to amend section 955 of the Revised Statutes by extending the jurisdiction of courts in cases of revivor.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to have the author of the bill explain the measure.

Mr. STAFFORD. May the bill be reported for the information of the House?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 955 of the Revised Statutes of the United States is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 955. When either of the parties, whether plaintiff or petitioner or defendant, in any suit in any court of the United States, dies before final judgment, the executor or administrator of such deceased party may, in case the cause of action survives by law, prosecute or defend any such suit to final judgment. The defendant shall answer accordingly, and the court shall hear and determine the cause and render judgment for or against the executor or administrator, as the case may require. And if such executor or administrator, having been duly served with a scire facias from the office of the clerk of the court where the suit is depending 20 days beforehand, neglects or refuses to become party to the suit, the court may render judgment against the estate of the deceased party in the same manner as if the executor or administrator had voluntarily made himself a party. The executor or administrator who becomes a party as aforesaid shall, upon motion to the court, be entitled to a continuance of the suit until the next term of said court.

"The provisions of this section shall apply to suits in equity and in admiralty as well as to suits at law, and the jurisdiction of all courts of the United States shall extend over foreign executors and administrators of any party who dies before final judgment or decree equally with their jurisdiction over executors and administrators appointed under the laws of a State within which the judicial district of the court in which the action is pending, and such court shall have jurisdiction within two years from the date of the death of the party to the suit to issue its scire facias to executors and administrators appointed in any State or Territory of the United States which may be served in any judicial district by the marshal thereof: Provided, however, That no executor or administrator shall be made a party unless such service is made before final settlement and distribution of the estate of said deceased party to the suit. And for such purposes the territorial limits of the court in which the suit may be pending at the time of the death of a party are hereby expressly extended so as to include the State or Territory in which an executor or administrator of the deceased party may be appointed."

SEC. 2. That the provisions of section 955 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as amended by this act shall apply to suits in which any party has deceased prior to the passage of this amendatory act as well as to suits in which any party may die hereafter.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

Page 2, line 20, after the word "within," strike out the word "which."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to have the author explain this bill.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, the proposed amendment to section 955 will be found beginning with line 14 on page 2 of the bill. Section 955 refers to proceedings in United States courts upon the death of parties to a suit. This amendment provides that section 955 shall apply to suits at law in equity and also in admiralty and extends the jurisdiction of the United States district courts for the purpose of reviving the suit into the district within which the administrator or the executor of the decedent may live or may have been appointed. In order that the suit may be revived the writ of scire facias must be served before the final settlement and distribution of the estate and also before the expiration of two years, and it simply provides a method whereby parties who have served proceedings in the United States courts in any particular district and one of the defendants dies that that suit can be revived by serving this writ upon the executor. Where the defendant may have been within the jurisdiction of the court of the district where the suit is pending and may be resident of another State and his executor or administrator may be appointed in such other district, we extend the jurisdiction of the court in which the suit is pending for the purpose of this service into the district where the administrator or executor was appointed. The bill was reported to the Attorney General and he, in a letter to the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, which was received after the report was filed, stated:

I do not know now whether it is the custom or the policy of this department to give advice regarding measures of this kind, but I have no hesitancy in saying to you that I believe this measure is a meritorious one. It in no way prejudices the rights of others; and, in fact, its provisions protect the rights of others, whereas without a measure of this kind litigants in certain instances are placed at a disadvantage. It seems to me the remedy should be perpetuated with their cause.

Sincerely, yours,

H. M. DAUGHERTY,
Attorney General.

Of course, in State courts this can be done, but heretofore if the executor or administrator resided within the district where the suit was pending the service could not be made, but in those cases the executor or administrator or representative of the decedent may live in an adjoining district and this would permit the writ of scire facias upon or before the court in which the suit was pending to be issued and served in the adjoining district.

Mr. SINNOTT. Will the gentleman yield now?

Mr. WALSH. I will.

Mr. SINNOTT. Now, in case the defendant is residing in another district, the court could not get jurisdiction upon him unless there was action involving real property as the law stands now unless they serve him within the district?

Mr. WALSH. Unless they serve him within the district.

Mr. SINNOTT. Now, if this change is made, although you can not serve that defendant and bring him within the jurisdiction of the court you may serve the executor and administrator without the jurisdiction of the court and bring him within the court?

Mr. WALSH. No; not unless he was a party to the suit. This is only in the case of the death of a party to the proceedings, and unless he was a party and had been served upon within the district where the suit was pending this would not apply.

Mr. SINNOTT. Does the gentleman understand that no one is a party to the suit unless he is a defendant who has been served?

Mr. WALSH. I so understand in the United States Federal courts.

Mr. SINNOTT. Well, the original section 955 does not read that way.

Mr. WALSH. It has nothing to do with the service of parties to the suit.

Mr. SINNOTT. You are extending in section 2 by this enlarged jurisdiction. The original section 955 says:

When either of the parties, whether plaintiff or petitioner or defendant, in any suit in any court of the United States, dies before final judgment——

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. SINNOTT (continuing)—

The executor may be served and made a party defendant.

It does not exclude anyone else——

Mr. WALSH. He is not a party to the proceedings in the United States courts unless he has been served, and he can not be served unless he has been found within the jurisdiction of the district where the action is pending.

Mr. SINNOTT. Then, unless the decedent had been served during his lifetime, the executor or administrator under this bill can not be brought within the jurisdiction of the court?

Mr. WALSH. As I understand it, unless the defendant is made a party to the proceedings in the United States court, a defendant living outside of the district, the only way he can be made a party to the proceedings is by service within the jurisdiction of the court.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Reserving the right to object, does not the gentleman think that there is a good deal of danger of the administrator being jerked across the continent or from territory outside of the United States to defend a suit which, although perhaps it might have much merit, would not justify going such a distance?

Mr. WALSH. Of course the party would have to go across the country to bring suit there, if desired. There may be several defendants.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I understand, but suppose there is a suit in California against a man for $300, and his case was located in New York, he would have to go there and defend the suit or let the judgment go by default, and perhaps could not afford very well to do either. You make it possible, if this bill should pass, to require an administrator or executor to go from California to New York, when the court otherwise would not have jurisdiction.

Mr. WALSH. That would be possible but not very probable. Does the gentleman think simply because a party goes into the United States court to enforce what he deems to be his just rights that the death of one of the parties whom he is suing should cause him to lose his rights?

Mr. JONES of Texas. He would not lose his rights if he were sued. An administrator and executor could go into court under the present law.

Mr. WALSH. Not unless he was appointed in the district where the action was pending

Mr. JONES of Texas. They would have one appointed. He could file his papers, certified copies, and proceed, if he wanted to do so, under the present law.

Mr. WALSH. He could not be appointed there unless he had some property there.

Mr. JONES of Texas. He could have some certified copies of his papers filed with the court. That would be much easier.

Mr. WALSH. In case judgment was recovered certified copies of the papers would not go very far toward satisfying the judgment.

Mr. JONES of Texas. That is the very point. If he is sued, he might be living there in the jurisdiction of the court, and yet the status of his property might be in a far-away country.

Mr. WALSH. That is true; but the gentleman would find, I think, that no plaintiff or petitioner will, under this section, if it be amended, seek to take advantage of it for any trivial sum. They would hardly seek to send a writ to the United States marshal in California for service in a suit involving $1,500 in a district, say, in Maine.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Does the gentleman find a good deal of complaint on account of the present law?

Mr. WALSH. I do not know of any complaint.

Mr. JONES of Texas. One other question. The proviso on page 2 says:

That no executor or administrator shall be made a party unless such service is made before final settlement and distribution of the estate of said deceased party to the suit.

The gentleman does not consider that amendment would deprive the parties at interest of being sued or suing? That would not interfere in any way?

Mr. WALSH. No; that would not interfere with it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. EVANS. Reserving the right to object, do I understand from the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] that by the term "parties" he means one only who has authority upon a petitioner or plaintiff or else a defendant served?

Mr. WALSH. I do.

Mr. EVANS. And that this would not apply where the defendant has not been served?

Mr. WALSH. That is my understanding. The gentleman from Nebraska knows that in order for this to become effective it must be necessary for a party who is deceased to have an executor or an administrator appointed in some district other than that in which the cause is pending.

Mr. EVANS. I understand that.

Mr. WALSH. Now then, if a nonresident of the district in which the cause is pending dies and his executor is appointed in another district, in order for such a nonresident to have been made a party to that suit he must have been served with process in the Federal court.

Mr. EVANS. Now, is the gentleman exactly accurate when he says "in order for him to have been made a party"? Is not a defendant served a party to the suit?

Mr. WALSH. I think the gentleman will find that a person residing outside the jurisdiction of the district court where a cause is pending, who may be interested in the cause, is not considered a party thereto unless he has been served.

Mr. EVANS. That is not the rule in the State from which I come.

Mr. WALSH. This is Federal practice.

Mr. EVANS. I understand.

Mr. WALSH. And involves United States districts. Of course it is not the rule in a State, because in the State courts your process runs throughout the State. You may live in one county and your process would run throughout the boundaries of that State.

Mr. EVANS. But does not the Federal statute, which provides that your law procedure in a State shall govern as far as possible in Federal courts, apply in this case?

Mr. WALSH. It does not. If it did, the first part of the section would not be necessary at all.

Mr. SINNOTT Would the gentleman object to an amendment on page 2, line 17, after the word "who," by adding "having been brought within the jurisdiction of the court"? Then it would read "of any party"——

Mr. WALSH. He would not be a party unless he had been brought in the jurisdiction of the court. This only applies to a nonresident of the district.

Mr. JONES of Texas. A resident of another district may be made a party and yet not have been served. A man may have a residence and may be sued in one residence when he is in another.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman is referring to State practice. Will the gentleman advise us how under the laws a party can be made a party to a suit unless the party is served?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Not in all cases, but he might be.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman is answering this query and basing his answer on the practice in the States. It is not parallel.

Mr. JONES of Texas. No; the gentleman is basing his assertion on the equity practice of the courts.

Mr. CLOUSE. Where there are more than one defendant in a case, and one is served by process in the district in which he resides, can a process be issued in another district to a material defendant in that case where there are two or more defendants?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas). Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. WALSH, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE CHOCTAWHATCHEE RIVER, FLA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 8477) to authorize the State Road Department of the State of Florida to construct and maintain a bridge across the Choctawhatchee River near Caryville, Fla.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That authority is hereby granted to the State Road Department of the State of Florida, its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Choctawhatchee River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, near Caryville, Fla., approximately 170 feet south of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad bridge, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

With a committee amendment as follows:

Strike out all of section 1 after the enacting clause and insert: "That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge and approaches thereto authorized by the act of Congress approved November 19, 1919, to be constructed by the State Road Department of the State of Florida, across the Choctawhatchee River, near Caryville, Fla., are hereby extended one and three years, respectively, from the date of approval hereof."

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WALSH). The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the title be amended to conform to the text of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the title of the bill be amended to conform to the text. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

On motion of Mr. RAYBURN, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE OF KENNAMER AGAINST RAINEY.

Mr. DOWELL, from the Committee on Elections No. 3, submitted for printing under the rule the following report:

Your Committee on Elections No. 3, having had under consideration the contested-election case of Charles B. Kennamer, contestant, v. L. B. Rainey, contestee, from the seventh congressional district of Alabama, after a careful consideration of said case, respectfully submits the following report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to give notice that in a few days I shall call up this report for the consideration of the House.

UNALLOTTED LANDS ON THE FORT PECK RESERVATION, MONT.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 8010) to authorize the leasing for mining purposes of unallotted lands on the Fort Peck Reservation, Mont.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. ARENTZ. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to remark that this report is very meager; that it tells us nothing about what is contemplated in this bill, what they are going to do, or what sort of metals they are going to mine. It is stated here in the letter to Hon. CHARLES CURTIS by Mr. E. F. Finney, Acting Secretary of the Interior, that this is a bill to authorize the leasing for mining purposes of unallotted lands on the Fort Peck and Blackfeet Indian Reservations in the State of Montana. Then, it is stated, further along, that outside of the lands already allotted they reserve the land for agency, school, and religious purposes, and also such land as may be needed for irrigation projects. So that we have here lands upon which the buildings of the agency are constructed and lands allotted for irrigation purposes as the lands contemplated to be turned over for mining leases. It seems rather inconsistent. That is the only reason why I would like to hear from the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. RIDDICK. Mr. Speaker, I hope there will be no objection to this bill. I would like to explain briefly what is contemplated in this legislation. This bill was drawn after conference with the Interior Department; we have a good mining-lease law. This bill does not change the existing law. The Secretary found there was no law whereby he could execute leases on this Indian reservation in northern Montana.

Mr. ROSENBLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from West Virginia objects. The bill is stricken from the calendar.

INCORPORATION OF GONZAGA COLLEGE, WASHINGTON, D. C.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 7428) to amend section 1 of an act entitled "An act to incorporate Gonzaga College, in the city of Washington and District of Columbia."

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I wish to inquire why this corporation can not obtain the full powers that they wish to receive under the amended code and general laws relating to incorporations in the District of Columbia?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. This is a special incorporation. Consequently the former act would have to be repealed to do that. It seems to me it is entirely proper to amend and reenact it.

Mr. STAFFORD. The bill that you present as an amendment to the general act of incorporation seems to be broader than what is ordinarily granted to corporations organized for educational purposes under the general laws of the District of Columbia.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. No. This was drawn with the general laws of the District before me. The idea is to apply the same limitations as are applied to similar institutions in this city.

Mr. STAFFORD. The general law limits the amount of land of such a corporation to that which may be necessary for the purpose of education. You broaden it by providing "necessary to occupation and use in a comfortable and convenient manner."

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Those words—"in a comfortable and convenient manner"—are taken from the District Code.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I will be glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. FESS. What is the character of this institution?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. This is an old educational institution, located north of the Government Printing Office.

Mr. STAFFORD. I will state for the information of the committee that if the general law carries a limitation as to "comfortable and convenient manner," which I have not been able to find, I shall not make any objection.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. FESS. Does this college grant degrees?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I am not familiar enough with the college to state that, but it is a college that has been in existence a great many years. When it was organized the land it secured was cheap, and a hundred years ago this limitation of $200,000 was doubtless considered ample, but since then the value of the land has increased very much. The corporation conducts a college and a church. There ought to be an amendment to cover the church; the committee overlooked the fact that there is a church in connection with the college.

Mr. FESS. I will say to my friend that some time ago an investigation was made of the way that institutions in the District of Columbia were granting degrees, with reference to the standard of the work they were doing. I have not made any investigation at all of this institution, and I was asking for information.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I think there is a provision in the original charter that they may grant degrees, but whether they do so or not I am not advised.

Mr. COCKRAN. They grant high-school degrees, but this bill has nothing to do with that. This simply gives them the right to hold the land, which has increased in value.

Mr. SEARS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. SEARS. Reserving the right to object, I notice in the latter part of the report it says:

This will permit Congress to control the matter in the future should there be any occasion to impose any other or further limitation.

That refers to the rules and regulations which now are or may hereafter be established.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. No; that does not refer to the limitation that we have imposed by the amendment that the committee has offered. If that limitation should be found for any reason not to be sufficient, the original charter permits further amendment. This is simply an amendment to the original charter; hence we may modify these regulations or restrictions. We may repeal the entire charter, because the charter authorizes us to do so, and of course this being simply an amendment to that it would apply to this provision as well as to the original provision in the charter.

Mr. SEARS. They can change their rules and regulations whenever they want to, without the action of Congress.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. They can change their rules and regulations, but they can not change the right to hold property. That is covered in the language of this bill. The only thing we do here is to remove the limitation of $200,000 that is in the original charter upon the amount of property that they may hold, and we substitute for that this provision, that they may hold what is necessary for occupation and use by the college in carrying on in a comfortable and convenient manner its educational and charitable work.

Mr. SEARS. I understand that, but we are extending that authority now and giving them more power, and they may change their rules.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. We are not giving them any more power.

Mr. SEARS. We are giving them more land.

Mr. COCKRAN. No; it is the same land, only the land has become more valuable. The land was purchased a hundred years ago.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I do not know what the rules are.

Mr. COCKRAN. There are no rules now.

Mr. SEARS. It says:

According to the rules and regulations which now are or may hereafter be established.

Mr. COCKRAN. The original charter limited them to $200,000 in the amount of land they might hold. That was 50 years ago. That land is worth a great deal more now.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. The regulations for their own government have no relation to how much land they may hold. We are trying to put the same limitations upon this college that now apply to colleges and churches generally in the District of Columbia instead of this limitation of $200,000.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. If the college was operating under the general law there would be no limitation upon the amount of property it might hold, other than that which was necessary for occupation and use for educational purposes.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. That is all.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. So instead of a specific limitation of $200,000, you are applying the general law?

Mr. COCKRAN. That is correct.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. We are applying the general law to it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of the act entitled "An act to incorporate Gonzaga College, in the city of Washington and District of Columbia," approved May 4, 1858, is amended to read as follows:

"That Burcard Villiger, Charles H. Stonestreet, Daniel Lynch, Edward X. Hand, and Charles Jenkins, and their successors, be, and they are hereby, made a body politic and corporate forever, by the name of the president and directors of Gonzaga College, for purposes of charity and education; and by that name may sue and be sued, prosecute and defend, may have and use a common seal and the same alter and renew at pleasure; may adopt rules, regulations, and by-laws not repugnant to the Constitution and laws of the United States for properly conducting the affairs of said corporation; may take, receive, purchase, and hold estate, real, personal, and mixed, and may manage and dispose of the same at pleasure, and apply the same, or the proceeds of the sales thereof, to the uses and purposes of the said corporation according to the rules and regulations which now are or may hereafter be established."

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 8, after the word "mixed," insert the words "necessary for occupation and use by said Gonzaga College in carrying on in a comfortable and convenient manner its educational and charitable work."

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, in line 10, page 2, after the word "educational," I offer to amend by inserting the word "religious."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VOLSTEAD to the committee amendment: On page 2, line 10, after the word "educational," insert "religious."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the committee amendment as amended.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. As a typographical matter there ought to be a comma after the word "educational."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that the comma has been inserted by the reading clerk.

The amendment was agreed to.

The committee amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I offer another amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VOLSTEAD: On page 2, line 1, after the word "charity," insert a comma and the word "religion."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. COCKRAN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

AMENDING SECTION 108 OF THE JUDICIAL CODE.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 6679) to amend section 108 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 108 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary" (36 Stat., p. 1125), approved March 3, 1911, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 108. The State of Texas is divided into four districts, to be known as the northern, eastern, western, and southern districts of Texas. The northern district shall include the territory embraced on the 1st day of July, 1910, in the counties of Dallas, Ellis, Hunt, Johnson, Kaufman, Navarro, and Rockwall, which shall constitute the Dallas division; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Archer, Baylor, Clay, Comanche, Erath, Foard, Hardeman, Hood, Jack, Palo Pinto, Parker, Tarrant, Wichita, Wilbarger, Wise, and Young, which shall constitute the Fort Worth division; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Armstrong, Bailey, Briscoe, Carson, Castro, Childress, Cochran, Collingsworth, Cottle, Crosby, Dallam, Deaf Smith, Dickens, Donley, Floyd, Gray, Hale, Hall, Hansford, Hartley, Hemphill, Hockley, Hutchinson, King, Lamb, Lipscomb, Lubbock, Moore, Motley, Ochiltree, Oldham, Parmer, Potter, Randall, Roberts, Sherman, Swisher, and Wheeler, which shall constitute the Amarillo division; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Andrews, Borden, Callahan, Dawson, Eastland, Fisher, Gaines, Garza, Haskell, Howard, Jones, Kent, Knox, Lynn, Martin, Midland, Mitchell, Nolan, Scurry, Shackelford, Stephens, Stonewall, Taylor, Terry, Throckmorton, and Yoakum, which shall constitute the Abilene division; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Brown, Coke, Coleman, Concho, Crockett, Glasscock, Irion, Menard, Mills, Runnels, Schleicher, Sterling, Sutton, Tom Green, and Upton, which shall constitute the San Angelo division of the said district. Terms of the district court for the Dallas division shall be held at Dallas on the second Monday in January and the first Monday in May; for the Fort Worth division, at Fort Worth on the first Monday in November and the second Monday in March; for the Amarillo division, at Amarillo on the third Monday in April and the fourth Monday in September; for the Abilene division, at Abilene on the first Monday in October and the second Monday in April; for the San Angelo division, at San Angelo on the third Monday in October and the fourth Monday in April. The clerk of the court for the northern district shall maintain an office in charge of himself or a deputy at Dallas, at Fort Worth, at Amarillo, at Abilene, and at San Angelo, which shall be kept open at all times for the transaction of the business of the court. The eastern district shall include the territory embraced on the 1st day of July, 1910, in the counties of Anderson, Angelina, Cherokee, Gregg, Henderson, Houston, Nacogdoches, Panola, Rains, Rusk, Smith, Van Zandt, and Wood, which shall constitute the Tyler division; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Hardin, Jasper, Jefferson, Liberty, Newton, Orange, Sabine, San Augustine, Shelby, and Tyler, which shall constitute the Beaumont division; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Collin, Cook, Denton, Grayson, and Montague, which shall constitute the Sherman division; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Camp, Cass, Harrison, Hopkins, Marion, Morris, and Upshur, which shall constitute the Jefferson division; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Delta, Fannin, Red River, and Lamar, which shall constitute the Paris division; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Bowie, Franklin, and Titus, which shall constitute the Texarkana division. Terms of the district court for the Tyler division shall be held at Tyler on the fourth Mondays in January and April; for the Jefferson division, at Jefferson on the first Monday in October and the third Monday in February; for the Beaumont division, at Beaumont on the third Monday in November and the first Monday in April; for the Sherman division, at Sherman on the first Monday in January and the third Monday in May; for the Paris division, at Paris on the third Monday in October and the first Monday in March; and for the Texarkana division, at Texarkana on the third Monday in March and the first Monday in November. The clerk of the court for the eastern district shall maintain an office in charge of himself or a deputy at Sherman, at Beaumont, and at Texarkana, which shall be kept open at all times for the transaction of the business of said court. The western district shall include the territory embraced on the 1st day of July, 1910, in the counties of Bastrop, Blanco, Burleson, Burnet, Caldwell, Gillespie, Hays, Kimble, Lampasas, Lee, Llano, Mason, McCulloch, San Saba, Travis, Washington, and Williamson, which shall constitute the Austin division; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Atascosa, Bandera, Bexar, Comal, Dimmit, Edwards, Frio, Gonzales, Guadalupe, Karnes, Kendall, Kerr, Medina, and Wilson, which shall constitute the San Antonio division; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Brewster, Crane, Ector, El Paso, Jeff Davis, Loving, Reeves, Pecos, Presidio, Ward, and Winkler, which shall constitute the El Paso division; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Bell, Bosque, Coryell, Falls, Hamilton, Freestone, Hill, Leon, Limestone, McLennan, Milam, Robertson, and Somervell, which shall constitute the Waco division; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Kinney, Maverick, Terrell, Uvalde, Val Verde, and Zavalla, which shall constitute the Del Rio division. Terms of the district court for the Austin division shall be held at Austin on the fourth Monday in January and the second Monday in June; for the Waco division, at Waco on the fourth Monday in February and the second Monday in November; for the San Antonio division, at San Antonio on the first Monday in May and the third Monday in December; for the El Paso division, at El Paso on the first Monday in April and the first Monday in October; and for the Del Rio division, at Del Rio on the third Monday in March and the fourth Monday in October. The clerk of the court for the western district shall maintain an office in charge of himself or a deputy at Austin, at El Paso, and at Del Rio, which shall be kept open at all times for the transaction of business. The southern district shall include the territory embraced on the 1st of July, 1910, in the counties of Duval, La Salle, McMullen, Nueces, Webb, and Zapata, which shall constitute the Laredo division; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Cameron, Hidalgo, and Starr, which shall constitute the Brownsville division; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Austin, Brazoria, Chambers, Galveston, Fort Bend, Matagorda, and Wharton, which shall constitute the Galveston division; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Brazos, Colorado, Fayette, Grimes, Harris, Lavaca, Madison, Montgomery, Polk, San Jacinto, Trinity, Walker, and Waller, which shall constitute the Houston division; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Bee, Calhoun, De Witt, Goliad, Jackson, Live Oak, Refugio, Aransas, San Patricio, and Victoria, which shall constitute the Victoria division. Terms of the district court for the Galveston division shall be held at Galveston on the second Monday in January and the first Monday in June; for the Houston division, at Houston on the fourth Mondays in February and September; for the Laredo division, at Laredo on the third Monday in April and the second Monday in November; for the Brownsville division, at Brownsville on the second Monday in May and the first Monday in December; and for the Victoria division, at Victoria on the first Monday in May and the fourth Monday in November. The clerk of the court for the southern district shall maintain an office in charge of himself or a deputy at each of the places now designated for holding court in said district."

SEC. 2. That all process against persons resident in the county of Pecos and cognizable before the United States district court shall be issued out of and made returnable to court at Pecos City, and that all prosecutions against persons for offenses committed in said county of Pecos shall be tried in said court at El Paso or Pecos City: Provided, That no civil or criminal cause begun and pending prior to the passage of this act shall be in any way affected by it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a second demanded?

Mr. STAFFORD. I demand a second.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. LANHAM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDSPETH. I will explain to my colleague that under the rules of the Judiciary Committee I was required to write and incorporate in this bill the law governing the entire judicial districts in Texas. This bill simply takes out of the Del Rio division of the western district of Texas the county of Pecos and changes it over to Pecos city in the El Paso division. The rest of the bill is the present law, which I have copied with reference to all the other districts in the State. It only changes one county for the reason that as it is situated now they have to go around by rail 200 miles or more to Del Rio. It changes Pecos County over into Pecos city, 50 miles, and it is for the convenience of the citizens, the convenience of the bar, and meets the unanimous approval of every person interested throughout that section.

Mr. STAFFORD. My only purpose in demanding a second was to get information which the gentleman has mostly supplied. Neither the report nor the bill indicate under the existing practice that courts are held in Pecos city. The gentleman has just stated that courts are held there under provisions of the law.

Mr. HUDSPETH. It changes Pecos County for judicial purposes over into Pecos city.

Mr. STAFFORD. The plan is to transfer litigation arising from Pecos County to Pecos city. It is proposed to have the litigation arising from Pecos County tried in Pecos city and Reeves County, which is not in this same division.

Mr. HUDSPETH. No; Pecos County is in Del Rio division.

Mr. STAFFORD. The same district judge will preside in both places.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

The question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended, and the bill was passed.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman withhold that for a moment?

Mr. STAFFORD. I will.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the minority members of the Judiciary Committee may have until 12 o'clock to-night to file their views on the bill H. R. 13.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the minority members of the Committee on the Judiciary may have until 12 o'clock to-night to file minority views on H. R. 13. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my motion to adjourn.

AMENDING SECTION 1044 OF REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged report from the Committee on Rules.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to consider under the general rules of the House H. R. 8298, a bill to amend section 1044 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to limitations in criminal cases.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, the bill that this rule makes in order was reported out of the Judiciary Committee. As indicated in the resolution just read, the purpose of the bill is to extend the period that the statute of limitations may run against contractors or those who may have with fraudulent intent violated the law or perpetrated any fraud against the Government. The Attorney General has asked for the legislation, and it is thought desirable that it be considered as early as possible. The rule was unanimously agreed to in the Committee on Rules, and I understand that the bill was unanimously reported from the Committee on the Judiciary. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

LIMITATIONS IN CRIMINAL CASES.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill H. R. 8298, to amend section 1044 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to limitations in criminal cases, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1044 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 1044. No person shall be prosecuted, tried, or punished for any offense, not capital, except as provided in section 1046, unless the indictment is found, or the information is instituted, within three years next after such offense shall have been committed: Provided, however, That in offenses involving the defrauding or attempts to defraud the United States or any agency thereof, whether by conspiracy or not, and in any manner, and now indictable under any existing statutes, the period of limitation shall be six years, and shall not begin to run until the fraudulent transactions are known to the Government. This act shall apply to acts, offenses, or transactions where the existing statute of limitations has not yet fully run, but this proviso shall not apply to acts, offenses, or transactions which are already barred by the provisions of existing laws."

SEC. 2. That this act shall be in force and effect from and after the date of its passage.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 2, after the word "years," strike out the comma and the language "and shall not begin to run until the fraudulent transactions are known to the Government. This act shall apply to acts, offenses, or transactions where the existing statute of limitations has not yet fully run, but this proviso shall not apply to acts, offenses, or transactions which are already barred by the provisions of existing laws."

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM].

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, shortly after the present Congress was convened I called the attention of the Attorney General to the fact that the statute of limitations was running on almost every kind of crime that had been committed, or that could be charged as having been committed, during the war. Section 1044 of the Criminal Code provides a period of limitation of three years on almost all offenses against the Government, such as might have been committed at any time during or since the war. As the war ended on the 11th of November, 1918, it will be seen that a great many of these crimes are already barred by the statute of limitations, the bar having been complete on the 11th of November, 1921, as to all crimes committed during the war period. As to all such crimes, no prosecution can now be had. However, in the period following the war, and in the things that grew out of the war, crimes were committed which are not yet barred, and it has been thought useful, inasmuch as the Attorney General is now investigating many of these matters, that the statute should be so extended that if there has been crime the Department of Justice may prosecute.

This simply extends the limitation as to crimes against the United States for three years, so that from now on the limitation on crimes committed against the United States such as are defined in this act will be six years instead of three. It extends to no other kinds of crime. Those crimes are described in the proviso as "offenses involving the defrauding or attempts to defraud the United States or any agency thereof, whether by conspiracy or not, and in any manner, and now indictable under any existing statutes," so that it will be seen that this bill deals with fraud largely.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. FESS. Do I understand that the three years is from the time the alleged crime takes place?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. FESS. Unless we do pass this, there will be no prosecution under the limitation of the statute after a very short time, no matter what might be divulged.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. That is true. You can date back now three years in your mind from this date and anything that happened before that is already barred, and the six-year limit will only run on such crimes as are not now barred by any such limit of three years. I think I need not discuss this with lawyers, but the propositions are well borne out by the authorities, and with the consent of the House I shall incorporate a short brief with my remarks. If the crime has been barred by the existing statute of limitations no prosecution can thereafter be had for that crime. To pass an act which would be retroactive in its operation after the period of limitation has once run has been held to contravene the spirit of the Constitution providing against ex post facto laws. But where the period of limitations has not run, then the legislative body can extend it to any limit it desires, because it has been held by the United States Supreme Court and most of the higher courts of the States of the Union that a limitation on a crime was simply an act of grace extended by the sovereign to the individual, and until the time when prosecution was ended by the lapsing of this time he could claim no rights under an existing statute.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. I see the bill as the gentleman introduced it contains provisions in lines 3 to 8, inclusive, on page 2. The first provision I shall pass for the moment, but does not the gentleman think that the second provision, that the act shall apply to acts, offenses, or transactions where the existing statute of limitations has not yet fully run, should remain in this act?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I do. Let me make a short explanation. When I went before the committee with the representative of the Department of Justice, in looking over this act we concluded, all of us, that the first proposition—and shall not begin to run until the fraudulent transactions are known to the Government—was manifestly wrong and ought to go out, and the committee all agreed to that. Then the next clause to which the gentleman refers was thought by the committee to be the law now, and they struck it out, but since then I have conversed with the Attorney General and some of the members of the committee, and it is now the impression of the chairman of the committee and such members as I have talked to, and it is my own opinion, that that language ought to remain in the bill.

Mr. RAKER. In the State courts and in the Federal courts that provision and the two fundamental principles it announces there has caused a great deal of litigation. If the committee leaves this in the act, then there will be a legislative declaration as well as a court declaration, and it will avoid further complications.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. And there is another thing the gentleman will readily see. If it were in the original bill and was stricken out by amendment, some courts might think it was our intention to do something else.

Mr. RAKER. That was in my mind, whether the courts might not take it for granted that Congress tried to change this policy that had been adopted by the courts.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I agree with the gentleman, and I have no doubt that the amendment, which should be offered by the gentleman from Minnesota, should extend only to the language in lines 3 and 4, ending with the word "Government."

Mr. RAKER. And to leave in the bill the provisions contained in lines 4, 5, 6, 7, and 8, beginning with the language "this act" and ending with the word "laws."

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. If I understand the gentleman correctly, if there were any great frauds committed against the Government during the war period, this would practically leave them out; they will have been already barred before this bill becomes effective.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. It is an unfortunate fact that many of the crimes that were committed during the war are barred, and were barred last fall. Many of them were barred a couple of years ago.

That is, crimes that may have been committed since April 6, 1917, only three years elapsed for their prosecution and punishment, and practically all of them are outlawed. Many of the frauds which were committed in the closing up of war contracts occurred after the end of the war and may yet be prosecuted by the Department of Justice.

Mr. TILSON. If the crime happened earlier than that——

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. They are out.

Mr. TILSON. They are out. Suppose the Shipping Board, or any other large enterprise of the war, may find there has been a gross offense against the Government, there will be no remedy?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. It is too late. During the period of the war, we will say, somebody made a fraudulent contract and robbed the Government of millions of dollars. I want to say to the gentleman, frankly, he can not be prosecuted. The statute of limitations will run against them and they are out. There are some few that can be reached by this, and in order to give the Department of Justice a little bit of a show to reach some of them that perhaps could be reached we desire to pass this legislation and give them a chance. As a matter of fact, I want to call attention to this fact: The late Senator Mason during his lifetime introduced a bill to extend this statute of limitations. Nobody apparently paid any attention to it. It never got any consideration, I believe; at any rate, it did not pass, and if the bill Mr. Mason introduced had passed most of the people who possibly did commit fraud during the war might yet be prosecuted. However, as I say, it did not pass. It was lost in the shuffle. So we considered the best thing we could do was to pass this legislation. Incidentally, Mr. Speaker, I have a letter in my hand from the Attorney General to Mr. VOLSTEAD, which he has handed me, approving of this bill and asking for its passage.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. The gentleman understands that it is not possible for us to provide that in the case of offenses to which the statute of limitations did apply that the statute of limitations can in any way be revived?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. It can not be revived under any possibility. The Supreme Court of the United States has held point blank on that matter. I will set out those decisions in my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by including the brief to which I alluded and the letter of the Attorney General of which I spoke.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois to include the matter to which he referred? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Under the leave to extend my remarks the following brief and letter of the Attorney General are now here inserted in the RECORD:

BRIEF.

The question here presented for consideration relates to the powers of Congress to make laws extending the statute of limitations.

First. Can Congress enact a law extending existing statutes of limitations so as to revive cases in which the statutory period has already run; and Second. Can the period be extended in cases where the statutory period has not yet run?

I. As to the first question, the weight of authority, so far as case law is concerned, seems to be that if the statutory period of the statute has fully run and the bar has once attached so that the defendant could not be prosecuted under the existing statute the law can not be changed by legislation so as to extend the period of limitation. (See Wood, Limitation of Actions, vol. 1, p. 78.)

The leading case on this subject is Moore v. State. (43 N. J. L., 203), the syllabus of which is as follows:

"A statute which purports to authorize the prosecution, trial, and punishment of a person for an offense previously committed, and as to which all prosecution, trial, and punishment were at its passage already barred according to preexisting statutes of limitation is unconstitutional and void."

The reasoning of this case seems to rest upon the doctrine that the defendant in such criminal proceedings has acquired a vested right not to be prosecuted or punished for his offense, and that the legislature does not possess the power to take the right away. Reasoning further, the court says that—

"Where there is a legal right there is also a legal remedy by suit or action at law it follows that where the remedy by action is tolled the right also is legally extinguished so far as that remedy was necessary for its enforcement."

The following cases cited, in the leading case, hold that the legislature does not have the power by the extension of the statute to revive the right to prosecute:

"Naught v. O'Neal (1 Ill., 36); Sprecker v. Wakeley (11 Wis., 432); Parish v. Eager (15 Wis., 532); Bagg's appeal (43 Pa., 512); McKinney v. Springer (8 Blackf., 506); Stipp v. Brown (2 Ind., 647); Davis v. Minor (1 How., Miss., 183); Woodman v. Fulton (47 Miss., 682); Martin v. Martin (35 Ala., 560); Girdner v. Stephens (1 Heisk., 280); Atkinson v. Dunlay (50 Me., 111); Ryder v. Wilson's Express (12 Vroom, 9).

The leading case here not only maintains that the prospective defendant has acquired a vested right to be free from such prosecution but that such an enactment is an ex post facto law. This case also likens the bar which the statute sets up to an amnesty and reasons that while it may be an act of grace on the part of the sovereign power to grant a pardon or an amnesty, that having once granted an amnesty or pardon the status of those amnestied or pardoned has been fixed and can not be changed by subsequent act of legislation. Wharton, Criminal Pleading and Practice, section 316, says that—

"An act of Congress which undertakes to authorize prosecutions for offenses which prior statutes of limitation have canceled is an ex post facto law, and hence void."

The State v. Sneed (25 Tex., 66) is another case cited approvingly in the leading case and others and holds the same view. In this case the bar of the statute of limitations was completed before the code went into effect, which limited prosecutions in certain cases to two years. The syllabus of this case is as follows:

"Where an offense under the statute was barred by limitations at the time the code went into effect the extension by the latter of the time necessary to bar the offense will not revive the right of action in the State, and a prosecution of the same can not be maintained. (Penal Code, art. 186; Paschal's Digest, art. 2653, note 706.)

"The legislature can not have intended to give an ex post facto operation to the code."

In Kring v. Missouri (107 U. S., 250), in a dissenting opinion by Mr. Justice Matthews, with whom concurred Mr. Chief Justice Waite, Mr. Justice Bradley, and Mr. Justice Gray, the following language, which seems to summarize the law on the subject, is used:

"And while it would be a violation of the constitutional maxim which forbids retrospective legislation inconsistent with vested rights to deprive, by a repeal of statutes of limitation, a defendant of a defense which had become perfect while they were in force, yet if, before the bar had become complete, he should be deprived of an expected defense by an extension of time in which suit might be brought he would have no just cause to object that he was compelled to meet the case of his adversary upon its merits."

II. As to the second question above, the general rule seems to be that where the statute of limitations has not fully run and where the defendant is still liable to prosecution the legislature may extend the period of limitation and such law does not violate the ex post facto law of the Constitution or any other right of the defendant. The reasoning of all the cases seems to proceed upon the theory that the defendant has no vested right, or any other right, that he may set up against such statutes. On this point the leading case of Moore v. State, cited above, says that—

"Until the fixed period has arrived, the statute is a mere regulation of the remedy, and, like other such regulations, subject to legislative control; but afterwards it is a defense, not of grace but of right; not contingent but absolute and vested; and, like other such defenses, not to be taken away by legislative enactment."

The leading case on this branch of the subject is Commonwealth v. Duffy (96 Pa. State, 507). This is a case in which the validity of a statute of limitations barring prosecutions for forgery to two years was extended to five years. In this case the law was passed before the statutory bar had attached. The third and fourth points of the syllabus are as follows:

"An act of limitation is an act of grace purely on the part of the legislature, and especially is this the case in the matter of criminal prosecutions. The State makes no contract with criminals, at the time of the passage of an act of limitations, that they shall have immunity from punishment if not prosecuted within the statutory period. Such enactments are measures of public policy only. They are entirely subject to the mere will of the legislative power, and may be changed or repealed altogether, as that power may see fit to declare.

"When a right to acquittal has not been absolutely acquired by the completion of the period of limitation, that period is subject to enlargement or repeal without being obnoxious to the constitutional prohibtion against ex post facto laws."

Kring v. Missouri and other cases, cited above, bear on this same point.

III. A third position is taken by Bishop, in his Statutory Crimes, sections 265, 266, and 267. He denies that the doctrine of vested rights applies to this case, but says that it is a doctrine of property law only, maintaining that—

"there is no such thing as a right vested in one to go unwhipped of criminal justice."

He denies that the ex post facto provision of State or Federal Constitution applies to this case. Hence, he maintains that Congress or a legislature has plenary power to alter, amend, or change a statute of limitations by an extension of time so that it may cover prosecutions for crime under both clauses of cases above. It may be said in passing that he does not cite any cases to sustain his position.

OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., August 13, 1921.

Hon. A. J. VOLSTEAD,
Member of Congress, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. VOLSTEAD: I inclose form of bill, about which I talked to you, to amend section 1044 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to limitations in criminal cases. As I told you, there are many cases growing out of the war upon which the statute of limitations may soon run, placing the Government to a disadvantage unless there is some relief such as is proposed in the inclosed bill. We are undertaking to investigate many transactions with the Government during and growing out of the war and I am convinced of the propriety of this legislation. I am asking Senator NEW, with whom I have talked, to introduce a similar bill in the Senate, and I wish you would confer with Senator NEW and act together so that this measure may be introduced and put through as expeditiously as possible.

I also inclose a memorandum we have prepared in connection with the bill, which may be of service to you. If there is any other information you desire on the subject I shall be glad to confer with you.

Very truly, yours,

H. M. DAUGHERTY, Attorney General.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I would like to know if there is anyone opposed to this bill? If not, I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the committee amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division on the amendment.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I desire to offer a substitute for the committee amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman desires to offer a substitute I withdraw my demand for a division.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Strike out line 3, page 2, and the first five words in line 4, down to the period, and insert a period at the end of line 2, on page 2.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VOLSTEAD: Page 2, line 2, after the word "years," strike out the comma and insert a period. Strike out all of lines 3 and 4 down to and including the period after the word "government."

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I want recognition.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Minnesota desire recognition?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I desire to make that change because I think the words in lines 3 and 4, which I desire to strike out, ought to go out, and I think the rest of the paragraph ought to remain in. I ask for a vote on that.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask to be recognized.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I move the previous question on the amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Maryland to strike out the last word.

Mr. HILL. I ask for recognition to ask the chairman of the committee in my time if six years is considered long enough on some of these contracts?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I think so.

Mr. HILL. The committee has been over that fully?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. That is the suggestion of the Attorney General, six years.

Mr. HILL. Does not the chairman of the committee think 10 years would be better?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. No; I think six is enough. I move the previous question on the amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Minnesota moves the previous question on the amendment and the amendment thereto.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD].

The amendment by way of substitute was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is on the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I now move the previous question on the bill to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. ROSENBLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Doorkeeper will close the doors and the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Ansorge	Dale	Goodykoontz	King

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A quorum is present.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. ROSENBLOOM. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. ROSENBLOOM. To move to recommit the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will recognize the gentleman at the proper time.

The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from West Virginia is recognized.

Mr. ROSENBLOOM. I move the bill be recommitted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. ROSENBLOOM. I am opposed to the bill; yes, sir.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from West Virginia offers a motion to recommit, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. ROSENBLOOM moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on the Judiciary with instructions to that committee to report the bill back forthwith with the following amendment: On page 2, line 6, after the word "run," strike out the following:

"But this proviso shall not apply to acts, offenses, or transactions which are already barred by the provisions of existing laws."

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. ROSENBLOOM. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided, and there were—ayes 143, noes 5.

So the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken, and the motion to recommit was rejected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. VOLSTEAD, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill (H. R. 8298) was passed was laid on the table.

ENROLLED BILL PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. RICKETTS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States for his approval the following bill:

H. R. 7848. An act authorizing appropriations and expenditures for the administration of Indian affairs, and for other purposes.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. JEFFERS of Alabama, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence for six days on account of attending American Legion convention at Kansas City, Mo.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 37 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Tuesday, November 1, 1921, at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORT OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delievered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

My DYER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 13) to assure to persons within the jurisdiction of every State the equal protection of the laws, and to punish the crime of lynching, reported the same with an amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 452), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. DOWELL, from the Committee on Elections No. 3, submitted a report (No. 453) on the contested-election case of Kennamer v. Rainey, seventh congressional district of Alabama, which said report was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the Committee on Education was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8373) to extend the benefits of the employers' liability act of September 7, 1916, to Daniel S. Glover, and the same was referred to the Committee on Labor.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. FREEMAN: A bill (H. R. 8922) for the relief of commissioned officers and enlisted men who were on the retired list of the Army or Navy prior to April 6, 1917; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BARBOUR: A bill (H. R. 8923) for the consolidation of forest lands in the Sequoia National Forest, Calif., and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. ASWELL: A bill (H. R. 8924) to amend the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes," approved March 30, 1920; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SEARS: A bill (H. R. 8925) providing that the Government property known as the St. Francis Barracks, at St. Augustine, Fla., be donated to the State of Florida for military purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CABLE: A bill (H. R. 8926) amending section 8 of the act entitled "An act providing for publicity of contributions made for the purpose of influencing elections at which Representatives in Congress are elected," approved June 25, 1910, as amended by the act approved August 19, 1911; to the Committee on Election of President, Vice President, and Representatives in Congress.

By Mr. STEENERSON: A bill (H. R. 8927) authorizing the establishment of rural routes of from 36 to 75 miles in length; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. LEHLBACH: A bill (H. R. 8928) to provide for the classification of civilian positions within the District of Columbia and in the field service; to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.

By Mr. APPLEBY: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 216) authorizing and requesting the President of the United States to call a conference of the leading nations controlling and operating ocean shipping to consider the advisability of amending our international maritime laws, to the end that control may be had over the constantly increasing pollution of the navigable waters of the world by oil-burning and oil-carrying steamers through the dumping into said waters of oil waste, fuel oil, oil sludge, oil slop, tar residue, and water ballast; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. HUDSPETH: Concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 30) authorizing the President to invite delegates to the Conference on Limitation of Armament to visit the Pacific coast; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. DYER: Resolution (H. Res. 218) for the immediate consideration of House bill 13; to the Committee on Rules.

By the SPEAKER: Memorial of the Legislature of the State of Louisiana, urging Congress to repeal the Federal estate tax; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. APPLEBY: A bill (H. R. 8929) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate to the town of New Egypt, N. J., one German cannon or fieldpiece; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CHANDLER of Oklahoma: A bill (H. R. 8930) granting a pension to Margaret J. Cody; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CHINDBLOM: A bill (H. R. 8931) for the relief of Mary Davis; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. CLASSON: A bill (H. R. 8932) to correct the military record of William B. Johns; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8933) granting a pension to Clara W. Hunt; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FITZGERALD: A bill (H. R. 8934) granting a pension to Samuel J. Haslett; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8935) granting a pension to Alfred Theodore Koopman; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8936) granting an increase of pension to Moses Goldstein; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8937) granting a pension to Susannah Larson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8938) granting a pension to Ella S. Thomas; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8939) granting a pension to Thomas J. Mullen; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8940) granting a pension to Edward Hamilton; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8941) for the relief of Capt. Guy E. Manning; to the Committee on Claims.

2895. By Mr. MICHENER: Petition of sundry citizens of Adrian, Mich., protesting against high freight rates; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

2896. By Mr. MONTOYA: Petition of citizens of Maxwell, N. Mex., protesting against the passage of the compulsory Sunday observance bill (H. R. 4388); to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

2897. By Mr. ROSSDALE: Resolution adopted by the Arthur Veins Post, No. 704, American Legion, to aid ex-service men in securing employment; to the Committee on Labor.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, November 1, 1921.

(Legislative day of Thursday, October 20, 1921.)

The Senate reassembled at 11 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 2447) to authorize the construction of a bridge across Pearl River, between Meeks Ferry and Grigsbys Ferry and between Madison County, Miss., and Rankin County, Miss., with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed bills and a joint resolution of the following titles, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 2908. An act for the incorporation of the Grand Army of the Republic;

H. R. 6053. An act to amend section 955 of the Revised Statutes by extending the jurisdiction of courts in cases of revivor;

H. R. 6152. An act to authorize the construction of drawless bridges across a certain portion of the Charles River in the State of Massachusetts;

H. R. 6679. An act to amend section 108 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911;

H. R. 6998. An act to amend section 17 of an act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States, approved July 1, 1898, as amended by the acts of February 5, 1903, and March 2, 1917;

H. R. 7428. An act to amend section 1 of an act entitled "An act to incorporate Gonzaga College, in the city of Washington and District of Columbia;

H. R. 8298. An act to amend section 1044 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to limitations in criminal cases;

H. R. 8477. An act to extend the time for the construction of a bridge across the Choctawhatchee River, near Caryville, Fla.; and

H. J. Res. 215. Joint resolution to declare November 11, 1921, a legal public holiday.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled joint resolution (S. J. Res. 114) accepting the invitation of the Republic of Brazil to take part in an international exposition to be held in Rio de Janeiro in 1922, and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

CEREMONIES FOR UNKNOWN DEAD IN ROTUNDA OF CAPITOL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the chairman of the national legislative committee, Veterans of Foreign Wars, inviting Senators to attend the ceremonies in honor of the unknown dead, to be held at 10 a. m., November 10, 1921, in the rotunda of the Capitol, which will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

INCREASE OF SALARIES BY FEDERAL RESERVE BOARD (S. DOC. NO. 75).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the governor of the Federal Reserve Board, transmitting, pursuant to Senate resolution 153, information as to the number of employees, together with their respective salaries, employed by the Federal reserve bank in New York, as well as in other Federal reserve banks in the country, and the expenditures made by each branch bank in the erection of public buildings, and general expenses in the administration of each Federal reserve bank and how much of the net earnings have been paid to the United States as a franchise tax. The communication and accompanying documents will be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. OVERMAN subsequently said: Mr. President, I understand that this morning when I was not in the Chamber a report came in from the Federal Reserve Board in answer to a resolution which I introduced. I ask that the same may be printed for the use of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. OVERMAN. I understand, and that is the proper reference; but I ask that it be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina asks that the report of the Federal Reserve Board in response to the resolution introduced by that Senator shall be printed. Is there objection?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Does the Senator mean published in the RECORD?

Mr. OVERMAN. I think it is very voluminous. I do not ask now that it be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. SHEPPARD. But printed as a Senate document?

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes; printed as a Senate document.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is a very voluminous document.

Mr. OVERMAN. I understand so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the absence of objection, the report, with the accompanying illustrations, will be ordered printed as a public document.

CALL OF THE ROLL.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Frelinghuysen	McCumber	Ransdell
Borah	Gooding	McKellar	Reed
Brandegee	Hale	McKinley	Sheppard
Broussard	Harreld	McLean	Simmons

Fernald	Lenroot	Pittman	Willis
Fletcher	Lodge	Poindexter
France	McCormick	Pomerene

Mr. DIAL. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. SMITH] is detained by illness. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. SWANSON. My colleague [Mr. GLASS] is unavoidably detained from the Senate. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Seventy-four Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. LADD presented a petition of sundry citizens of Fargo, N. Dak., praying for the enactment of Senate joint resolution 89, proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States to the effect that Congress shall not exercise the power to declare war or the existence of a state of war until such question shall have been submitted to a vote of the qualified electors in the several States, etc., which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Fargo, N. Dak., praying for a reduction of war preparations and for open sessions of the conference on limitation of armaments, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. McLEAN presented a petition of the Kensington (Conn.) Temperance Union, praying for the enactment of the so-called antibeer bill, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented 44 memorials of sundry citizens of New Haven, Conn., remonstrating against the enactment of the so-called Penrose and Fordney bills, providing for refunding of the debts of our allies in the World War, which were ordered to lie on the table.

METHOD OF INTRODUCTION OF PRIVATE BILLS.

Mr. MOSES, from the Committee on Rules, to which was referred the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 1) providing that legislation dealing with pensions, private claims, distribution of war trophies, etc., be initiated by petition on suitable furnished forms, reported it with amendments.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED.

Bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. CUMMINS:

A bill (S. 2649) to extend the benefits of section 260 of the Judicial Code to Walter I. Smith, United States circuit judge; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. SWANSON:

A bill (S. 2650) for the relief of Flitner Atwood Co.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. FERNALD:

A bill (S. 2651) granting a pension to Lizzie K. York (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. JONES of New Mexico:

A bill (S. 2652) for the relief of the city of Raton, N. Mex.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. WADSWORTH:

A bill (S. 2653) to amend section 5201 of the Revised Statutes, to authorize national banking associations to invest in the stock of safe deposit companies, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. SMOOT:

A bill (S. 2654) for the relief of Almond S. Root; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. KING:

A bill (S. 2655) to permit the location of mining claims within national parks; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

By Mr. MYERS:

A bill (S. 2656) to authorize the exchange of privately owned lands within, or within 6 miles of, the Lolo and Bitterroot National Forests for national forest lands within said national forests; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

By Mr. HEFLIN:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 130) to provide for a monument to Maj. Gen. William Crawford Gorgas, late Surgeon General of the United States Army; to the Committee on the Library.

By Mr. JONES of New Mexico:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 131) to furnish the daily CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to American Legion posts; to the Committee on Printing.

AMENDMENTS OF TAX REVISION BILL.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I offer two amendments to the House bill 8245, the pending tax bill. I ask that they be printed and lie on the table. I will briefly state that one of them provides for the so-called manufacturers' tax and the other proposes a general turnover tax.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendments will lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. HITCHCOCK and Mr. LA FOLLETTE submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them to House bill 8245, the tax revision bill, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON READJUSTMENT OF SERVICE PAY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 11) authorizing the special committee appointed to investigate pay of personnel of Army, Navy, Marine Corps, etc., to hold hearings, to employ a stenographer to report the same, and to employ clerical assistants, which was, on page 2, line 3, after the word "chairman" to insert "and vice chairman," so as to make the concurrent resolution read:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the special committee appointed in accordance with the provisions of section 13 of the act entitled "An act to increase the efficiency of the commissioned and enlisted personnel of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Coast and Geodetic Survey, and Public Health Service," approved May 18, 1920, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized to sit at any time, in the District of Columbia, to send for persons, books, and papers, to administer oaths, to summon and compel the attendance of witnesses, to employ a stenographer, at a cost per printed page as fixed by law, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may come before said committee, to print such hearings and other matter as may be necessary, and to employ such clerical services as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of the act. All expenses in pursuance hereof shall be paid from the contingent funds of the Senate and House of Representatives, in equal proportions, upon vouchers authorized by the committee and signed by the chairman and vice chairman thereof.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New York.

Mr. REED. To what does the resolution relate?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I will state for the information of the Senator from Missouri that some time ago the Senate passed a concurrent resolution authorizing the joint committee of Congress charged with the duty of proposing a general revision of the pay schedules of the Army, the Navy, and the Marine Corps, the Public Health Service, the Coast and Geodetic Survey, and the Coast Guard to employ clerical assistants. The House of Representatives has sent the resolution back with an amendment to the effect that in addition to the chairman of the joint committee signing the vouchers the vice chairman shall also do so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New York to concur in the House amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

PEARL RIVER BRIDGE, MISSISSIPPI.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2447) to authorize the construction of a bridge across Pearl River between Meeks Ferry and Grigsbys Ferry and between Madison County, Miss., and Rankin County, Miss., which was, on page 1, lines 4 and 5, to strike out the words "connecting its timber holdings."

Mr. EDGE. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment made by the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills and joint resolution were severally read twice by title and referred as indicated below:

H. R. 2908. An act for the incorporation of the Grand Army of the Republic; and

H. R. 6053. An act to amend section 955 of the Revised Statutes by extending the jurisdiction of courts in cases of revivor; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

H. R. 6152. An act to authorize the construction of drawless bridges across a certain portion of the Charles River in the State of Massachusetts; to the Committee on Commerce.

H. R. 6679. An act to amend section 108 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911; and

H. R. 6998. An act to amend section 17 of an act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States, approved July 1, 1898, as amended by the acts of February 5, 1903, and March 2, 1917; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

H. R. 7428. An act to amend section 1 of an act entitled "An act to incorporate Gonzaga College, in the city of Washington and District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

H. R. 8298. An act to amend section 1044 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to limitations in criminal cases; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

H. R. 8477. An act to extend the time for the construction of a bridge across the Choctawhatchee River, near Caryville, Fla.; to the Committee on Commerce.

H. J. Res. 215. Joint resolution to declare November 11, 1921, a legal public holiday; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1072) to amend the act entitled "An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes," approved July 11, 1916, as amended and supplemented, and for other purposes.

TAX REVISION.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8245) to reduce and equalize taxation, to amend and simplify the revenue act of 1918, and for other purposes.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, as I am obliged by official business to leave the Senate early this afternoon I ask unanimous consent that I may propose at this time two individual amendments to which I think there can be no possible objection.

The first amendment which I propose is, on page 44, line 3, after the words "educational purposes," to insert the following, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be reported.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 44 of the House text, line 3, after the words "educational purposes" and the comma, insert the words "including posts of the American Legion or the Women's Auxiliary units thereof."

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, I confess I do not understand the scope of the amendment.

Mr. LODGE. The purpose is to place American Legion posts in the exemption of contributions or gifts, together with a long list which is printed here of—

Contribution or gifts made within the taxable year to or for the use of the United States, any State, Territory, or any political division thereof, or the District of Columbia, for exclusively public purposes; any corporation or community chest, fund, or foundation, organized and operated exclusively for religious, charitable, scientific, literary, or educational purposes—

And there I propose to insert the words "including posts of the American Legion."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. On page 193, line 10, after the word "organizations," I propose to amend by inserting the following.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 193, after the word "organizations," insert—or to the benefit of any posts of the American Legion or the Women's Auxiliary units thereof.

Mr. LODGE. That is simply to relieve them from the entertainment tax.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, in the course of debate a few days ago a table was printed which was furnished me by a citizen of New Jersey relative to surtax rates, the accuracy of which was questioned by one of the Senators in debate. At the time I stated that the gentleman furnishing the table would unquestionably be glad to give a further explanation. He has done so. I shall not take the time of the Senate to ask that it be read, but I ask that it be inserted in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LOOMIS, SUFFERN & FERNALD,
CERTIFIED PUBLIC ACCOUNTANTS,
New York, October 29, 1921.

Senator WALTER E. EDGE,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR EDGE: I have carefully reviewed the discussion and criticism of the table which I prepared regarding the comparative yield from taxable and tax-exempt bonds as affected by the higher surtax rates, which table was presented by you, as appears on page 6536 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of October 20, and which was the subject of criticism by Senator LENROOT, as appears on pages 6643 and 6644 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of October 22.

There is attached hereto a statement setting forth in detail the exact application of these higher surtax rates in the case of a taxable income of $50,000. The accompanying statement directs itself primarily to the question of fact as to whether, to a man with a taxable income of $50,000, a taxable bond bearing a rate of interest of 7.14 per cent would be required to yield 5 per cent net, as is set forth in the table, or whether it would only require a taxable bond bearing a rate of interest of 6.08 per cent, as claimed by Senator LENROOT. I believe the explanation attached fully covers the matter, so there can be no question of doubt that to a man with a taxable income of $50,000 a taxable bond yielding 7.14 per cent is only the equivalent to him of a 5 per cent bond which is tax-exempt, and this condition stands so long as he continues to have a taxable income of $50,000. It is only when, by conversion of taxable to nontaxable securities or otherwise, he reduces his taxable income to an amount below $48,000 that a bond yielding him less than 7.14 per cent would become the equivalent of a 5 per cent tax-exempt bond. In other words, any taxable bonds he might have which yielded him less than 7.14 per cent interest could profitably be converted into a corresponding amount of 5 per cent tax-exempt bonds, provided only that the aggregate amount of interest on such taxable bonds did not exceed a maximum figure of $2,000 (and it would require $28,000 worth of bonds yielding 7.14 per cent interest to produce $2,000 of annual income).

So long as any part of his taxable income fell within the surtax bracket which made it subject to the 22 per cent surtax, plus the 8 per cent normal tax, there would be some part of his income as to which an investment in taxable bonds yielding 7.14 per cent would only be equavilent to a tax-exempt 5 per cent bond.

The table was never intended to mean, and should not have been understood to mean, that the maximum tax rate of 30 per cent which a man with a taxable income of $50,000 would be paying applied to his entire income. I have thought that in using the expression "maximum tax rate" and quoting the 30 per cent rate as relating to an income of $50,000 it would be understood that the discussion related to such part of the $50,000 income as was subject to this maximum tax rate. This question of the maximum tax rate applicable to any specified income and the relative yield of taxable and tax-exempt securities is a matter of frequent discussion and consideration by investors and bond houses, and it is always understood that when the subject is discussed in this manner the statements made and conclusions reached in reference to the effect of a maximum tax rate relate only to so much of the income as is subject to that maximum rate and would not hold true if the amount of taxable income were reduced to a point where the maximum rate no longer applied.

If the point is raised that the table would be subject to misinterpretation because it was not accompanied by a sufficiently clear explanation, and it is desired to introduce into the record an explanation which would make it clear that the figures stated would not hold true for the entire amounts of income stated, but only for so much thereof as was subject to the maximum tax rate, I would suggest that there might be inserted below the table the following explanation:

"This table considers only the maximum tax rate applicable to a given amount of taxable income, since this is the only rate which will ordinarily be affected by any new investment or reinvestment of funds. It is this maximum rate which is and must be considered by the investor to determine the difference between any investment in taxable or tax-exempt securities. The figures given for 'rate of interest on taxable bonds necessary to yield 5 per cent net' will only apply for such part of the taxable income as is subject to the maximum tax rate quoted."

Such an explanation I believe would fully clarify the discussion which follows the table, but if further explanation seemed necessary the first paragraph following the table might be made to read as follows (new matter underlined):

"This shows that a man with a taxable income of $50,000, who would, on $2,000 of his income, be paying 30 per cent—normal and surtax—would, as to investments which produced $2,000 of income, have to get a taxable interest of 7.14 per cent to have it be equivalent to the interest which he would receive from a 5 per cent tax-exempt bond. This he could probably do at the present market."

You will recognize that these changes in wording are purely explanatory of the limits within which the statement originally made would apply. They in no way change the essential statement of fact, which is that a man with a taxable income of $50,000 is subject to a maximum tax rate of 30 per cent and that he would have to get a taxable interest of 7.14 per cent on any taxable bond in order to have it equivalent to a 5 per cent tax-exempt bond. While this high ratio would not apply to the entire range of investment from which a $50,000 income might be derived, it would apply not merely to any one single bond which might be under consideration but would apply to any amount of bonds not in excess of $28,000 worth.

Rarely if ever does a man consider the reinvestment of his entire principal, but even if he were considering an entire reinvestment the 7.14 per cent figure would apply to $28,000 of such investment; a figure of 7.04 per cent would apply to a further $28,400 investment, etc. In other words, at any time when he had a taxable income within the 30 per cent class there would be some part of his investment from which he would have to receive a 7.14 per cent yield in order to have it equivalent to the yield from a 5 per cent tax-exempt bond.

The discussion here given has been confined to the case of a taxable income of $50,000, which is the rate at which the principal question was directed. Similar analysis might be made with regard to any other amount of taxable income, and in each case it could be as definitely shown that, so long as a man has a taxable income of the amount stated and is subject to the maximum surtax rates quoted, there is some part of his investments which must yield him the rate of interest quoted in order to be the equivalent to him of the yield from a 5 per cent tax-exempt bond.

Naturally, I regret that my statement was not made so clear in the first place that it could not be misunderstood. I endeavored to make it brief and confined it to the essential point without trying to introduce those limitations and qualifications which I thought were fully recognized and understood. The fact that the statement has been misunderstood perhaps indicates the need of a further explanation, and I should be glad to have it accompanied by any explanation which may seem necessary to clarify the situation and bring out the essential fact and even the exact limitations and extent to which these high surtax rates make it impossible for a man, without a financial sacrifice to himself, to make investments in taxable, rather than tax-exempt bonds.

Sincerely, yours, H. B. FERNALD.

P. S.: The proposed surtax rates as I have stated them are those which appeared in the New York Herald of October 8 as being the compromise agreed upon. These I assume to be correct, but if the table were to be introduced into the RECORD, naturally the surtax rates as I have used them should be verified from official sources.

COMPARATIVE YIELD FROM TAXABLE AND TAX-EXEMPT BONDS AS AFFECTED BY THE HIGHER SURTAX RATES.

The law does not impose average tax rates upon total incomes, but divides the income in various "brackets," each of which carriers its separate rate of tax. There are certain exemptions applicable to the lower brackets of the income and certain income which may be exempt from the normal tax. With these exceptions all income is subject to the 8 per cent normal tax and also the surtax applicable to each separate bracket within which the income may fall.

For a single man having a $50,000 taxable income, subject to no credits or exemptions other than the $1,000 personal exemption, the tax under the proposed amendment, as published in the New York Herald of Oct. 8, 1921) would be as follows:

Comparative yield from taxable and tax-exempt bonds as affected by the higher surtax rates.

Net income.	Income included in each bracket.	Per cent tax.			Tax on each bracket.	Balance of income in each bracket after deducting tax.
		Surtax.	Normal.	Total.
$1,000	$1,000					$1,000
$1,000 to $5,000	4,000		4	4	$160	3,840
$5,000 to $6,000	1,000		8	8	80	920
$6,000 to $10,000	4,000	1	8	9	360	3,640
$10,000 to $12,000	2,000	2	8	10	200	1,800
$12,000 to $14,000	2,000	3	8	11	220	1,780

COMPARATIVE YIELD FROM TAXABLE AND TAX-EXEMPT BONDS AS AFFECTED BY THE HIGHER SURTAX RATES.

The total tax which such a man with $50,000 taxable income would pay would thus be $8,720, $600 of which would be the tax upon the final $2,000 of income, $580 would be the tax on his income between $46,000 and $48,000, $560 would be the tax on income between $44,000 and $46,000, etc.

If he now owns $28,000 worth of bonds which yield him 7.143 per cent, or $2,000 of taxable income per year, and should exchange these for $28,000 of 5 per cent tax-exempt bonds, yielding $1,400 of tax-exempt income, he would then only have $48,000 of taxable income, and his tax would be reduced by $600 to $8,120. Out of this $48,000 of taxable income he would have left $39,880 after paying his tax, and would also have the entire $1,400 of tax-exempt income, making the same total of $41,280 which he had left when he was receiving $50,000 of taxable income and paying $8,720 tax. He accordingly is just as well off if he puts $28,000 of his investments into 5 per cent tax-exempt bonds as he would be if he had this $28,000 in bonds yielding him 7.14 per cent subject to tax.

These same considerations would hold true if certain of his present investments were to mature and be paid off so that he had $28,000 for reinvestment. He would have to invest this in taxable bonds yielding 7.14 per cent in order to be as well off as he would be if he invested in tax-exempt bonds yielding only 5 per cent.

Of course, when he has once made such investments in tax-exempt bonds, so that his taxable income is reduced to $48,000, the differential between taxable and tax-exempt bonds becomes slightly reduced so that a taxable bond yielding 7.04 per cent will be the equivalent to him of a 5 per cent tax-exempt bond. An investment of $28,400 in taxable bonds yielding 7.04225 per cent would give an income of $2,000 on which the tax at 29 per cent would be $580, leaving him a balance of only $1,420 after payment of the tax, which is no more than he would have from an investment of $28,400 in tax-exempt 5 per cent bonds.

So with each such step of investment in tax-exempt securities he could eliminate the tax in the highest bracket applicable to his remaining taxable income. The differential between taxable and tax-exempt securities would be steadily decreasing as the lower brackets were reached with their lower surtax rates, but it would only be after he had reduced his taxable income to $26,000 that a bond yielding 6.097 per cent taxable income would be equivalent to a 5 per cent tax-exempt bond.

An extreme reduction of this kind could hardly occur except where the income was largely derived from bond investments, because it would require the transfer of over $300,000 from taxable to nontaxable investments in order to reduce in this manner a taxable income of $50,000 to one of $26,000.

Ordinarily an income of $50,000 consists largely of income from the taxpayer's business or professional activities which must remain subject to tax. It is only with regard to his outside investments or his saved income that he has occasion to consider the difference between taxable and nontaxable securities. Rarely will any single investment have to be considered from a standpoint of more than a single rate of tax, and that the highest tax to which he would be subject. But even if the income within several brackets would be affected the first consideration must be given to that part of the taxable income which falls within the highest bracket and is subject to the maximum tax rate.

Of course, if he already has a taxable income of $50,000 and is considering whether he should invest surplus income in taxable bonds which would make his taxable income more than $50,000, or in tax-exempt bonds which would not increase his taxable income, he must consider the rate of 31 per cent which applies to taxable income of $50,000 to $52,000. This is, however, a complication which it seems hardly necessary to introduce.

This calculation is worked out for a single man. The tax of a married man would be slightly less because of his greater personal exemption, but such exemption does not in any way affect the tax in the higher brackets and so the differential between taxable and tax-exempt securities would be the same in these higher brackets for a married man as for a single man.

The fact stands that any man with a taxable income of $50,000 must get at least a 7.14 per cent yield from a taxable bond to have it be the equivalent to him of a 5 per cent bond which is tax-exempt. Any amount less than $28,000 worth of taxable bonds he may own which yield him less than 7.14 per cent is not the equivalent to him of 5 per cent tax-exempt bonds. It would only be when and as he reduced his taxable income below $48,000 that a bond yielding him less than 7.14 per cent would be the equivalent of a 5 per cent tax-exempt bond, but even then if his taxable income exceeded $46,000 he would have to get 7.04 per cent in order to have a bond yield 5 per cent net.

TREATMENT OF SOLDIERS.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I desire very briefly, but with all the emphasis I can command, to call the attention of the Senate, and especially may I say of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. WATSON], to a passage in the remarks of the Senator from Georgia delivered yesterday upon the floor of the Senate, having to do with the Army of the United States and making a charge against the Army such as I have never heard made before.

I am going to read those paragraphs from the Senator's speech, which will be found on page 7021 of the RECORD. In referring to our soldiers abroad the Senator from Georgia spoke, in part, as follows:

> How many Senators know that a private soldier was frequently shot by his officers because of some complaint against officers' insolence; and that they had gallows upon which men were hanged, day after day, without court-martial or any other form of trial? How many Senators know that? I had and have the photograph of one of those gallows, upon which 21 white boys had already been executed at sunrise when the photograph was taken; and there were others waiting in the camp jails to be hanged morning after morning.

I think I need not say to the Senate that a charge of that kind is, to say the least, extremely serious. Personally I have never heard its equal. The Senator from Georgia has made it upon the floor of the Senate in open session, and he must have appreciated its seriousness when he made it. He must have appreciated how a charge of that kind would ring from one end of the country to the other, published as it is in the official proceedings of the Congress.

I think it is due the Senate and due the country as well as the officers and men of the Army who fought in the Great War that the Senator from Georgia produce the evidence upon which he bases this assertion; that he come before the Committee on Military Affairs with whatever documentary evidence he can produce and whatever witnesses he can produce, from any corner of this broad land, to substantiate this charge made against the honor of our arms. It is a matter which can not be lightly brushed aside, nor can it be excused on the ground of excitability in debate; it is something to which we must pay attention; and, so far as I am privileged to do so, I take this opportunity of inviting the Senator from Georgia to come before the Committee on Military Affairs at the earliest possible moment and produce evidence of any kind or description which will substantiate the statement which he made upon the floor of the Senate. In fact, Mr. President, so far as one individual Senator may, I demand that the Senator do so.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, it does not in the least surprise me that the Senator from New York should "demand" anything from any other Senator on this floor. I will tell him now to his face, foot to foot, shoulder to shoulder, defying him, that we are equals here, and no Senator has a right to make demands of another. When he uses that language he may use language which may do down in the Legislature of New York, but it will not go down in the Senate of the United States. I say I defy him; I defy his demand; and I am not going to appear before any committee of which he is chairman; but I will meet him face to face in debate in public on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. President, I am not in the habit of making statements which I can not sustain. Men who for 30 years met me at the bar know that; men who for 30 years met me on the hustings know that; Senators who meet me in debate here are beginning to learn that.

I meant every word I said; I can prove every word I said; and I did not half say it, meaning that I did not half paint the picture. I have got that photograph of the gallows upon which I say soldiers were hanged in violation of all law; and I can produce the witnesses, were it safe for them to appear. I will not expose them to danger, but I will expose myself to it, and I say it is true.

I can produce that kodak picture, hastily taken, of at least one of those gallows upon which white men, volunteering, as it was said, to save civilization and to make the world safe for democracy, were hanged like dogs. I can produce the witnesses, if it were safe for the witnesses to be produced, to prove that men were shot by their officers without any kind of trial. For obvious reasons I can not make these men come here and incur the danger which they would incur, but I will incur it. I will never budge an inch from the Senator from New York; I will never give back an inch. I will defy his challenge, and he knows that I am speaking the truth when I say that I can prove it, if he will guarantee immunity to those witnesses.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the Senator state——

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. The Senator refused to let me interrupt him, and I am not going to let him interrupt me. He is the only man on the floor of the Senate who has been supercilious and discourteous to me; I have had enough of it, and I want to tell him that I am the peer of any Senator from New York or anywhere else.

I say we did pile up mountains of food in France and virtually gave it to the French, when our soldiers had been starving for it, and were being fed by the Chinese coolies who were digging the trenches and draining the swamps upon which our soldiers were to lay down to sleep and leave their impress upon the mud.

I can prove that they were made to go on useless hikes, and unnecessarily exposed and sacrificed and left on the road to die. I have had ex-service men tell me about it, and those ex-service men are just as good and just as worthy of credit as is the Senator from New York. They enlisted for the war; they volunteered; they served throughout; they saw with their own eyes; they felt in their own persons; they experienced what he did not experience. They were not allowed to write home and tell what they were enduring; their letters were censored; their letters were stereotyped; they had to conform to the regulations and say, "We are having a good time and being treated nicely," or they themselves were subject to barbarous punishment.

As I have said before, those men can not be made to go back to Europe again. I have had them say to me, "I will die before I will be sent back across the seas again and suffer what I suffered in that war."

In the hospitals they were neglected. The officers made courtesans of too many of the nurses—not all of them, but too many of them. In the hospitals, on the roadside, wounded, suffering, and dying, those men were treated inhumanly, and I was told so by the men themselves.

What would you think if every Senator on either side of the Chamber was made to strip naked and stand up in a row, in a cold rain, and have one surgeon go from man to man and make a complete physical examination? What would be the condition of the first man in the row by the time the surgeon got to the last?

I have had fathers tell me, with the tears streaming down their eyes, tell me when I knew that their hearts were broken, about the mistreatment of their sons, not only in Europe but in camps in Georgia. I could produce those men. There was a case in my own county where a man by the name of David Brown—if you want to have a name—had an only son, inclined to be tubercular. Any doctor competent to practice should have known he was unfit for service; but he was sent to one of our camps in Georgia; he was brutally mistreated; and he died. In another case the tubercular soldier was made to march, hour after hour, until he fell in his tracks. He was refused the services of his mother, when his mother was on the outside of the camp begging to go to her son and minister to him. He died.

One of the leading doctors, perhaps the leading doctor of the State Sanitarium of Georgia, told me at my house when he was attending me that a head nurse of one of the hospital wards told him that in one night 65 of these young men died of pneumonia because they were not sufficiently covered with blankets and did not have sufficient attention—65 in one night. I can give the name of that doctor; I can produce him.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. With pleasure.

Mr. SPENCER. Do I understand the Senator from Georgia to say that he has proof that—

> They—

Meaning, I presume, unless the Senator corrects me, the Army of the United States—> had gallows upon which men were hanged, day after day, without court-martial or any other form of trial?

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I mean exactly that. The order of an officer was enough. I mean exactly that; and, Mr. President, I here say that this country never has learned one-half of what our soldiers suffered. I have had the private soldier tell me that he would march on the wet, cold, half-frozen ground, barefooted, begging for shoes, when, as we all know, we had mountains of shoes, ready to give away to France, apparently.

Why were 8,000 automobiles parked at Lyons, within the forks of those two rivers, in that narrow valley where a flood comes every year, in order that they might be ruined by the spring overflow? It was to protect the profiteers here in this country. Why were the soldiers put to destroying mile after mile of motor vehicles, breaking up their engines and their running gear so that they would be ruined if not to protect the American profiteers?

Why were 3,000,000 carcasses of beeves and sheep in the cold-storage houses of New Zealand not allowed to be brought to Europe if not to give a wider market to the meat packers of Chicago? Why were 3,000,000 bushels of wheat piled up in stacks along the depot stations in Australia—paid for by the Imperial British Government—if not to give the Flour Trust more of a monopoly, more of an unholy gain in selling to the Army and selling to the Government? Why were blankets put on sale in New York by the hundreds of thousands, intended for our boys in France, and never obtained by them?

Mr. President, I had a cousin who went abroad on one of those cattle ships, for which we paid Great Britain the full passenger rate, and because of insufficient food and clothing he took pneumonia; and during the session of this Congress, before the recess, I received here one day a telegram saying "He is dead"—a sacrifice to the World War. When he left home he was as stalwart in build and appearance as any Senator on this floor.

I say there were inhumanities practiced, and if we do not combat this officer caste, this officer class, we will soon go back to the condition that used to exist in England and in France, where a marine could be flogged to death, or half to death, with the surgeon standing by him holding his watch and telling the floggers, or the officers who ordered the floggings, to what limit they could whip him without killing him. It has not been so long since that was done.

We are building up here in this country, Mr. President, a militarism just like that of the Kaiser and his staff. The man is becoming nothing. The officer is becoming everything. The civilian is becoming nothing. The militarist is becoming everything; and the mere fact that the chairman of the Military Affairs Committee can demand that I go before him and let him try my case is proof of all that I have said.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, the Senator from Georgia declines to produce any testimony to substantiate his charge, on the ground that if the witnesses were to come here and appear before the Military Affairs Committee of the Senate they would incur some danger.

I need not before a body such as the Senate of the United States comment upon an excuse of that kind. Suffice it to say that there is no danger whatsoever to be incurred by a witness coming before a committee of the Senate and testifying. If the Senator will not substantiate this charge, very well; the responsibility is his.

I assert that not one man in all the armies of the United States during the last war was executed without trial by court-martial. Further than that, sir, the inference to be drawn from this assertion of the Senator from Georgia to the effect that dozens were executed is utterly aside from the facts and the truth. I assert that the men who were executed following court-martial in the American Expeditionary Forces can be counted upon the fingers of one hand; that nothing like 21 were ever executed in France.

I am not certain, sir, that the denial I am now making will be heard as far as the charge made by the Senator from Georgia. I have taken this opportunity, in my individual capacity as a Senator, to demand that he substantiate his charges by the production of witnesses and documentary evidence. He has declined to do so. I leave the Senate and the country to draw their conclusions.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, while the Senator from New York was on his feet somebody—I do not know who—sent me a duplicate picture of that gallows of which I said I had a copy at my home in Georgia. Here it is for every Senator to see. What I did decline to do was to go before him and his committee. I will go and produce witnesses before any impartial committee, not the Committee on Military Affairs, but some impartial committee in which I have confidence.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I sent the photograph to the Senator from Georgia. I desire to make a brief statement in regard to it.

The same statement, in substance, which the Senator from Georgia placed in the RECORD a day or two since was published in his paper several months ago, and I read it. It was so astounding that I wrote or wired and asked him if he would not send me the photograph of the scene to which he referred in his paper. He sent me this photograph. I felt, in view of the debate and the situation here, that I should return it to the Senator, which I did. Of course, the picture speaks for itself. The picture does not say where it is, but it speaks for itself as to what is in the picture.

Mr. President, I do not desire to get into this debate. I never presented the matter to the Senate or elsewhere, because I could not get the proof. I do desire to say, however, in conversation with two ex-service men they confirmed that which the picture indicates, but were wholly unwilling to do anything except to give it to me in confidence. Of course, they knew nothing as to whether the men had been tried or not, but they claim to know of the gallows. Therefore I dismissed it, for the reason that I was unwilling to undertake an investigation upon that kind of a statement.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President——

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Have I the floor, Mr. President?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Will the Senator kindly ask my permission?

Mr. LENROOT. I did not know the Senator had the floor.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I will gladly yield to the Senator.

Mr. LENROOT. I will wait until the Senator gets through.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I will gladly yield.

Mr. LENROOT. No; I will wait until he finishes.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. That is all right.

In the long run, this body does not tolerate that which is insolent, supercilious, disrespectful to other Members, disregardful of their rights and their feelings. When a Senator makes a speech here in his place it ought to be presumed that he knows what he is talking about.

In speeches that I made in Atlanta, Ga., in referring to that photograph, which was taken at Gievres, in France, there were numbers of ex-service men who cried out in the audience, "We have seen that gallows and we know that men, 21 men, had already been hanged on it, and others were waiting to be hanged, one after the other, morning after morning, at sunrise," the gallows being in a little dell in a clump of pines behind the camp, where nobody could see it. If a court-martial or any other court condemns a man to death for just cause, why should they hide the gallows and hide the crime?

Mr. President, if I did not feel that we have got to make a combat in this country against the very Prussian militarism which we went to war to overthrow and crush I would not say the things that I said here yesterday; but I said them yesterday, I am standing by them to-day, and I will repeat them hereafter, in defiance of any Senator from New York.

Mr. LENROOT and Mr. EDGE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I simply want to ask a question of the Senator from Georgia, if I may.

Mr. LENROOT. I yield.

Mr. EDGE. Does not the Senator from Georgia feel that in view of the charges he has made, he owes it to the country to produce evidence that would convict officers who were responsible for such inhuman treatment? How can we ever correct such an evil if there is no further effort to place the responsibility? Irrespective of the Senator's charges or viewpoint, if the evidence exists it seems to me we owe it to the country to go into the matter as a matter of endeavor to punish the guilty.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, answering the Senator from New Jersey, I will say that Hard Boiled Smith was tried, and he was not punished to any considerable extent. His punishment was purely nominal. He laid the fault upon his superior officer, whose name I will not mention, but it will occur to every Senator who read the papers at the time. That officer has never even been reprimanded, much less punished; and unless my recollection fails me, there was a man named Sid Hatfield, who came before the committee of inquiry on the strike situation in West Virginia, who testified against the Baldwin-Felts Detective Agency; and within the shortest possible time, a member of that agency foully shot him while he was walking into the courthouse with his wife. Has that assassin been punished?

Mr. President, when I was a Member of the other House, 30 years ago, there was a Pinkerton detective agency which furnished an army of operatives to corporations. It did dreadful work at Homestead. It did dreadful work down in the West Virginia mine fields. I made a fight, and I had that practice abolished. What has become of the law I had passed? What right have these men to employ these private detectives?

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I do not yield further.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I thought I had the floor.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, the Senator from Georgia has not alone made a monstrous charge against the Army which, if true, it is the duty of the Senate to take action upon, if the War Department does not, but he has also expressed complete lack of confidence in the Committee on Military Affairs to impartially investigate any charge which may be made against the Army. I happen to be a member of that committee, and although the Senator from Georgia may have no confidence whatever in the Republican members of the Committee on Military Affairs, I wish to remind the Senate of what Democrats constitute membership upon that committee. In the reflection he is making, he states that he has no confidence in the impartiality of Senators HITCHCOCK, of Nebraska, FLETCHER, of Florida, MYERS, of Montana, SHEPPARD, of Texas, MCKELLAR, of Tennessee, or ROBINSON, of Arkansas.

Of course, Mr. President, the Senator from Georgia is entitled to his own opinion, but I want to remind the Senator from Georgia that in refusing to produce proof of the charges he makes, if they are true, it is not the private soldier he is protecting; he is protecting officers who ought to be hanged if his statements are true, and he is protecting nobody else.

Mr. President, the Senator from Georgia wanders far from the issue he has made by his speech. I want to call attention to just what the charge is. His language is:

> How many Senators know that a private soldier was frequently shot by his officers because of some complaint against officers' insolence; and that they had gallows upon which men were hanged, day after day, without court-martial or any other form of trial? How many Senators know that? I had and have the photograph of one of those gallows—

That is, gallows upon which soldiers were hanged without court-martial or other form of trial—> upon which 21 white boys had already been executed at sunrise when the photograph was taken.

This morning the Senator from Georgia exhibits the photograph, and if the Senator's statement is true he knows, he says, that that photograph of four white men hanging from a gallows was of men who were hanged without trial, without court-martial, or other form of trial. Mr. President, if that statement is true, notwithstanding the opinion of the Senator from Georgia, there is not one member of the Military Affairs Committee, from the chairman to the last member upon it, who will not go the limit in insisting that men who are guilty of that be brought to justice. The Senator from Georgia may not think so, but every other Senator knows that is true.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. LENROOT. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. A sample of the Military Affairs Committee "going the limit" is to be found in the report on a certain case which is confidential, and the details of which I therefore can not go into. The junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER] laid before the Senate facts, not rumors, showing that an officer had been guilty of heartlessness and inhumanity toward sick men; that when these sick men pleaded in their weakness to be allowed to ride he cursed them in a way that was scandalous, and yet the Senate may confirm the promotion of that officer.

The Senator from Georgia may bear with equanimity what may be said against him about a failure to produce proof. Let the Senate first take up cases where the charges are proven; then, after acting on cases where the testimony is before them, it will be time to call on the Senator from Georgia. I will wait until I see what is done in this case, where this officer cursed and insulted private soldiers, for an officer who would curse and insult private soldiers when they can not and dare not answer him is a coward.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, the Senator now is speaking of matters, as he says, which are confidential. The Senator knows quite as well as I that there is an issue, and in that particular issue I happen to agree with the Senator.

Mr. ASHURST. I am delighted to learn that.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator would know that well if he had been attending the executive sessions of this body.

Mr. ASHURST. If the Senator agrees, why did he not sign the minority report? Let him sign that report if he agrees.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, it was the same Military Affairs Committee which at the last session of Congress revised the court-martial law. The Senator may not be aware of that, but it is true. The revision which was made protecting the private soldier, preventing abuses that have heretofore existed, has met with the commendation of everybody.

Mr. ASHURST. Will the Senator yield to me at that point?

Mr. LENROOT. Certainly.

Mr. ASHURST. Is it not a fact that the Committee on Military Affairs has recommended that this officer be promoted?

Mr. LENROOT. It is; but it is also true, as the Senator knows, if he has been at all conversant with the issue, that there is a question, and I happen to agree with the Senator about that, as I said; there is a fair difference of opinion as to whether that officer was not in the performance of his duty, and in the matter of the use of profanity, the Senator knows he has been censured, and the censure entered upon his record as far as the particular use of profanity is concerned.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, an officer who would curse sick soldiers who had been fighting for days in the iron storm of the Argonne Forest would care precious little about a censure if he could get his promotion.

Mr. LENROOT. Again we are wandering far afield. The Senator from Georgia says he is unwilling to go before the Military Affairs Committee. I am not willing, however, that any officer in the Army shall go free when he ought to be hung, if the Senator from Georgia can produce the proof. So, Mr. President, I move that the Chair appoint a special committee of five Senators to invite the Senator from Georgia to appear before them and to investigate the charges which he makes.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, Senators who are old in the harness know very well how to dodge. I have made no attack here upon the United States Army, nor upon the Navy. What I have said was that officers in France were guilty of unspeakable brutalities against the men who were in their power, and were 3,000 miles away from home, and their voices of complaint could not be heard.

Mr. ASHURST. Some of the officers were so guilty.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Some of the officers, not all of them. Some of them were fine men, and in my speeches I have mentioned some of those officers, and I have had them thank me for it. They were humane to their men. But Senators will remember that case after case was appealed to President Wilson where the court-martial had condemned men to be shot for staying beyond leave a few hours, or perhaps a day or two at the bedside of a dying parent, or because perhaps they had drunk a little too much wine in Paris or some other French city. I ask the Senators of the Military Affairs Committee, was a case ever appealed to President Wilson about a hanging, about the condemnation of a private soldier to be swung up like a thief on the gallows?

Maj. André begged George Washington to have him shot, and not hanged. Washington sternly refused him, because the court-martial had condemned him as a spy within the lines.

If these men who were hanged on those gallows, whose picture I have in my pocket, were condemned by court-martial, why did the cases never come to the attention of President Wilson? Not one of them ever did. Who kept them from coming? Talk about records. Who would keep a record of a thing like that?

In speaking of this the purpose is not to condemn the Army or the Navy, but to purge them of just such men as "Hard Boiled" Smith, and of the officers who gave him his orders, just such men as were commandants at the camp at Gievres, and you can easily find who those men were by inspecting the records. If you want to try them, search the records and find their names and try them. Then we would like to see you hang them.

One of these Army officers squandered $600,000,000, or was virtually accused of it by the present Secretary of State, either through criminal negligence or willful theft, and that officer never was arraigned. The esprit de corps will protect him. They find somewhere, somehow, an invisible power that throws its charmed circle about them, and they can not be brought to law. What I have said I said deliberately, and I repeat it, and I will stand by it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore subsequently appointed Mr. BRANDEGEE, Mr. ERNST, Mr. WILLIS, Mr. OVERMAN, and Mr. POMERENE as the committee.

Mr. NEW subsequently said: Mr. President, will the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to me for a moment?

Mr. PENROSE. For what purpose?

Mr. NEW. To make a statement with reference to the matter that has just been under discussion. I would like to have the RECORD show what the report of the Judge Advocate General of the Army is as to the number of death sentences imposed and the number of executions.

Mr. PENROSE. I will not object, Mr. President, but it is very unfortunate that the revenue bill is delayed. I recognize, however, the very serious character of certain statements made to-day. The Senator from Indiana is entitled to be heard, and I shall not stand in his way.

Mr. NEW. It is not my purpose to delay consideration of this or any other bill longer than a moment.

While the discussion was going on I sought from the Office of the Judge Advocate General an official statement as to just what the record discloses concerning executions in the American Expeditionary Force. I am told from The Adjutant General's office that the record of the Judge Advocate General shows that there were a total of 28 sentences of death imposed upon members of the American Expeditionary Force in France, all of them by court-martial. Nine of them were carried into effect. Of that nine, six were for rape, two for rape and murder, and one for murder. None of them was for a strictly military offense. Of the others, 12 were modified and the remainder were disapproved.

That, Mr. President, is the record as shown in the Judge Advocate General's report, and I make the statement in order that it may appear as a part of the record of this discussion.

TAX REVISION.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8245) to reduce and equalize taxation, to amend and simplify the revenue act of 1918, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the pending amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The pending amendment is found on page 198, line 12, where the committee proposes to insert the following item:

(8) ——

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, out of order I ask unanimous consent to introduce a joint resolution and a bill for proper reference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection——

Mr. PENROSE. There may be objection, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania objects.

Mr. PENROSE. Before the bills are received, I would like to know what they are.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I am simply introducing them for reference, if the Senator please.

Mr. PENROSE. That is an interruption of the consideration of the revenue bill.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. One is a bill for the relief of the city of Raton, N. Mex., and the other is a joint resolution providing for furnishing a copy of the daily CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to American Legion Posts who may request it.

Mr. PENROSE. I will not object, owing to the patriotic purpose of the joint resolution, but ordinarily I do not think miscellaneous business ought to be injected into the proceedings.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the pending amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 198, line 12, the committee proposes to insert the following words:

(8) Photographic films and plates (other than moving-picture films) and other photographic apparatus and accessories, 5 per cent.

Mr. PENROSE. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the words "and other photographic apparatus and accessories."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will report the next amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The committee proposes to strike out, on page 198, lines 15, 16, and 17, in the following words:

SEC. 804. Subdivision (9) of section 900 of the revenue act of 1918 is amended by striking out the figure "5" and inserting in lieu thereof the figure "3."

The amendment was agreed to.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The committee propose to insert, after line 17, page 198, the following:

(9) Candy, 3 per cent, but if sold for more than 40 cents a pound, 10 per cent.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Was it agreed last evening that we were to take up all the items under the title "excise taxes," and consider them whether they were committee amendments or otherwise?

Mr. PENROSE. That is my understanding.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Then I wish to ask if it would be in order at this time to move to reconsider the item on page 196, paragraph (1), under section 900. I understand that has been agreed to. I wish to move to reconsider for the purpose of disagreeing to that amendment, the amendment being one placing a tax of 3 per cent on automobile trucks.

Mr. PENROSE. I understood that the agreement last night was that the reconsideration might begin on page 197, not on page 196. Therefore the Senator's motion would not be in order at this time, as I take it.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I do not wish to violate any agreement or understanding, but I desire to bring before the Senate a motion to reconsider that vote for the purpose of disagreeing to the amendment. If it is not in order now, I shall wait until it is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the next amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The committee proposes to insert, after line 17, the following:

(9) Candy, 3 per cent, but if sold for more than 40 cents a pound, 10 per cent.

Mr. SIMMONS obtained the floor.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I wish to offer an amendment, or did the Senator have a query to make?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes. The lines now proposed to be stricken out are the provisions of the House text which impose a tax of 5 per cent upon candy. It is proposed to strike that out for the purpose of reducing the rate upon candy to 3 per cent.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. PENROSE. Will the Senator from New Jersey permit me a moment? The purpose is to restore the 3 per cent flat rate on candy.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I have an amendment, if it is in order, to strike out all after the words "candy, 3 per cent."

Mr. PENROSE. That is the amendment I was going to offer. Will the Senator offer it when it is in order?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senate was about to adopt the amendment of the committee to the House text by striking out lines 15, 16, and 17. I do not wish that to be done. I wish to discuss the proposition to strike out of the House text the 5 per cent.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. If the Senator will further yield, my amendment provides that the 10 per cent tax on candy selling for over 40 cents a pound shall be stricken out, retaining the 3 per cent tax on candy as it was in the House text. If we disagree to the committee amendment I think it will accomplish the purpose the Senator desires.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the pending amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The committee proposes to insert after line 17, page 198:

(9) Candy, 3 per cent; but if sold for more than 40 cents a pound, 10 per cent.

The Senator from Pennsylvania moves to amend by striking out after the words "per centum" the comma and the words "but if sold for more than 40 cents a pound, 10 per cent."

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I would like to make an inquiry of the Senator as to why that proposition is made? The Senate committee, if I understood their views at the time, were willing to agree to a reduction of the tax from 5 per cent, as it is under the present law, to 3 per cent, but upon condition that where candies sold at more than 40 cents a pound, then the rate of taxation should be 10 per cent. If we strike out that second part of the Senate amendment it would still leave a tax of only 3 per cent, and I doubt whether the committee meant or intended the tax to be as low as 3 per cent unless candies selling for more than 40 cents a pound were taxed at the higher rate proposed by the committee.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I can tell the Senator why I have introduced the amendment striking out the 10 per cent and why I believe 3 per cent is ample. I think the Senate committee overlooked the fact that candy represents in a large measure a great food value in its consumption.

Speaking to the 10 per cent tax imposed on candies selling for over 40 cents a pound and the advisability of striking that out, I wish to say to the Senator from North Carolina that the effect of that discrimination will be to drive off the market those candies now selling between 40 and 50 cents a pound. Forty-cent candy would pay but 1.2 cents tax, while 41-cent candy would pay 4.1 cents tax. The Senator can see that that tax is a discrimination. A 50-cent candy taxed 5 cents could not compete successfully with a 40-cent candy taxed only 1.2 cents. The tendency would be to force all such grades to 40 cents or lower, resulting in a constant temptation to the less scrupulous to adulterate.

I made some investigation of the subject. I thought at first that candy was a luxury, but I learned that a large portion of the candy consumed is consumed practically as a food, particularly chocolates.

The committee proposes to tax a cheap candy of that character [exhibiting] 3 per cent. That is a candy which comes under 40 cents per pound. It ought to be taxed 10 per cent, but it is not. The committee then taxes 10 per cent chocolate which costs 60 cents a pound or 85 cents a pound at retail, that is used for food by almost everyone who eats a moderate luncheon. Many of us make our luncheon of sweet chocolate, and yet that is taxed 10 per cent. I claim that it is an unfair discrimination.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. Who make their luncheon on sweet chocolate and do not eat anything else?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. In France the soldiers many times when they were at the battle front.

Mr. REED. Oh! The war is over.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Clerks who eat a hasty luncheon very often use chocolate. Stenographers and clerks in offices use chocolate as a food. To tax it 10 per cent in the first instance is very excessive and unfair.

Mr. REED. What does it cost wholesale?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Chocolate costs more than 40 cents a pound.

Mr. SIMMONS. That depends, I think, upon who makes it. If it is made by a wholesaler, he sells it to the jobber for more than 40 cents. If it is made by a retailer—and a great many retailers of candy do make their own candies—it does not cost 40 cents.

But I am not enamored of that part of the amendment which the Senator desires to strike out. I thought at the time the committee approved it that it was an unwise provision, but it was adopted by the committee as a supplement to the 3 per cent tax, and if it is stricken out I should say that the tax should then be raised above 3 per cent.

In other words, I do not believe the committee would have put the tax as low as 3 per cent but for the fact that they added a larger tax for the more expensive class of candies. If the Senator's motion prevails, then I shall insist that the rate of tax upon candies as a whole shall be increased and, if not fixed as high as the present law, placed at some point between the committee amendment and the present law.

It may be, as the Senator has said, that a great many people use candy as a food; I think probably that is true with reference to certain chocolates; but the great bulk of the candy of this country is consumed by children and by people who do not buy it and eat it as a substitute for food. It is a luxury; a thing that can be done without. The excessive use of it, in my judgment, is very injurious. I think it is one of those articles that ought to pay a good tax to the Government.

I do not understand the attitude of Senators toward these items in the bill that are not only characterized in the literature that is sent out about them and in the reports that are made by the committees with respect to them as luxuries but which are also regarded in the minds of the people of the country—the public mind—as luxuries. I do not understand the reason which prompts Senators and the committee to strike articles of this character from the list to be subject to these miscellaneous, special excise taxes. The original report of the committee did not eliminate these articles from the bill. Certain luxury taxes, such as those imposed upon the clothing of the people, the committee did strike from the bill, because such taxes were imposed on necessities, but the committee retained, upon the ground that they are luxuries, the items which we are now either striking from the bill or upon which we are reducing the rate of taxation. At the last meeting of the majority membership of the committee there were a number of changes with reference to these luxury items which had been retained in the bill by the committee in their first report. Those changes have resulted, as I have stated, either in an absolute elimination of the luxury items from the bill or in the reduction of the taxes upon them.

Mr. President, I think that the Senate certainly is entitled to some explanation from the majority members of the committee as to why they have changed their policy with reference to these luxury items. I can understand why, in the first instance, they struck out all the so-called luxury taxes upon clothing and articles of common household use, such as trunks and valises and objects of that sort; and I can understand why they originally retained the taxes on other luxury items that are not necessaries, but I can not understand why the majority members of the committee had this change of heart and brought amendments in here to eliminate, or, at least, greatly reduce, the rates of taxation upon these articles of pure luxury; articles that we had usually supposed in exigencies such as now confront the Treasury were legitimate and proper sources of revenue to the Government.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I am of the opinion that the committee amendment proposing to strike out the words "but if sold for more than 40 cents a pound, 10 per cent," ought to be adopted. In my investigation of the subject I believe it is going to be very difficult to administer the proposed law if a distinction is made in the tax rates that are to be imposed upon candy selling at different prices. I am informed that most of the high-priced candy on the market wholesales for 25 cents a pound, which, of course, is under the increased tax rate suggested on candy selling at 40 cents a pound. If that is a fact, the rate upon such candy will be but 3 cents. It seems to me that the rate ought to be the same upon all kinds of candy whether it be 3 or 5 or 10 per cent. If we make the distinction which is sought to be made here by imposing a higher rate upon candy which is sold at wholesale for over 40 cents a pound, it can not be worked out equitably. That is my judgment from an investigation of the subject.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Massachusetts yield to me?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Certainly; I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. KING. The Senator from Massachusetts has stated that he has made some investigation of this matter. I was not sure whether the Senator's investigation was rather toward the administrative aspects of this amendment or with reference to the prices and the profits. If it was the latter, I should like to inquire of the Senator if his investigation did not demonstrate that many of the wholesale manufacturers of candy have, perhaps, been the worst profiteers of any that can be found in the country? I am told by many who have made investigations that the prices of candy are extortionate. I am speaking about the higher priced candies, those candies where a few chocolate pieces are placed in a box and $1 and $1.25 a pound is charged for them.

It seems to me that candy is more of a luxury than a necessity. I think that very many evils are resulting from the excessive use of candy; indeed, many prominent physicians have stated—I express no opinion in regard to their conclusions—that one of the greatest evils to-day results from the excessive use of candy and sugar. It would seem to me, in the light of what we know, that there has been great profiteering, and in the light of the statement recently made by a large manufacturer and vendor of candies in New York, that the prices are 100 per cent too high, that this is a legitimate subject of taxation, and that we ought to place taxes upon these profiteers.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, the objection I make is that we can not discriminate successfully and equitably between candy of different prices. Whether the flat rate ought to be 3 per cent or more I have no special opinion, but I say that we can not discriminate with satisfactory results. The equitable course that we ought to pursue is to adopt a flat tax upon all candy, rather than to attempt to fix a bracket line beyond which the rate will be very heavily increased over the flat rate of 3 per cent fixed for the so-called cheaper candies.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, may I call the Senator's attention to the fact that the amendment does not indicate whether the sales are to be at wholesale or retail.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. The paragraph at the beginning of all these items we are now considering indicates that the tax is to be levied on the manufacturer's or producer's selling price.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I yield the floor; I have nothing further to say.

Mr. WILLIS. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts a question, as I was unable to hear the colloquy between him and my colleague.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I shall be glad to answer any question propounded to me by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. WILLIS. I want to be sure that I understand the Senator. Does he say that the amendment ought to be adopted striking out the language "but if sold for more than 40 cents a pound, 10 per cent." Is the Senator in favor of the adoption of that amendment?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Yes. I think that there ought to be a flat rate upon all candies, whatever may be the rate we agree upon, and that we ought not to discriminate between candy that sells under 40 cents a pound at wholesale and candy which sells for more than 40 cents a pound at wholesale.

Mr. WILLIS. The Senator is well informed upon this matter, and I should like to have his opinion upon this point: If this amendment is adopted, of course, in effect it will simply tax all candy at the same rate, whether it be the cheaper grade or the more expensive kind. Evidently this language which the Senator thinks ought to be stricken out seeks to impose what is in its nature a luxury tax. What I want to know is, why should that specific language be stricken out, thereby putting the cheaper grades of candy, which are used by the larger number of people, on the same basis of taxation as the very expensive candy? I do not see why that amendment should be stricken out.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, of course, at a rate of 3 per cent a pound we will get more revenue on the higher priced candy than on the low-priced candy; and of course, because the receipts will be larger, the manufacturer of the high-priced candy will pay more taxes than the manufacturer of cheap candy. As a matter of fact, I think there is as much profit in cheap candy as in high-priced candy. That is the result of my inquiries about candy and the profits that are made in the candy business. Why do we fix the increased tax on 40-cent candy and not 30-cent or 25-cent or 50-cent candy? Why fix it at 40? It is a pure guess. The candy that is sold by the great combines, I have reason to know, is manufactured for 25 and 30 cents a pound and will not be reached by this increased tax at all. Why favor candy containing cheap ingredients? I do not object to a small tax upon candy equal to that placed on other commodities; I do not object to the suggestion that it is a luxury. What I am suggesting is that it ought to be taxed at a uniform rate and that we ought not to guess at the figure 40 to fix the difference between cheap candy and high-priced candy. Let us fix a uniform tax on all candies and not penalize the manufacturer who makes honest goods with first-class ingredients in sanitary factories.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, the Senator does not contend that the Government could get anything like the same amount of revenue with a tax of simply 3 per cent on all candy that it would get if the amendment were left as the committee reported it, providing a luxury tax upon the higher grades, does he?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I certainly do not so contend; but I do contend that if we put this provision in this bill we will find all of our higher grades of candy being made and sold for 39 cents or less per pound, and that will mean that the ingredients will be inferior and not as high class as the material used at the present time in the best made candy.

Mr. WILLIS. Does the Senator contend that it would be a misfortune to the country if the higher priced candy went down to 39 cents a pound?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I do not think the retail price will go down; I think that simply the wholesale price will go down to meet this provision of the tax law. What I object to is the making of this tax at such a rate that candy manufacturers will be forced into using cheap material and cheap compounds and the public will get an inferior quality of candy for the same price formerly paid.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] made some inquiries as to whether we would get more or less revenue. The estimate of the department is that this amendment will result in the loss of $8,000,000 of revenue; that is to say, if we strike from the bill the provision which seeks to impose a higher tax upon candies selling above 40 cents a pound we shall lose $8,000,000 of revenue. What I am insisting is that if that provision is to be stricken out, resulting in that loss of revenue, we should raise the general rate above 3 per cent and thereby, if not recoup the entire loss as a result of this amendment, at least recoup a part of that loss.

Senators have insisted that the revenue requirements of the Government are barely met by the taxes imposed by this bill. There have been some reductions other than the reduction now proposed, which, in my judgment, when an accurate recalculation is made, will show a reduction of the estimated revenue from this bill below the requirements according to the revised and reduced estimates of the Secretary of the Treasury. Therefore I think we ought not to be carelessly and without due consideration voting out revenue without providing in some way or other a counterbalancing provision.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I have no particular interest in this clause, except that I think we ought to get revenue where it can be collected without being burdensome, or where the burden is as light as possible.

I am informed that if the present amendment is adopted it will take $8,000,000 from the revenue, but that if there is a flat rate of 5 cents on all candy we will get a little over $20,000,000 of revenue from all candy. The present law is 5 cents, and it seems to me we had better just keep it. This amendment ought not to be agreed to unless we at the same time consider, as suggested by the Senator from North Carolina, the question of a flat rate on candy.

This tax is not 3 cents a pound; it is 3 per cent, and then, when we get above 40 cents a pound, it is 10 per cent. I feel like testing the sentiment of the Senate by moving to amend the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania by also striking out the figure "3," in line 18, and inserting the figure "5."

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to make a correction?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. PENROSE. As I understand, the existing law is 5 per cent. The House imposed a tax of 3 per cent flat. In my opinion, the Senate Committee on Finance toward the end of their sessions got considerably involved in the consideration of the candy tax and produced the proposition, "but if sold for more than 40 cents a pound, 10 per cent." So far as I can find out, that does not satisfy anyone or meet any practical requirement, and I have moved—I can not say for the committee, perhaps only for a bare majority of the majority members—to strike out the words "but if sold for more than 40 cents a pound, 10 per cent," so as to leave a flat rate of 3 per cent on candy; and I understand that that is the amendment submitted by the Senator from New Jersey.

I am much obliged to the Senator for permitting the interruption, so that I can state plainly the situation, which seems a little involved.

Mr. REED. My suggestion was that we amend the amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey by adding to it a proposal to change the figure "3" in line 18 to the figure "5," which would make a flat rate of 5 per cent, which is the present law and which would not much alter the revenue which we will get under the amendment proposed by the committee. Perhaps that would be agreeable to the Senator.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not know whether, when I was absent for a few moments, the question of the revenue to be derived was given to the Senate; but I think we ought to understand what it means.

The 5 per cent straight flat tax would bring us in a revenue of about $20,000,000. The 3 per cent, standing alone, would bring us in about $12,000,000. The addition of 10 per cent upon candy selling at wholesale for more than 40 cents a pound would make an addition of $8,000,000, and would bring it up to the $20,000,000 again. So the committee, when it first reported, sought to procure exactly the same amount under the 3 per cent and then the additional sum for the higher-priced candies that they were receiving or would receive if the old law stood at 5 per cent flat.

I want to call the Senator's attention to another feature of the case, and that is this: No candy selling for less than a dollar a pound contains more than 20 cents' worth, or 22 or 23 cents' worth at the most, of material.

Mr. KING. Including labor?

Mr. McCUMBER. This labor would be a little more, and one can not tell just exactly what it would represent; but all of the Senators fully understand that in the case of the higher-priced candy much of the profit is made also on the box in which it is packed. A little 1-pound box, with a pink or blue ribbon on it, in which the candy is placed—candy that perhaps is not worth over 40 cents a pound—would sell for 80 cents to a dollar a pound if so handed out.

I am going to vote for the committee amendment just as it stands now, for 10 per cent upon the higher-priced candy and for 3 per cent upon the lower-priced candy. I can not quite agree with the Senator from Massachusetts that the greater profit is made upon the lower-priced candy. I think by far the greater profits are made upon the higher-priced candy, because, as I say, much of the price is represented in the little blue or pink ribbon, and so forth.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, so far as I am concerned, I am content with the amendment which was reported by the Finance Committee. I agree with the Senator from North Dakota in regard to that. There seems to be a sentiment in favor of striking out the words "but if sold for more than 40 cents a pound, 10 per cent." If that should be adopted we would be left with the 3 per cent tax, and we would lose $8,000,000 of revenue; but if at the same time that we vote upon the proposition to strike out the 10 per cent we vote on an amendment to increase the flat tax to 5 per cent we at least will lose no revenue.

If my amendment to the amendment is adopted, then if the amendment as amended is defeated, we will have the bill as reported by the committee. If, on the other hand, it is adopted, the Government will lose no revenue; and I think the two ought to be coupled together.

Mr. PENROSE. What is the Senator's amendment?

Mr. REED. My amendment is to add to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey this:

> And in line 18 strike out the figure "3" and insert the figure "5."

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I hope that amendment will not prevail. I think the 3 per cent tax on candy is sufficiently high. I do not think the Senate quite realizes how burdensome this tax is going to be upon the poor. A 3 per cent tax or a 5 per cent tax will be borne by the consumer.

A great deal was said yesterday about eliminating the tax on sporting goods and including the tax on toys. Remember that candy is part of the proposition when it comes to giving the children a good time in any festivity, whether it is Christmas, their birthday, or any other time; and a large amount of the candy consumed is consumed by children. I think it is unfair to place a burden of 5 per cent tax on candy, let alone the discrimination of taxing candy only 1.2 cents a pound if it costs under 40 cents a pound, and nearly 5 cents a pound if it costs 45 cents a pound.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator is laboring under an error. This is not a pound tax; it is a per cent tax.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. It is a 10 per cent tax, but if you tax candy costing 50 cents a pound 10 per cent, you tax it 5 cents a pound, do you not? And if you tax candy costing under 40 cents a pound 3 per cent, it is 1.2 cents a pound, is it not? There is a difference of nearly 3 cents a pound in the tax, although the difference in price may be only 5 or 6 cents. That is discriminatory, and imposes an unfair burden; but I claim that a 3 per cent tax is a sufficient tax upon candy, and I think the Senate ought to keep it at 3 per cent.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I want to suggest to the Senator from Missouri that I think the only way we could get a vote upon both of these propositions at one time would be to have him offer as a substitute for the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey an amendment striking out all of this paragraph except the word "candy" and inserting in lieu thereof "5 per cent." I think that would force a vote upon both propositions at one time.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I am not particular about the form. I feel perfectly sure that if we vote upon the amendment I have now offered, and if it should be defeated, the Senate would be confronted with the square proposition of striking out $8,000,000 of revenue and getting nothing back; and then they could vote, of course, in the light of the previous vote. I am perfectly willing, however, to accept the suggestion of the Senator from North Carolina, and move as a substitute for the amendment to the amendment to strike out all of paragraph (9) and to insert in lieu thereof—

Candy, 5 per cent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair desires to suggest that there will be some difficulty in making up the record if amendments in the third degree are permitted; and this is an amendment in the third degree.

Mr. SIMMONS. It is a substitute.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, if we are going to lower the tax on any candy, it ought to be upon the cheaper candy, on the candy that the average child in the country buys; and if we are going to try to save that $8,000,000 we ought to save it on the higher-priced candy, because that is bought only by those who can afford to pay from 80 cents to a dollar or a dollar and a quarter or a dollar and a half a pound for candy.

That would bring us in $8,000,000, and the reason why I oppose the amendment is because I think we ought to have that $8,000,000 out of the higher-priced candy, and I would rather vote it that way and determine that question first.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I do not want to prolong the discussion. I simply offer this suggestion: I think nearly all of the candy that is sold in the market is sold by wholesalers at not much above what it costs to make, at 40, 50, or 60 cents. The excessive prices which are charged, I think, are fixed by the retailer. All I want is to get the revenue, and I agree that the very high-priced candy should have the tax upon it; but it does pay a corresponding revenue, because it is a per cent tax, and the more the candy costs the higher the tax will be. I do not want to insist upon my amendment, except that I would like to have this matter voted on, so that we will understand what we are doing.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. As I understand the Senator, he proposes to retain the present 5 per cent tax on candy in lieu of the amount that is lost by reason of the elimination of 10 per cent on all candy over 40 cents per pound?

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I want the tax on candy reduced simply because I think it is too high and too burdensome. I have no other interest in it. I do not believe there are any candy factories in my State, but I think it is an unjust burden on those who consume candy. Would the Senator accept a compromise making the tax, say, 4 per cent? That would reduce it 1 per cent under the present tax.

Mr. REED. That would mean the loss of $4,000,000.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Yes; it would. It would mean that the consumers would be relieved of the payment of that sum.

Mr. REED. Then the Government would not get it. I have not any great amount of sympathy for the candy consumer. This talk of my friend about poor clerks making their luncheon on chocolate does not appeal to me.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. The Senator can ridicule that, but he knows the food value of chocolate.

Mr. REED. Yes; I know a person might eat a little piece of it once in a while, but to make a meal out of it—nobody ever did that in the world unless he was famished or foolish, one or the other.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Sweet chocolate is not taxed as candy at all. It is not candy and is not so taxed.

Mr. REED. I thank the Senator. I am perfectly content to have the law stand as it is; but if we are going to vote on the other proposition, I would like to have it voted on in the manner I have suggested.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I do not see any reason, from the facts of the situation, why the tax on candy should be less than it is in the present law. At the time that tax was imposed the chief ingredient in the making of candy, namely, sugar, was selling at a very high price, between 20 and 30 cents a pound. To-day that chief ingredient is selling at 5 or 6 cents a pound, and while the raw material of the candy maker has fallen to that extent since the passage of the 1918 act, I have been told, although I do not know whether or not it is true, because I seldom buy candy, that there has been only a very slight reduction in the price of candy, especially the higher grade candies. I do not think an industry that has not responded, as this industry has not, to the lower level of prices upon its raw material is in any position to come to the United States Senate when it is imposing taxes upon its products and ask for such a reduction. I think the tax upon candy in the present law is low enough.

Mr. REED. The labor also has gone down.

Mr. SIMMONS. The labor has gone down, too. The tax is low enough, and no case has been made, in my opinion, for the reduction of the rate of tax.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, last year taxes were collected on 800,000,000 pounds of candy. It is presumed that a hundred million pounds at least escaped taxation, so that in all probability there is an average of 9 pounds of candy consumed by every man, woman, and child in America.

Since prohibition has come and we have stopped the use of intoxicants to a considerable degree, thousands of people have taken to the use of candy. It is my observation, from close study of the whole subject, that to a great many people candy is a necessity, certainly more than tobacco is to a great many men. I am sure, Mr. President, that we can very fairly limit this tax to 3 cents a pound, and that would bring in a great deal of revenue.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President, there is very active competition between the makers of the cheaper candy, and this amendment proposes a 3 per cent tax on gross sales. They have to pay their income and other taxes, and I think as far as we can we ought to reduce the general taxes on the manufacturers where we retain, as we do, other taxes which they are compelled to pay. I know that the competition in the cheaper grades of candy is very active.

Mr. CALDER. I know the competition is very active in the higher grades of candy. I hope the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey will prevail.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from New York a question. I do not desire to be misunderstood in my attitude on this. I am in favor of the reduction of this tax, but what I can not understand is why the Senator's committee now proposes to make a larger comparative reduction in the higher grades of candy than is proposed for the lower and cheaper grades of candy. Why should that be done?

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, in the committee I voted for the 3 per cent tax on all candies. I never agreed that 10 per cent was wise, and I do not now, and in line with the statement of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], in my opinion it would be inequitable and would work a great hardship on the higher and better grades of candy if the 10 per cent tax is levied.

Mr. McLEAN. I call the attention of the Senator to the prime reason why those of us who opposed that amendment thought we ought not to tax the higher grades of candy. For instance, sweet chocolate is not taxed at all, but it comes in competition with chocolate candy, it answers practically the same purpose, so we felt it was unfair to tax the chocolate candy and let the sweet chocolate monopolize the market.

Mr. CALDER. That is another excellent argument.

Mr. McLEAN. I think that is the prime reason.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, it seems to me there is a peculiar dearth of argument here or else a plentitude that is so massive that I can not grasp it. The first appeal was for sweet chocolate for the soldiers who had marched in France some three years ago. That necessity does not exist any more. Now it is discovered that sweet chocolate is not taxed at all.

Next we heard about the poor clerks and stenographers, who had to make their dinners off of it, and now an appeal that would wring tears from the eyes of a marble statue is made for the poor fellow who has had his whisky taken away from him and is about to have his candy taxed. What a heart-rending thing it is when one contemplates it! Here is an old jag walking down the street, with his tongue dry, longing for the thing that has passed away apparently forever, who goes into a candy store and buys a pound of candy which costs 20 cents and which is taxed 6 mills, and that is to close the curtain on the window of his happiness, and he is to see the sunlight of joy no more. That is a funny argument.

The truth is, the excuse for this tax is the excuse for all taxes—the necessity to raise some revenue. The proposition is to take $8,000,000 off the taxes on very high-priced candy. I have offered my substitute not because I am not contented with the report which the committee originally made, but because I want to save the revenue, and because I would like to have it settled in advance whether we are to have a 3 per cent rate if we take off the tax upon higher-priced candy, and I am willing to vote on the substitute.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion that the substitute is not in order. The question is upon the amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, does not an amendment lie to that amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendmeent offered by the Senator from Missouri is an amendment in the third degree. We first have the committee amendment, then the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Jersey, and now the amendment to that amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. I offered a substitute for the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey, and the Chair holds that a substitute is not in order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. So the Chair understands.

Mr. REED. The Chair has held that the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey can not be amended at all?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands the rule of the Senate and of all parliamentary bodies to be that an amendment in the third degree is not in order. We have a committee amendment now pending. To that amendment there is an amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey. The Chair is unable to see how a further amendment can be offered to the paragraph until the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey is disposed of.

Mr. McKELLAR. I desire to ask the Senator from New Jersey what the difference is between his amendment and the House provision? The House provision fixes the tax at 3 per cent, as I understand it.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. My amendment simply strikes out the committee amendment which increased the tax to 10 per cent on candy above 40 cents.

Mr. McKELLAR. I understand that; that leaves the words "candy, 3 per cent"?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. Is not that exactly the same as the House provision?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. It leaves it the same as the House provision.

Mr. McKELLAR. Why not vote down the Senate committee amendment striking out the House provision? Would not that be the way to have it acted upon?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I am not proposing to strike out the House provision. I am amending by striking out the committee amendment.

Mr. FLETCHER. A motion to strike out the committee amendment is not in order. The question is on the adoption of the committee amendment.

Mr. McKELLAR. It seems to me the action should be to strike out the Senate committee amendment to the House provision.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair suggests that the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey is to strike out a part of the committee amendment.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] informs me that it is a motion to strike out and insert. I understand the situation now.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry, if I may do so, that I may understand the situation. The text of the House bill provides 3 per cent——

Mr. McCUMBER. Will the Senator allow me to correct an error that has been prevalent in that respect?

Mr. LODGE. In just a moment when I have propounded my query. The amendment of the committee is pending, is it not, to make it 10 per cent above a certain figure?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair does not so understand.

Mr. REED. If the Senator from Massachusetts will pardon me for making a suggestion to the Chair, the whole trouble arises through the form of the print. As a matter of fact, the committee has proposed an amendment and that amendment is to insert:

Candy, 3 per cent; but if sold for more than 40 cents a pound, 10 per cent.

That is all one amendment and is brought in by the committee.

Mr. LODGE. I can not make head or tail of the different phrases, but as I understand it the 10 per cent amendment is offered by the committee to the House text.

Mr. REED. That is correct.

Mr. LODGE. Then the only question is on agreeing or disagreeing to the committee amendment.

Mr. REED. I may be in error, but as I understand it the committee did not report the House text; they reported a substitute for it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senators will allow the Chair to state the situation as the Chair understands it. The House text provides:

SEC. 804. Subdivision (9) of section 900 of the revenue act of 1918 is amended by striking out the figure "5" and inserting in lieu thereof the figure "3."

The committee proposes to strike out that entire paragraph and insert in lieu thereof—

(9) Candy, 3 per cent, but if sold for more than 40 cents a pound, 10 per cent.

The Senator from New Jersey moves to strike out from the committee amendment the words "but if sold for more than 40 cents a pound, 10 per cent."

Mr. LODGE. That, I understand, is correct, and the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey is a perfecting amendment to the amendment of the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Jersey to the committee amendment.

Mr. REED. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], who is necessarily absent. Therefore I withhold my vote.

Mr. EDGE (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] to the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] and vote "yea."

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL]. In his absence, being unable to obtain a transfer of my pair, I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN (when his name was called). Having a general pair with the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], and being unable to obtain a transfer, I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. HALE (when his name was called). Transferring my pair with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] to the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT], I vote "yea."

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CROW] and vote "yea."

Mr. RANSDELL (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT]. In his absence, I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. SIMMONS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG], whom I do not see in the Chamber. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] and vote "nay."

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]. Being unable to obtain a transfer, I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. TRAMMELL (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I transfer my general pair with the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] to the junior Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] and vote "yea."

Mr. WADSWORTH. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. CALDER] has been summoned from the Chamber on most important business. Were he present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. STERLING. I transfer my pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] to the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. STANFIELD] and vote "yea."

Mr. FLETCHER. I transfer my general pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL] to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] and vote "nay."

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I wish to announce that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] is necessarily absent. He is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS]. If the Senator from Mississippi were present and at liberty to vote, he would vote "nay."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (after having voted in the affirmative). I transfer my general pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] to the junior Senator from California [Mr. SHORTRIDGE] and allow my vote to stand.

The result was announced—yeas 49, nays 23, as follows:

YEAS—49.

So Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN's amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I move to amend the committee amendment, in line 18, page 198, by striking out the numeral "3" and inserting the numeral "5." On that I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). Making the same announcement in reference to my pair as upon the last vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. EDGE (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as previously, I vote "nay."

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to my pair and its transfer as on the preceding vote, I vote "yea."

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as on the former vote, I vote "nay."

Mr. HALE (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as on the previous roll call, I vote "nay."

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). Making the same announcement of the transfer of my pair as previously, I vote "nay."

Mr. RANSDELL (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT]. In his absence, I withhold my vote.

Mr. SIMMONS (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as heretofore with reference to my pair and its transfer, I vote "yea."

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to my pair and its transfer as on the last vote, I will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before with reference to my pair and its transfer, I vote "nay."

Mr. TRAMMELL (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as on the last vote with regard to my pair and its transfer, I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN (after having voted in the negative). On the roll call I transferred my pair to the junior Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER], who has since entered the Chamber and voted. Therefore I withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 19, nays 51, as follows:

So Mr. REED's amendment to the committee amendment was rejected.

Mr. REED. I offer the same amendment as that which has just been voted on, except that the figure "5" shall be changed to "4."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri to the amendment reported by the committee.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 198, line 18, after the word "Candy," it is proposed to strike out "3" and insert "4," so as to read, "Candy, 4 per cent."

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I do not know that there is any use of discussing this question further. We have had a vote on it and have had discussion. I simply want to say that this is in the nature of a tax upon a luxury. All this talk about candy being a necessity is moonshine. It probably does a great deal more harm than it does good. This fight has been made not by the babies who are crying for candy, not by the old drunkards who are languishing for sweets, not by the soldiers who marched in France and ate chocolate three years ago, but it is being made by the manufacturers in order to escape a manufacturers' tax burden upon a luxury. That is all there is in the question. It means $20,000,000 of revenue. We have lost $8,000,000 of that now by the amendment which has been adopted. The amendment which I am now offering will restore $4,000,000, so that we will get $16,000,000 a year out of candy instead of $20,000,000, as we should.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri to the amendment reported by the committee. [Putting the question.] The Chair is in doubt.

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask for a division.

On a division the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on agreeing to the committee amendment as it has been amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The committee also proposes to insert, on page 198, beginning with line 20:

(10)—

It should be "(7)" under the changes—

Firearms, shells, and cartridges, except those sold for the use of the United States, any State, Territory, or possession of the United States, any political subdivision thereof, or the District of Columbia, 10 per cent.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if we are to select industries and tax them, I think at least the taxes, now that we have returned to a state of peace, might be made more reasonable in the interest of business and industry.

I do not desire to argue the matter at any length; but the industry involved is a legitimate one, licensed and recognized by all the States, and I move, in line 24, to strike out "10" and insert "5," so that it will read "5 per cent."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. In the amendment of the committee, on page 198, line 24, it is proposed to strike out "10" and insert "5."

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I think that would be a great mistake. I regret that the committee has not gone further in the matter of firearms, and devised some tax and if possible some license system to put a restraint upon the production and wide sale of firearms. The fact is that we pick up the papers day after day and read of murders and assaults committed by irresponsible people who are able to buy firearms without any restraint at all, and at the lowest of prices. I believe it is a matter with which the single States are not able to deal. It is a matter which ought to be taken under national control. I should like not only to see a system by which we would tax the manufacturer of these firearms, so as to make them expensive, but I should like to see a system by which we would tax the men who deal in firearms and sell them to the public, whether they are sold at first hand or at second hand. I think it is a great mistake to alleviate in any degree the tax upon firearms that the committee has proposed.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I agree with a great deal that the Senator says about the necessity for more stringent laws in regard to the sale of firearms. I do not think, however, that raising the tax will have any effect whatever on the sale. If we could prohibit it by a tax, that would be a very simple solution; but I do not think it would make any difference. The people who ought not to have firearms are the very people who will buy them, tax or no tax.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. When some half-witted criminal can go into a store that is operated without any license whatever and buy a deadly weapon for a few dollars that he may have in his pocket and go out and shoot some reputable citizen, I think it is an evil that ought to receive the attention of Congress.

Mr. LODGE. I agree with that. I think it ought to.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The various States have endeavored to deal with this matter; but of what use is it for one State to legislate, when a criminal can cross a border and procure a weapon in another State? What I regret is that the committee has not undertaken in some comprehensive way to tax those who deal in firearms, and require them to procure licenses from the Government of the United States, and not permit any one to buy a firearm without a record being made of the purchase. I believe that would be quite within the power of Congress; and until some national effort is made by Congress, we are not going to get out of that result of the war. The use of firearms now is probably more general than it has been within the recollection of any of us.

Mr. LODGE. I agree that there is a great deal in that.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The worst classes in the community are able to buy these firearms, and I do not think we ought to encourage the manufacture of them. I believe we ought to restrict the manufacture by taxes, so that they would not be made so easily accessible to the vicious and criminal classes.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I recognize the evil as fully as the Senator from Nebraska does. We have, however, nothing in this bill that would reach it at all. This is a mere question of a manufacturers' tax. The manufacture, I think, is chiefly of shotguns and rifles for sporting purposes. I think that is what the principal industry is. I do not think the murders, and so forth, are committed in that way. They are committed chiefly with revolvers, and, of course, they are included in this provision; but I do not see any reason for breaking down the industry of manufacturing shotguns and sporting rifles. That is the reason why I suggested a lower tax.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, Senators have just voted a tax of 3 per cent on candy. They have also voted a tax of 3 per cent on trucks, automobile wagons, vehicles that have become almost as essential for the transaction of modern business as the railroads themselves. They have voted a 3 per cent tax on candy, and have voted a 5 per cent tax on automobiles and motor cycles. The automobile has taken the place of the buggy and the carriage. It has become as much a necessity as anything that is used in our modern life, except food and clothing. You have taxed automobiles and motor cycles 2 per cent higher than we tax candy, in the face of the fact that the candy manufacturer has not reduced his war-time prices, while his raw materials have been reduced from three to four hundred per cent. You have voted a 3 per cent tax on candy, and you have voted a 5 per cent tax on tires, tubes, and parts of automobiles and trucks and automobile wagons; and now it is proposed to reduce the duty on firearms, cartridges, and shells to the same tax that we impose upon automobiles and upon automobile parts—the one a necessity, the other leading to and responsible for much of the crime that is being committed in this country at this time.

Nearly every State in this Union makes the carrying of a concealed weapon a misdemeanor and punishes it with a severe penalty. The pistol is the chief arm that is protected by this proposed reduction in taxation. It is the weapon that is carried concealed about the person of the criminal, and frequently carried concealed about the person of the man who is not a criminal but who carries it for the purpose of protection, and uses it sometimes upon little provocation. The shells that are being made are not for guns, because there is relatively very little use of guns in this country. The chief use is of pistols. That is what shells are manufactured for. Now it is proposed to reduce their taxes down upon the level of the taxes that we have imposed upon these necessary vehicles of commerce and of business. I do not understand this system of dealing with the question of taxation.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SPENCER in the chair). Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. SIMMONS. I yield.

Mr. WILLIS. Can the Senator give me any estimate as to the probable effect of this amendment upon the revenues?

Mr. SIMMONS. I have the figures, but I do not find them at this moment. The Senator from Utah tells me that the revenue is $1,700,000. It is not the matter of revenue that I am discussing now; it is the matter of the inequity in this proposition of taxing a thing the use of which we wish to curtail, which is not a necessity, but of which the possession and ownership very frequently leads the owner to the commission of crime, and also enables the owner sometimes to accomplish his purpose to commit crime. Do you want to show the pistol the same favor and consideration, when we are imposing taxes, that we show to the necessary vehicles of commerce? Surely not.

Mr. President, I could go through this bill and point out scores of instances where things of absolute necessity are taxed at a higher rate than we have either taxed candy or now propose to tax firearms. During the war we imposed extremely high taxes, as we thought at the time, in the nature of stamp taxes, to be used in connection with the ordinary transactions of business, transfers of property, the execution of notes, insurance policies, and the like. Those high war taxes are retained in this bill—taxes that levy a burden upon every business transaction in real estate and nearly every business transaction in banking matters that permeate our whole system of trade and traffic. We are keeping those high taxes, and you propose to cut down the taxes upon luxuries or take them off altogether, while making no reduction in the taxes upon necessities.

Have you reduced the tax upon automobiles?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, give us a vote on trucks. When the time comes, I have suggested this morning that I propose to offer an amendment to defeat the proposition here to tax trucks and truck parts.

Mr. SIMMONS. I hope the Senator will be successful, but I am dealing with the bill as I find it now. I am trying to point out here a situation which, even if it does not strike others as it does me, I want to say, appalls me.

This astounding course seems to be the policy upon which we are to fix the rates, not only as to this particular item but other items in this bill, quite a number of which we have already considered and acted upon. It is wrong, Mr. President. I do not know why this policy is being pursued. I can not myself see any reason or justification, unless some can be found in the obligations of the majority party to certain interests in the United States.

There is no necessity of my occupying the time of the Senate to do more than to protest, because it seems that in the matter of these special taxes and excise taxes the policy of removing the tax on luxuries and doing nothing toward lowering the taxes on the necessities embraced in those two sections of the bill has been agreed upon by the other side, and despite any arguments we may make they are going to carry out their purpose. But, Mr. President, I do not propose that that shall be accomplished without making my solemn protest against the policy which underlies the whole scheme which is now being put through.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, it seems to me that instead of reducing the tax on these articles their sale ought to be prohibited altogether by law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is upon the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the next amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. At the top of page 199 the committee proposes to change the number of the subsection from (11) to (8) and to offer the following amendment:

Hunting and bowie knives, 10 per cent.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, I am not versed in the literature of bowie knives. I should like to have some member of the committee explain how the item bowie knives occurs in subsection (11) rather than in (12). I supposed a bowie knife was a sort of a weapon of offense and defense. Why are not bowie knives classified with dirk knives, daggers, sword canes, and so forth?

Mr. SMOOT. A bowie knife is used by hunters. Dirk knives, daggers, sword canes, stilettos, and brass or metallic knuckles are things we want to prohibit if possible.

Mr. WILLIS. I understand that; but I thought bowie knives came in that class also.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, no; a bowie knife is a hunting knife.

Mr. WILLIS. Very well.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the next amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The committee also proposes to insert on page 199, beginning on line 2, subsection (12), which should be subsection (9), the following language:

Dirk knives, daggers, sword canes, stilettos, and brass or metallic knuckles, 100 per cent.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the next amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The committee proposes to strike out lines 4 and 5, page 199.

The amendment was agreed to.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The committee proposes to insert, beginning on line 6, subsection (13), which should be (10), "Portable electric fans, 5 per cent."

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, according to the agreement reached, the committee now wishes the amendment on page 199, line 6, to be disagreed to.

Mr. KING. I would like to inquire what the present tax is.

Mr. SMOOT. It is 5 per cent.

Mr. KING. That was my understanding. The words found in line 6 merely perpetuate the existing law?

Mr. SMOOT. That is all. It yields $300,000.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think the Senator ought to give the Senate the benefit of the reason for striking this item out of the tax bill.

Mr. SMOOT. The electric fan has become almost a necessity.

Mr. SIMMONS. Does the committee propose to strike out the other necessities which are being taxed?

Mr. SMOOT. I would like to see that done.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am talking about the committee. I know what the Senator proposes in his amendment; but I am talking about the committee. The Senator is now speaking for the committee, I understand.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; and the committee desires that this amendment be disagreed to.

Mr. KING. It seems to be very popular in the consideration of this tax bill to vote for everything that will reduce taxes. I have discovered since I have been in the Senate that it is popular to vote for appropriations, but unpopular to vote to lay taxes upon the people. We spend the greater part of our time voting appropriations, and so depleting the Treasury as to necessitate the borrowing of money in peace times to meet the current expenses of the Government. In short, time certificates are constantly being issued by the Treasury because the revenues are inadequate to meet the expenses. We are now devoting some little time to the formulation of a tax bill, but after it is reported the efforts of many Senators are directed to relieving wealth of taxation. I opine that our Republican friends will be in a dilemma pretty soon, when they attempt to balance the national budget. We are, as the Senator from North Carolina suggested a moment ago, reducing taxes upon luxuries, upon corporations, and must, if we secure sufficient revenue, increase the taxes upon necessities. This course emphasizes more and more the incongruous, inconsistent, and indefensible elements contained in the pending measure.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I do not think there will be anything stricken from the bill that will interfere with the raising of sufficient revenue to pay the estimated expenses of the Government. A majority of the majority of the committee decided that this item should not be agreed to, because of the fact that portable electric fans are used in sick rooms and hospitals and in almost every home, and we thought the item ought to go out. Therefore I ask that this committee amendment be disagreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The committee proposes to strike out, on page 199, lines 7 to 11, inclusive, as follows:

SEC. 806. Subdivisions (14), (15), (16), (17), and (18) of section 900 of the revenue act of 1918 are amended by striking out the subdivision numbers at the beginning thereof and substituting in lieu thereof "(13)", "(14)", "(15)", "(16)", and "(17)", respectively.

The amendment was agreed to.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The committee proposes to insert, beginning with line 12, page 199, subsection (14), which should read (10), as follows:

Thermos and thermostatic bottles, carafes, jugs, or other thermostatic containers, 5 per cent.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the committee desires that that amendment be disagreed to.

The amendment was rejected.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The committee proposes to insert, beginning on line 14, subsection (15), which should read (10), the following:

Cigar or cigarette holders and pipes, composed wholly or in part of meerschaum or amber, humidors, and smoking stands, 10 per cent.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am directed by the committee to ask that this amendment be disagreed to.

Mr. KENYON. Will not the Senator give the Senate some reason for that action?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I would like to know why the committee asks that it be disagreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. I think that the majority of the majority of the committee decided that this item ought to go out. The revenue to be derived from it is only $150,000. Cigarettes themselves, of course, are taxed very heavily in the bill. All these are smokers' items, and the committee thought that in consideration of the other taxes imposed they ought to take this out of the bill. Therefore, Mr. President, in behalf of the committee I ask that the amendment be disagreed to.

Mr. KENYON. I would like to ask why the Senator did not include in the exception corncob pipes as well as meershaum and amber. The corncob pipe is one of the great national institutions.

Mr. SMOOT. The only reason is that corncob pipes are not subject to a tax.

Mr. KENYON. The Senator is asking to have them all taken out now. He would put meershaum and amber on the same plane with corncob pipes?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the committee on page 199, beginning with line 14, to insert the matter found on lines 14, 15, and 16.

The amendment was agreed to.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The committee also proposes to insert, beginning on line 17, page 199, subsection (16), which should read (11), as follows:

(11) Automatic slot-device vending machines, 5 per cent, and automatic slot-device weighing machines, 10 per cent; if the manufacturer, producer, or importer of any such machine operates it for profit, he shall pay a tax in respect to each such machine put into operation equivalent to 5 per cent of its fair market value in the case of a vending machine, and 10 per cent of its fair market value in the case of a weighing machine.

The amendment was agreed to.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 200 the committee proposes to insert lines 1 and 2, as follows:

(12) Liveries and livery boots and hats, 10 per cent.

The amendment was agreed to.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The committee also proposes to insert on page 200, beginning at line 3:

(13) Hunting and shooting garments and riding habits, 10 per cent.

Mr. SMOOT. I am directed by the committee to ask that the Senate disagree to that amendment.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I should like to inquire why?

Mr. SMOOT. As far as possible the committee have tried to take out of the bill all garment and clothing taxes, and for that reason they ask that this go out. I will say to the Senator from Iowa that the revenue is about $171,000 derived from this source.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, the loss of revenue is not large, but I can see no reason why, when the tax is already imposed in the law, it should be taken off. Most of those who use special hunting and shooting garments and riding habits are amply able to pay the tax, especially riding habits, as the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD] suggests to me. They do not constitute a necessity by any means. If one wishes to engage in hunting, he can hunt in ordinary clothing without specially made clothes for that purpose, and the same is true as to riding.

This is not an oppressive tax. It is a very light tax, not only imposed upon people who are able to pay it but I think the present law, which was passed at a time when we were searching every nook and cranny to find something out of which to get money for the purpose of winning the war, was just when this source of revenue was selected, and no mistake was made.

While the war is over and we do not have to raise quite as much money as we did during the war, nevertheless we have to raise now four times as much as the requirements of the normal expenditures of the Government. Our taxes, therefore, may be said to have been increased, as the result of the war up to this time, 400 per cent. So when we have found an article like this which is a legitimate subject of taxation, and put a light tax upon it, I do not understand why the committee wants to strike it out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WILLIS in the chair). The absence of a quorum is suggested. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Brandegee	Heflin	McKinley	Simmons
Broussard	Hitchcock	McLean	Smoot
Calder	Johnson	McNary	Spencer
Cameron	Jones, N. Mex.	Moses	Stanfield
Capper	Jones, Wash.	Myers	Stanley
Caraway	Kendrick	Nelson	Sutherland
Curtis	Kenyon	New	Townsend
Dial	Keyes	Newberry	Trammell
Dillingham	King	Nicholson	Wadsworth
Edge	Ladd	Norbeck	Warren
Ernst	La Follette	Norris	Watson, Ga.
Fernald	Lenroot	Oddie	Weller
Fletcher	Lodge	Pittman	Willis
France	McCormick	Poindexter
Hale	McCumber	Ransdell
Harris	McKellar	Sheppard

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-one Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The Secretary will report the next amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 200 the committee proposes to strike out lines 5 and 6, in the following words:

SEC. 807. Subdivision (19) of section 900 of the revenue act of 1918 is amended to read as follows.

The amendment was agreed to.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The next amendment is on page 200, in the section relating to articles made of furs, where, in line 10, it is proposed to strike out "5 per cent" and insert in lieu "10 per cent."

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the committee recommend that we strike out lines 7 to 15, inclusive, which is known as the fur subsection.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is an amendment offered by the majority members of the committee?

Mr. SMOOT. That is correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. May the Chair be permitted to suggest that the orderly way of procedure now would be to take a vote on the committee amendment in line 10, just stated by the Secretary.

Mr. SMOOT. I apologize to the Chair. I notice now that there is a committee amendment in the paragraph.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the committee amendment in line 10, to strike out "5 per cent" and insert "10 per cent."

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, I wish to say a word on the subject of furs. I believe I had not been in the Senate more than an hour or two, at any rate not more than a day or two, when I called the attention of the Senate to a point which I wished to make. I shall always remember the courtesy of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], who was then chairman of the Finance Committee, and the warm feeling of gratitude which I had toward him then when he consented to accept the suggested amendment. It seemed to me that it was the height of statesmanship.

The committee now seeks to strike out the tax on garments the component parts of which of largest value are furs. Here are three reasons which seem to me to make that situation unanswerable as the committee puts it before us.

In the first place, it is unfair to put a tax upon garments of which fur is a component part when there is no tax on garments that are made of velvet or silk or satin. Furs essentially are not luxuries. In the part of the country from which the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] comes, and in the western part of the United States, and even in the Central West, furs mainly are necessaries, and why there should ever be a tax imposed upon garments of which furs are a part when there is no tax upon any other article of wearing apparel, lace or silk or satin, is to me unanswerable.

There is another thing. There is an international question involved in the tax on furs. Many Senators know that for some years the Government of the United States has had the dyeing and dressing of all skins of seals caught in the Pribilof Islands, both those that belong to the United States and those that belong in smaller part to Russia and Japan. They have all been handled by the United States. They are now being handled by the United States. It has been a tremendous struggle to bring the market for those furs from London, where for years it was, to the United States. It is here now. Those furs are dyed and dressed in St. Louis. They are sold in St. Louis for the Government account. If we put a tax of 10 per cent on every garment of which the component part greatest in value is fur, we have struck a body blow at the fur industry and the keeping of it in this country.

I think I am correct in the information which I now give to the Senate that from the Department of Commerce there came to the Committee on Finance information very largely such as I have now given, which was probably one of the reasons why the committee are now of the opinion that the tax upon garments made of fur should be eliminated.

One other thing and I am through. When we were arranging the war tax the committee put a tax upon 15 furs and mentioned them. The fur industry of the United States said, "This is a war tax. The Government needs the money. Here is an additional list of furs which ought also to be taxed, though the burden falls on us." So from the fur industry came the suggestion to the Government during the World War of putting a tax on all furs, and that tax was so imposed. That time has ended. From the standpoint of justice and our relationships with other nations in connection with seals, I submit that the tax on furs is not a fair tax.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, the question of whether or not certain articles are luxuries depends entirely upon time and place. Probably 100,000 years ago, before the human family had shed the hair off their backs, clothing was a luxury. If there was any clothing used at all, perhaps it was only beads and such articles worn for ornamental purposes; but as time went on, as the human family began to press north and south of the torrid regions and to get into the colder regions of the earth, more clothing became necessary; clothing ceased to be a luxury and became a necessity. As civilization has progressed and people are compelled to live in some portions of the United States and Canada and other regions of the world where there are nine months of winter and three months of rather cool weather, clothing not only became an essential, but fur also becomes a necessity. Inasmuch, perhaps, as half of the area of the United States is so situated that we may figure on from three to six months of rather cold weather, I can not understand how anyone can claim that fur is a luxury. It certainly is a necessity in my State. Even though a lady may get along without fur very well in Florida or Louisiana, she needs it in Minnesota and North Dakota and Michigan and New York; she needs it as an essential article of clothing. I have opposed in the committee any tax upon clothing; and fur being a form of clothing, I think we should strike out the tax altogether and let people dress as well as they can and as cheaply as they can and be enabled to purchase those things which they find necessary in order to keep them warm during the winter months.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Will the Senator allow me to add to his information on the subject which he is discussing?

Mr. McCUMBER. With pleasure.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Down in the South, as the Senator from North Dakota has stated, we do not have very much cold weather; but it is a fact that in the warmest weather of May and June it is a fashion there for ladies when they go out to wear a full set of costly furs. Those furs cost anywhere from $50 to $500. I ask the Senator does he not think that those who wear those furs as a matter of luxury or display when the sun is broiling hot on our streets might pay something for the luxury of that display?

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, if the Senator from Georgia can point out to me the line of demarcation between the necessity and the luxury and will advise me, whether he adopts Mason and Dixon's line as the dividing line for the application of this tax, I may help him out; but I do not wish the people of my State to be taxed for the fur that is necessary in order to keep the women warm because some ladies in his State see fit to wear furs in the hot month of July.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Far be it from me to point out any line for fashionable ladies anywhere; that is none of my business; but I will tell the Senator that down where I live.

in a town of about 2,000 inhabitants, I have seen women of both colors, black and white, clothed from head to foot in furs, when I myself was glad to wear the lightest suit I could get.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, the present discussion is proceeding upon the supposition that the motion is to strike out this tax entirely, whereas the real question before the Senate is whether or not the Senate will agree to the committee amendment changing in line 10 the per cent from 5 to 10. I am in favor of the change. It seems to me that there are so many exceptions in this paragraph that there can be no hardship on our friends from the West and in the colder regions. For instance, the first exception is:

Except those sold to a manufacturer for use in the manufacture of fur articles.

There is no tax upon that class at all. The second exception is:

Except raw, dressed, or dyed skins of sheep, goats, calves, cattle, or horses.

They are all excepted from the tax under this provision. The provision continues:

And except coats sold at less than $30.

They are all excepted from this tax. So it looks to me as though the exceptions in the section relieve it of all objections whatever. As the tax will apply only to sables and such articles as the Senator from Georgia mentioned, I can not see any objection to continuing the tax, in fact, to increasing it, from 5 per cent to 10 per cent.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. SPENCER. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that there is no exemption in regard to manufacture; it is a mere exemption where the manufacturers are holding it in the process of making another article; but every article that is manufactured of fur is taxed.

I call the Senator's attention also to an exception on the skins of cattle and horses which do not furnish very many fur coats; neither do goats and sheep; but all cheap furs, like muskrat and catskins and rabbit skins, are taxed. I leave it to the Senator's sense of fairness, in view of the fact that if I buy a cloth overcoat containing no fur for $100 I pay no tax, whether the man in the Central West or far West who buys a cheap fur coat for $50 or $60 should be compelled to pay a 10 per cent tax on it. We think of furs sometimes as luxuries, but the cases where they can be so considered are negligible. I can hold in my hand as many sables as I have seen in my life. The quantity of those expensive furs is negligible. The great body of fur garments are those that are made of cheap furs and are worn by people who need them for warmth. Yet they are taxed by this bill, when articles that do not contain fur in their composition are free from tax irrespective of their cost or their luxury. Is it fair to tax a garment that happens to have fur in its composition when we allow velvet and lace and silk and satin, irrespective of their value, to go absolutely free of taxation?

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield further?

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes; but I was only going to suggest that I am willing to increase the price of coats excepted from $30 to $50, if that would be agreeable to the Senators.

Mr. KENYON. I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri if he can not devise some amendment that will cover the cases cited by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. WATSON] of the idiots who march around in July and August with furs around their necks? There ought to be some way of getting at that so-called fashion; we can not send those who follow it to the insane asylum.

Mr. SPENCER. Not so long as human nature is as it is, It is a ridiculous fashion, but it is negligible.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I simply wish to say to the Senator from Florida that I certainly believe he would give to the people in my State when the thermometer is 30 degrees below zero the right to buy something besides a goatskin or a calfskin or a cowhide or a horse skin for the purposes for which fur is used. Those commodities are exempted from taxation, and, while men may wear such skins, yet I do not think the Senator would insist that if the ladies in the Northern States wear anything better than a goatskin they should pay a heavy tax for doing so.

Mr. FLETCHER. That is not my language; that is the language of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee on page 200, in line 10.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the next amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] moves to strike out, beginning with line 7, all down to and including line 15, on page 200, as follows:

(19) Articles made of fur on the hide or pelt, or of which any such fur is the component material of chief value (except those sold to a manufacturer for use in the manufacture of fur articles), 5 per cent. This paragraph shall apply to all such articles which are commonly or commercially known as fur, except raw, dressed, or dyed skins of sheep, goats, calves, cattle, or horses, and except coats sold at less than $30, of which such skins are the component materials of chief value.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Utah to strike out from line 7 to line 15, inclusive, on page 200.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, the proposition now is to strike out altogether the tax on furs. In the present law the tax is 10 per cent. The House bill reduced that to 5 per cent, and the Senate committee restored it to 10 per cent. Now the Senate has voted out the 10 per cent tax, and the committee moves to eliminate from the bill the whole section, and impose thereby no tax at all upon furs.

I have felt that the House was entirely justified under the circumstances in making a reduction in the present rate. The House struck out all taxes upon clothing, but retained the tax on furs. I myself was not indisposed to accept their rate of 5 per cent, which is just one-half of the present rate; but the proposition to strike it out altogether is one that does not appeal to me, because I have always been led to believe and to think that expensive furs are not necessities at all, and I thought when we were framing the present law that they constituted an entirely legitimate subject of taxation.

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] rather disarms me in my purpose to make a somewhat vigorous protest and fight against reducing the tax below 5 per cent or striking it out altogether. He says this is rather a sectional matter; that furs are not a luxury in the cold regions of the West, and especially of the Northwest, and are not a luxury in the cold regions of the far eastern section of our country and the middle section of the northern States, but are necessary articles; that while furs might be, as the Senator, I think, put it, a luxury in the South, they are a necessity in other sections of the country to which I have referred.

Mr. President, I certainly have not any sectional feeling about this matter; and if the balance of the country thinks that this article is a necessity there and not a necessity in my section of the country I am somewhat embarrassed in presenting my opposition to the motion now made by the committee. However, without seeking to press my views at all as I have on some of these other amendments, I want to say that I am not convinced that this is not a legitimate subject of taxation under the circumstances, or that 5 per cent is too much tax to impose upon it.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I admit that there may be difficulties at times in drawing a satisfactory line between commodities and articles which are luxuries and those which are necessities. But, generally speaking, those articles which fall within the classification of necessities are fully understood and appreciated; and because there may be some difficulty in a proper classification of commodities that is not sufficient reason to prevent a recognition of such a difference and applying a system of taxation that will properly deal with such recognized difference.

Those upon the other side of the aisle seemed determined to prevent any excise provisions being incorporated within this bill. They are assailing the provisions of this measure which impose excise taxes upon the various articles mentioned in the bill. The purpose of this course seems more and more manifest as the consideration of this measure proceeds. There can only be one reason, namely, the execution of a plan to lay a general consumption tax upon the people. A most extensive propaganda has been waged for months in favor of a sales tax. A part of this propaganda has been devoted to the advocacy of a turnover sales tax. There are those who have urged that the tax be limited to the manufacturers of the United States and their products. But in various forms the demand has come to us that taxes shall be lifted from corporations and big business and wealth, and a general system of consumption taxes adopted by the United States.

What we do now will probably constitute a precedent that will determine the fiscal policies of the Nation for years to come. If the efforts to abolish excess profits or undue profits upon corporate or individual business and taxes upon large incomes shall succeed, then, of course, a consumption tax will be inevitable. The persistent efforts made to eliminate all excise taxes and to prevent the imposition of heavy taxes upon incomes and excess profits justify the conclusion that there is a deep-seated purpose to impose a system of consumption taxes upon the American people. All efforts to tax luxuries have met with persistent opposition by members of the majority in the Senate. This lends support to the belief that when this bill shall finally pass the Senate it will contain provisions imposing burdens upon the necessities of life.

I admit, Mr. President, that in singling out articles to lay taxes upon, injustices may be done. It is almost impossible to draft a tax bill that will do equal and exact justice to all. However, our experience demonstrates that there are certain articles that may be taxed and from which large revenues may be obtained and the taxation of which would not be oppressive to the people. Perhaps no scientific system of taxation is possible, if by the word "scientific" it is meant that the system must square with all principles of science and logic. The important thing is to adopt a system of taxation which is just; one which has in mind the interests of the masses of the people; one in which its operations will secure the greatest good to the greatest number.

Governments rest upon the people, and their welfare is the prime object of government. Not only political liberty is essential where good government exists, but it is important that there be industrial liberty. Indeed, the great problem nowadays is to secure industrial liberty. Our fathers laid the foundations of political liberty, and the American people are in the enjoyment of that great heritage. It is important that there be economic freedom and that our industrial conditions shall be such as to make for the perpetuation of our political system. Political liberty would be unavailing unless there were industrial liberty. I am afraid that too many Senators have overlooked the close relation between economic and industrial liberty and progress and the question or problem of taxation. A vicious system of taxation may be destructive of the industrial welfare and liberty of the people.

With the heavy demands made by the Federal Government it is important that the toiling masses shall not have placed upon them burdens which they can not bear and burdens which they should not bear. I have said during this debate, and again repeat the statement, that the taxes needed by the Government must be obtained from those who are best able to bear them. That does not mean that there should be confiscatory legislation or tax laws which will destroy our capitalistic system. Full opportunity must be given for the production of wealth and for the accumulation of savings. I am opposed to the invocation of the taxing power of the State to bring about what may be called a leveling process. Under the guise of taxation thrift must not be penalized and the energies of the people sacrificed.

The English-speaking people have always contended for a just system of taxation, and we must seek to follow that tradition.

I concede the difficulties connected with the formulation of a tax bill at this time, and I admit that grievous inequalities have appeared in our revenue bills in the past and will undoubtedly mar future tax measures; but, so far as possible, our efforts should be to deal out equal and exact justice to all. Wealth should gladly assume the heavy burdens which the condition of the country places upon it. It should not attempt to shirk, but it should meet all legitimate demands willingly.

There is much to support the charge that the majority of the Finance Committee, the committee reporting this bill, adopted a theory in its formulation that was discriminatory against the masses. The controversy since the bill came to the floor of the Senate has been between those forces which sought to exempt wealth from taxation and place the burdens upon the people and those elements which contended that the burden of taxes should be laid upon the shoulders of the rich—not because they were rich, but because of their ability to bear such burdens and because it was just that those who profited by the Government and who amassed fortunes under the Government and by reason of its laws and its protection should make contribution for its maintenance.

Mr. President, I am not convinced by the arguments of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER] that we should eliminate all taxes upon furs. I attempted to follow his able presentation of the matter, but was not convinced that all who are engaged in the manufacture or sale of furs should be exempt from taxation. Concede that furs as clothing are necessities in some parts of our country, nevertheless the overwhelming majority of those using them in such sections do not purchase furs of great value; they purchase cheap furs; and perhaps such purchases, or the transactions involved in such purchases, should be exempt from taxation. In line 14 of the pending provision the exemption extends to all transactions where the amount involved is under $30. Perhaps it would be wise and just to raise this maximum limit to $50 or a sum higher than that. I am inclined to think, Mr. President, that the Senator from North Dakota lays too much stress upon the use of furs by the great mass of the people.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. McCUMBER. Can the Senator give me some idea of what it costs to-day to get a lady's coat made out of skunk skin or out of muskrat skin? I am asking that as a basis for the Senator's fixing a price above which he would apply the tax.

Mr. KING. I will attempt to answer that question after the Senator answers the question which I shall propound to him. What proportion of the men and women of his State use furs of the character just embraced in his question?

Mr. McCUMBER. A great many of them use the muskrat skin, and of late years the skunk skin is being utilized to a great extent—mainly the muskrat skin; but remember that it is not merely a question of the entire coat. Even the cloth coats generally will have fur around the neck or around the sleeves, or something; and under this bill, if any of the component parts are of fur, they are made taxable.

Mr. KING. First, let me read a line or two of the bill:

> Articles made of fur on the hide or pelt, of which any such fur is the component material of chief value.

In view of the limitation or restriction incorporated in the words to which I have just called the Senator's attention, it is apparent, it seems to me, that coats having a small strip of fur, or where the fur constitutes less than 50 per cent of the value, would not come within the provisions of the bill.

Mr. McCUMBER. Let us take an ordinary plush coat, we will say a silk plush coat or a cotton plush coat of a lady. Then it would have, as we have in North Dakota, a fur collar to turn up over the ears on a cold day. I think the Senator will find that the collar costs about twice as much as the coat without the collar.

Mr. KING. Would the Senator denominate the collar, in the case to which he has just referred, the "component material of chief value"?

Mr. McCUMBER. Why, yes. If the collar was worth, say, $25 to $30, and the coat without the collar was worth from $15 to $20, of course the component material of chief value would be the fur.

Mr. KING. I am not satisfied that the Senator is correct in his interpretation of the language:

> Articles made of fur on the hide or pelt, or articles—

I am interpolating the word "articles" there—> of which any such fur is the component material of chief value.

I do not believe that a proper construction of that section would reach garments of the character just alluded to by the Senator.

Coming back to the question which my friend propounded a moment ago, I do not know that I can answer him with any degree of accuracy as to the cost of the garments to which he referred; but I presume articles of that character would cost from $500 to $750 each.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think the Senator is a little high on that. I think they are very expensive when they run from $150 to $250, but I do not think they would run up to $500 to $750.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, a year ago I priced some of them, and I know that I am within the limits of the prices then fixed by stores in this city as well as in near-by cities. Prices may have been reduced since then; but I am inclined to think that if the Senator will make an investigation he will discover that the figures I have stated are substantially correct.

Mr. President, we must raise revenue from some sources. Our Republican friends seem determined to place luxuries of all kinds in the category of necessities in order that they may escape excise taxes. Of course, if they succeed they will then insist that a sales tax must be provided to meet the demands of the Treasury. I insist that we shall attain the revenues required from incomes, corporation taxes, estate taxes, and taxes upon luxuries. However, as I have stated upon a number of occasions, there are many objections to inheritance taxes being collected by the Federal Government. The States are being stripped by the General Government of all sources of revenue except such as may be derived from real estate and personal property within their borders. I shall have something further to say upon the question of inheritance taxes before this bill is passed.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. SPENCER. Does it strike the Senator as fair that a woman who buys a velvet coat or a plush coat for $175 to $200 should pay no tax, while the woman who buys a muskrat skin or a rabbit skin or a catskin coat for $125 should pay a 10 per cent tax? Or, to put it on the other side, does it strike the Senator as fundamentally fair that a man who pays $125 for an overcoat of cloth should pay no tax, while the man who buys a coat of rabbit skin, as is most frequent in the West, which will cost $100, should pay a tax of 10 per cent? Is there anything fundamentally fair in it?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I stated a few moments ago that it is absolutely impossible to frame a revenue bill that will mete out equal and exact justice to all. It is a difficult thing to frame these schedules and to place excise taxes in such a manner that injustice may not be done. Our duty, however, is to approximate the standard of justice and to deal in the imposition of these excise taxes as fairly as we can with all subjects and with all classes. I would not object for the present to the imposition of a tax upon costly clothing, whether it consisted of furs, or of the finest broadcloth, or silks or satins.

My friend from Missouri in his opening address adverted very feelingly to the fact that silks and satins were not taxed, and the proposition now was to tax furs. I am willing, if the Senator will offer an amendment to this measure imposing burdens upon silks and satins, and diamonds, and other luxuries, to vote with him to tax them.

Mr. GERRY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. GERRY. I think the primary object of this amendment was to tax the very great luxuries in furs, for example, like sable coats and silver-fox skins, which sell at tremendous prices and are very great luxuries. I think the fundamental principle attempted to be arrived at here was to tax these great luxuries. Whether that has succeeded or not, or whether some injustice or inequality may have been done, is another question; but I think fundamentally there can be no doubt that the basic principle of the committee in taxing these very high-priced furs was absolutely sound.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Rhode Island for his suggestion, and I have no doubt that he stated accurately what the committee had in mind when it prepared the provision under consideration. The purpose was not to reach those cases referred to by the Senator from North Dakota. It was known that furs of fabulous value are purchased by many persons in the United States. It is known that manufacturers of furs produce garments that cost not only hundreds but thousands of dollars. It was intended that transactions relating to these costly garments should be reached and taxed. The provision before us may not be sufficiently clear as to its purpose, and it perhaps does not cover the situation in a just and proper manner. However, it can be easily amended so as to extend the proper exemptions to those who come within the class referred to by the Senator from North Dakota. But I believe that it would not be proper to strike out the entire paragraph and exempt from taxation what are clearly luxuries. Those manufacturers of costly garments should be required to pay a proper tax thereupon. There may come a time when we can dispense entirely with taxes of this character; but with the pressing needs of the Government, and with the difficulties experienced in finding suitable objects for taxation, it seems to me that it would be improper to exempt from taxation all classes of furs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the senior Senator from Utah to strike out lines 7 to 15, inclusive.

Mr. KING. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, may we have the exact amendment stated?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 200 it is proposed to strike out all of lines 7 to 15, inclusive.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. EDGE (when his name was called). Making the same announcement of my pair and its transfer, I vote "yea."

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL]. In his absence, being unable to obtain a transfer, I must withhold my vote. If privileged to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before as to the transfer of my pair, I vote "yea."

Mr. SIMMONS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG], and in his absence I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before with reference to my pair and its transfer, I vote "yea."

Mr. TRAMMELL (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT]. In his absence, being unable to obtain a transfer, I am compelled to withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I should vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I transfer my general pair with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] to the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE], and vote "yea."

Mr. STERLING. I transfer my pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] to the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], and vote "yea."

Mr. McLEAN. I have a general pair with the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I desire to announce that the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] is necessarily absent. He is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS]. If the Senator from Mississippi were present and permitted to vote, he would vote "nay."

Mr. RANSDELL. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT]. In his absence I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce the following pairs:

The senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]; and

The senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] with the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS].

The result was announced—yeas 41, nays 25, as follows:

YEAS—41.

Borah	Gooding	McNary	Spencer
Brandegee	Hale	Moses	Stanfield
Bursum	Harreld	New	Sterling
Calder	Johnson	Newberry	Sutherland
Cameron	Keyes	Nicholson	Townsend

Elkins	Myers	Swanson

So Mr. SMOOT's amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the next amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 200 the committee proposes to strike out all of lines 16, 17, and 18, as follows:

Section 808, subdivisions (20) and (21) of section 900 of the revenue act of 1918, and the paragraph immediately following such subdivisions, are amended to read as follows:

The amendment was agreed to.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 200, line 19, strike out the quotation marks in parentheses and the numeral "19" and insert in parentheses the numeral "14."

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I respectfully ask the Senator in charge of the bill to explain just what is included in the language that we struck out on page 200.

Mr. SMOOT. That is just a formal amendment so as to bring these provisions into the one paragraph. There is nothing else to it. It is as we have done each time, beginning with section 807, where we struck it out and put it under this section.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. It is in the nature of a provision that the taxes on certain articles are to be paid by the purchaser rather than the manufacturer.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator from Massachusetts——

Mr. McCUMBER. If the Senator from Utah will allow me, I think I understand what the Senator from Massachusetts is getting at. The Senator will recall that the House simply amended the old paragraph of the old law. The Senate committee adopted a new system of inserting everything into the bill. Therefore they struck out that paragraph, which is merely an amending paragraph of the old law.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I have no objection to that.

Mr. SMOOT. I suppose the Senator meant to ask what the words "the paragraph immediately following" meant. It has reference to this language, for instance, that we insert on page 202:

> If any manufacturer, producer, or importer of any of the articles enumerated in this section customarily sells such articles both at wholesale and at retail, the tax in a case of any article sold by him at retail shall be computed on the price for which like articles are sold by him at wholesale.

Then the balance of it is as the Senator from North Dakota stated.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. In other words, on articles which we are now to take up for consideration the taxes were formerly paid by the purchaser, rather than by the wholesaler or manufacturer. Is that correct?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. On these articles the taxes are now paid at the sources by the manufacturer or producer?

Mr. SMOOT. It is under this bill to be paid by the manufacturer.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. On such articles as yachts, which is the subject matter now before us, the tax was paid by the purchaser?

Mr. SMOOT. No; in the present law the tax on yachts is paid by the manufacturer.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Is that true of trunks and valises?

Mr. SMOOT. On trunks and valises the tax was paid by the retailer. If the Senator will turn to section 904 he will find the tax is placed on the manufacturers.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. The answer of the Senator from Utah has explained what I wished to know. We are coming to that portion of the bill where there is a change in the source upon which we are to levy the tax.

Mr. SMOOT. That is correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the formal amendment in line 19, page 200, is agreed to. The Secretary will state the next amendment.

The READING CLERK. On page 200, in line 21, strike out after the numerals "$15" the comma and "5 per cent" and insert "10 per cent," so as to make the paragraph read:

> Yachts and motor boats not designed for trade, fishing, or national defense, and pleasure boats and pleasure canoes if sold for more than $15, 10 per cent.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I hope the Senate will not agree to that amendment. The House proposed 5 per cent. The industry is not a large one, but it is not without value, and the tax falls upon it with great severity. The Senate should remember also that there is a heavy tax on users of yachts; that is, there is a user's tax; and now this is a tax proposed to be placed on the builders.

The industry is not a large one, but it extends all over the country along the Atlantic coast and along the Lakes, and has a normal capacity of 8,304 employees. They are now employing 1,658. As the industry is at a very low ebb, I should be glad to see the entire tax stricken out, but certainly we ought not to go beyond the House figure. I therefore hope the Senate will disagree to the increase proposed by the Senate committee.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Massachusetts or the Senator from Utah how much revenue would be raised by this increase?

Mr. SMOOT. Four hundred thousand dollars is the amount that would be raised under this tax.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Of 10 per cent?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. And at 5 per cent.

Mr. SMOOT. At 5 per cent it would be just one-half.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. So it is an increase of $200,000.

Mr. SMOOT. That is correct.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator from Massachusetts referred to a tax upon users, and, as I understood him, he was urging that, perhaps, as a reason why the manufacturers should not be taxed.

Mr. LODGE. No; I meant there was a double tax on yachts, one tax on the manufacturer and one on the use.

Mr. KING. But the tax upon the use would not fall upon the manufacturer.

Mr. LODGE. Oh, no; it falls on the owner. As a matter of fact, the tax is paid, I take it, by the purchaser. This tax is paid by the purchaser of the yacht.

Mr. SMOOT. I may call the Senator's attention to the fact that last year the revenue from the use of yachts amounted to $395,000.

Mr. LODGE. I have no intention of disturbing the tax on the use of yachts at all. I think it is a proper tax.

Mr. SMOOT. I am aware of that. I was merely calling the attention of the Senate to it.

Mr. LODGE. That only yielded $400,000. The yield of this tax is small and it is very oppressive, almost destructive to a valuable industry.

Mr. FLETCHER. It all refers to yachts and motor boats of a design purely for pleasure.

Mr. LODGE. Yes.

Mr. FLETCHER. And that do not do any trading or fishing?

Mr. LODGE. It does not touch any steamboats, for instance.

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not see why a man who can afford to have a yacht should not pay 10 per cent.

Mr. LODGE. The House put on 5 per cent, and I think that is quite severe enough; in fact, too severe. I ask to have printed in the RECORD in connection with what I have said a list of the companies engaged in the manufacture of these boats, together with some statistics on their labor.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Present conditions in the motor-boat industry as regards labor and production under existing 10 per cent sales tax.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I would call attention to the fact that last year $530,000 was collected from this source, but the year before only $200,000. Of that $530,000, over $300,000 was collected on the building of one yacht. From inquiries I have made I doubt if we will get as much as $55,000 on the basis of a 5 per cent tax.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator has in his State—in fact, in his neighborhood—builders of these small boats and of yachts, and I think he will bear me out in what I have said as to the effect of this tax upon the industry.

Mr. CALDER. I am told there are no yachts being built at all in our part of the country. This tax discourages the business. I join in the statement of the Senator from Massachusetts, and I would not favor taking the tax off of the use of yachts. A man who can afford to own yachts and use them can afford to pay that tax.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator if those who can afford to buy the yachts and can afford to pay the user's tax can not also pay the tax upon the yacht itself?

Mr. CALDER. It would seem so.

Mr. McCUMBER. I am speaking now simply of pleasure yachts, and not merely a little motor boat or canoe.

Mr. LODGE. The bulk of these are small boats. The great bulk of the business is small motor boats or small yachts or sailboats, and so forth. The people who make them are deterred by the tax from building. They will pay the user's tax subsequently, but they will not buy.

Mr. McCUMBER. If the Senator will allow me, I really did not agree to this myself in the committee, because I could not see the use of putting $15 on a canoe, because I did not suppose there was one manufactured in the United States that sold as cheaply as that, and therefore it covered all little motor boats, canoes, and so forth. Those, I think, ought not to be taxed; but the large yachts that are used for ocean-going service—and only those who are considered wealthy can purchase them—it seemed to me might bear a fair tax.

Mr. LODGE. The large yachts bear a very heavy tax and a uniform user's tax, and this tax would prevent the carrying on of the business.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, my information is that there are very few of the large, expensive yachts being built. In fact, I personally know of quite a number of men who, owing to the financial stringency through which the country has been going, have either sold their yachts or laid them up. It is true some of the smaller yachts and small power boats are originally purchased for pleasure purposes. They are used for that purpose for a very short time, but after a year or two the owners get tired of them or they become damaged, and most of them go into the useful trades or business, as fishing boats and trading boats. I think the tax is a deterrent on the building of the smaller boats, which in the aggregate furnish a very useful thing for the country to have.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator what is the use of building these boats if no one is buying them, as he indicates?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. No; the Senator does not understand me. I referred to the larger and more expensive boats—the large pleasure yachts—the owners of which are men of wealth, but, owing to the imposition of heavy taxes and surtaxes and all taxes of that kind, they have largely disposed of them. The wharves and the brokers' office are filled with them for sale, and they can be bought for a song, but very few care to incur the expense of operating them—that is, the larger boats.

I say there is a continuous demand for the smaller boats, but the demand has fallen off very greatly. This tax tends to discourage the building of the smaller boats which, after a couple of years' use as pleasure boats, go into the fishing business or trading business and cease to be pleasure boats at all.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I am not very familiar with this industry, but I should like to inquire of the Senator from Massachusetts, who proposed the amendment, if it would not be practicable to have the tax graduated, say 5 per cent upon such boats as sell for not in excess of $500 and 10 per cent on boats selling for more than $500. I am not familiar with the industry, but that suggestion occurs to me.

Mr. LODGE. The users' tax is a graduated tax, based on the size of the yacht or the boat, so as to make the larger and more expensive yacht pay a much heavier tax. This is a general flat tax and falls with particular severity on the small boat, the building of which I think is very desirable to the country.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I remember something about the old law upon the subject. Would the Senator from Massachusetts be willing to have his suggestion amended by making that graduation?

Mr. LODGE. Not as to the builder's tax. I think the whole builder's tax is wrong. To increase the builder's tax simply means to stop the building, and we should consequently get no revenue at all; we should destroy the revenue and also, incidentally, destroy an industry which is pretty nearly destroyed now.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Then, the Senator from Massachusetts, who is familiar with this subject, does not believe that there should be a graduated tax in this case?

Mr. LODGE. I do not.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I suppose that the suggestion which has been made by the Senator from Massachusetts will be accepted, because it takes the tax off a luxury. We have been taking taxes off luxuries all day. It is, of course, consistent with the policy that appears to be followed of taking the tax off everything that people do not really need and putting it on things that they really must have.

A man who is able to own a pleasure yacht or a pleasure boat is able to pay the 10 per cent tax. My opinion is that the imposition of this tax will not stop the sale of a single boat in a year. When a man starts out to spend his money to build a floating palace he is not inclined to raise the question of a Government tax, for that is but a small part of the total cost of furnishing, equipping, manning, and maintaining such a boat. The gentlemen who own these yachts are generally very wealthy individuals. If they want the yacht, they will pay the tax to get it. If they do not want the yacht, they, of course, will not build it.

There is another class of boats, of course, namely, the small boats, but they are pleasure boats which ought to be taxed. There is no tax proposed to be laid here upon the boat that is built for the fisherman or upon the boat that is engaged in trade or commerce. It is the pleasure craft, pure and simple, upon which we propose to levy a tax, and it is now insisted that that tax shall be taken off.

We are told that the business is languishing. Mr. President, that is a familiar statement, and that statement may be made with reference to almost every business in the United States, regardless of whether it pays any tax or does not pay any tax. Business generally is languishing. The gentleman who runs a dye industry, no matter how he got his patents nor how much money he has made, can always appear before a committee of Congress in these days and swear that the dye business is languishing; that his labor is out of employment. So the individual who is engaged in manufacturing chemicals comes forward with the same claim and with the same evidence to sustain it; and the man who is engaged in tanning hides will come forward and present a similar line of evidence. Every one of these various lines of business makes the same claim, and, to a certain extent, truthfully makes it, because business is suffering a slump, and the boat business is probably suffering a slump along with other businesses.

Here, however, is a thing which is essentially a luxury. There is not a boat that will be taxed under this bill that is a necessity. The minute the boat becomes a necessity it ceases to be a taxed article under the terms of the bill. We have just taken the tax off $4,000, $5,000, and possibly $10,000 sable coats, in the interest of the plain, common people, and I suppose the rule ought to be now extended so that the people who can afford these great luxuries, who have their tax-free garments in winter, may have a sailing craft tax free in the summer.

I have no prejudice against people who can have yachts. I should like to have one if I could afford it. I have no prejudice against people who can have the finest furs; I should like to see those whom I love clothed similarly. That is not the point; it is not a question of an appeal to prejudice; but it is a question whether we are to lay these taxes upon the necessities of life that people must have, or to lay them upon the things that people are not obliged to have. That is the whole question.

If we take the taxes off the luxuries of life, in proportion they must be placed upon the necessities of life, for a certain aggregate of revenue must be raised. That is the whole question that is involved here. The question of the employment of labor is not involved here, because I do not think anybody will say that this tax has closed any institution. Hard times and the pinch that has come incident to the conditions subsequent to the war have slowed down the process of production everywhere, and I suppose the motor-boat maker and the yacht builder have suffered along with the others, but no more than they. I am sure they have not suffered as the farmers of the country have suffered—and I am not going to make a farmers' speech—I am sure they have not suffered as have many thousands of other business men; at least, their suffering has not been worse. That is all there is to the question: Shall we take the tax off luxuries and put it on necessities?

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I have no desire to consume the time of the Senate in discussing what seems to be a very simple proposition; but it does not represent the case fairly at all to speak of it as if it simply involved the building of immensely expensive yachts for rich men. Such yachts are taxed, and heavily taxed, under the users' tax provisions of the bill, a graduated tax being imposed.

I simply ask attention to the figures with regard to these "floating palaces"—and, of course, we expect always to have phrases of that kind used in connection with almost everything in the bill.

Pleasure boats of 16 gross tons and over are classed as yachts and are registered in the United States customshouses of the various districts. Lloyd's Register of Shipping, an acknowledged authority in this country on these matters, shows that there are 1,375 of these registered yachts, of which 61 are under 16 gross tons.

All motor boats under 16 gross tons are numbered according to law, and the records of the Bureau of Navigation show that on July 1, 1921, there were 141,000 of this class of boats. This makes a total number of 142,381 pleasure boats either registered or numbered in the United States. The larger boats or yachts owned and operated by the wealthy class represent nine-tenths of 1 per cent of the total.

If a tax of 10 per cent be imposed in order to obtain revenue from the owners of expensive boats, the figures given above show that the owners of large yachts represent less than 1 per cent of the total number of users of motor boats in the United States.

The remaining 99 per cent of these boats will be found to be in the possession of people of moderate or limited means. I know that in the section of the country in which I live, where such boats are much in use, they are owned for the most part by people of very moderate and limited means, who do not always use their craft simply for pleasure but for other purposes.

The yacht, whether small or large, is fully and heavily taxed in use. The tax I am now discussing falls practically entirely upon those who build the boats—that is, on the industry—and it has reduced the number of men employed from 8,000 to 1,600. It is not a large industry, but such a tax is very severe on any industry.

I do not pretend to say whether they have suffered more or less than the farmers, but they are like many other industries in this country, in that no financial corporation has been established for their benefit; no special duties have been imposed in their behalf; nothing has been done specifically for them. I am not complaining of that at all; they must take their chance with the rest of the world in the necessary depression following the Great War; but I do say it is unfair to burden unduly a perfectly honest industry when there is no need for it at all and when the Government imposes a luxury tax on the same articles elsewhere in the bill.

Let me add, Mr. President, that when the war came on and we were short of submarine chasers and small boats of various kinds the private yards were of the very last importance to the United States. It is not an industry that should be killed because some one cries "luxury" in connection with the craft which they produce. It is at least a harmless thing to build a good motor boat for use; and where there is a heavy user's tax I can see no justice in putting an oppressive tax on that industry. I think there ought to be no tax upon the industry. I am willing, however, to stand for the tax which the House considered sufficient, but I hope, as I said when I began, that we shall not double it, as proposed by the committee.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, there is a tax on the manufacture of automobiles and a heavy one on automobile trucks. Boats are to be exempted from this tax if they are engaged in industry. To that extent the builder of the water transporter has an advantage over the builder of the vehicle designed for land transportation.

Nobody has claimed—certainly I have not claimed—that all of these boats are floating palaces. I used that term in illustration of one class, but I spoke of the other class, the mere pleasure boats.

The Senator refers continually to the other heavy tax. Let us see what the other heavy tax is. It is found on page 221. It is a tax of $1 for each foot of length over 32 feet and not over 50 feet, so that a boat under 32 feet pays nothing.

Mr. FLETCHER. A boat under 5 net tons and 32 feet in length pays no tax whatever.

Mr. REED. Let us see what this heavy tax is. I read from the bill, on page 221, as follows:

SEC. 1002. That on and after July 1, 1922, and thereafter on July 1 in each year, and also at the time of the original purchase of a new boat by a user, if on any other date than July 1, there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid, in lieu of the tax imposed by section 1003 of the revenue act of 1918, upon the use of yachts, pleasure boats, power boats, sailing boats, and motor boats with fixed engines, of over 5 net tons and over 32 feet in length, not used exclusively for trade, fishing, or national defense, or not built according to plans and specifications approved by the Navy Department, a special excise tax to be based on each yacht or boat, at rates as follows.

To begin with, no boat pays a tax until it is of 5 tons displacement and over 32 feet in length, and then it does not pay a tax at all if it is built in accordance with the specifications approved by the Navy Department, no matter how big it is. Why? Because it has been found that boats of that character, if they are built in the right way, may be of value to us in case of another war.

The Senator spoke about the valuable service that had been rendered by these boats. Here is a clause in this bill that absolutely exempts them from taxation if they will conform to the regulations of the Navy Department. So the great multitude of boats that the Senator refers to in his table undoubtedly are boats below 32 feet in length and 5 tons displacement; and what we are dealing with here is a superior class of pleasure craft, beginning at a boat of over 5 tons and over 32 feet in length, and from that up to the finest yacht that may float. That is the annual tax; but the tax that it is proposed here to reduce, the tax upon the manufacturer, is a tax which is not limited to the class of boats referred to on page 221.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. LODGE. I know the Senator does not mean to state the matter otherwise than correctly. I am not trying to reduce the tax. I am trying to keep it where it is and prevent its being raised.

Mr. REED. Very well. The Senator is trying to reduce it from what the committee has recommended.

Mr. LODGE. They recommended an amendment.

Mr. REED. Certainly. The class of boats that that applies to—I mean now the manufacturer's tax—is all boats of more than the value of $15. Of course that includes all the small craft. It includes the canoes; it includes the small motor boats; indeed, it undoubtedly includes much the larger number of motor boats, a class of boats that are not taxed at all on their use. They are expressly excluded from the tax levied on page 221, to which the Senator has referred, and the only boats that will pay the double tax are the boats of over 5 tons, over 32 feet in length, that have not been built in accordance with the specifications laid down by the Navy Department. They ought to pay a tax if they are building them now and do not follow those specifications.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. McCUMBER. I want to submit a proposition to both the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Missouri in the form of an amendment which would read as follows:

Yachts and motor boats not designed for trade, fishing, or national defense, if sold for more than $500, and pleasure boats if sold for more than $500, 10 per cent.

That would cut out all the taxes on those that would be sold for less than $500 and would cover with a 10 per cent tax all yachts, and I think most of those that would be above the price of an ordinary motor boat.

I do not know that that language would be acceptable to either Senator, but I submit it to them.

Mr. LODGE. Five hundred dollars is not a very high price. It would not exclude motor boats.

Mr. President, I should like an opportunity to get the Senate to vote to relieve this industry from additional taxation, and I think it ought to be taken off.

I do not want to take any more time.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, do I understand my colleague to state that he is willing to have the present tax of 5 per cent remain?

Mr. LODGE. Oh, certainly.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. He is objecting only to the increase to 10 per cent.

Mr. LODGE. I simply am opposing the increase proposed by the Senate committee; that is all.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, something has been said regarding the building of cruising pleasure boats under the specifications of the Navy Department. I do not believe that is feasible or possible. The Navy have certain specifications regarding speed that make it almost impossible for a private owner to operate a pleasure craft with the horsepower demanded by the Navy.

In the case of the scout cruisers that were built, 110 feet long, to obtain a speed of 16 knots per hour they placed in the boats three 200-horsepower Standard engines. The consumption of gasoline was so great that the expense made them almost impossible of operation. When the war ended, several hundred of these boats were in the possession of the Navy Department. They tried to dispose of them. Those boats, I think, cost over forty or fifty thousand dollars apiece. They have not been able to dispose of them at $500 apiece. They have not been converted to cruising boats, and they made an effort to turn them over to the lighthouse department, and the lighthouse department made an investigation and ascertained that it would cost $15,000 a year for gasoline alone to operate those boats.

I believe that the 5 per cent tax is a fair tax. Ten per cent is not. It is not the imposition of a tax on the operation of the pleasure craft; it is a tax upon the boat builders who are engaged in that profession; and therefore, in addition to the users' tax, which is already a heavy tax, the 10 per cent seems a little bit high.

Mr. REED. I ask for the yeas and nays, Mr. President.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, it seems to me that we are getting pretty well along in the consideration of these excise taxes. We have passed over a considerable number of the items, and we are now getting pretty well down toward the end of the list. I wonder if this would not be a good time to take an inventory, and find out where we are getting regarding these taxes?

I should like to inquire now of the Senator in charge of this bill if he has kept any record of the result of the action of the Senate thus far upon these various items? We have reduced a number of the items, and we have eliminated a number. We have just eliminated the tax upon furs. The estimated revenue from that item was $9,000,000. We have eliminated a lot of other items; and I should like to know where this is going to leave the bill from the revenue point of view.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in answer to the Senator I will state that if he will get the printed pamphlet entitled "Proposed Amendments to H. R. 8245, Revenue Bill of 1921," he will find there the estimated increases in the revenue yield for a 12-month period if the proposed amendments are agreed to, and then the estimated loss; and in these items that have been stricken out all the losses have been taken into account in the proposed amendments as printed. If they all go out, including all that the Senator has named and toilet soaps and soap powders, tooth and mouth washes, reduction of tax on sculpture, paintings, and so forth, repeal of 5 per cent tax on motion-picture films leased, repeal of stamp tax on parcel-post packages, and so forth, there will be $10,000,000 to the good. In other words, Mr. President, we have restored the capital-stock tax, amounting to $75,000,000; we have changed the income surtaxes so as to bring an increase in that title of $50,000,000; the elimination of the $2,000 exemption to corporations with incomes in excess of $25,000 gives another revenue of $30,000,000; the increase in the tax on distilled spirits was $42,000,000, but as finally agreed to it is $52,000,000; so that that will amount to $207,000,000, in round figures, that we have increased the bill. There has been deducted the repeal of transportation taxes on freight, express, passengers, Pullman, and oil by pipe line, amounting to $145,000,000, and then the other items that we have already agreed to and those that we will ask the Senate to agree to will amount to $197,000,000. So that there is, I say, $10,000,000 more revenue collected under the amendments that have been adopted by the Senate than will be lost in case all of the proposed amendments are agreed to by the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, as I understand, the vote is on agreeing to the committee amendment. Those opposed to increasing the tax from 5 to 10 per cent will vote "nay" and disagree to the committee amendment, as I understand.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The READING CLERK. On page 200, line 21, the committee proposes to strike out "5 per cent," the period, and the quotation marks and insert "10 per cent" and a semicolon.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I want to say just one word. We may not be able to reduce taxes, but I, for one, am opposed to increasing taxes on the manufactured article of any industry, whether it is an industry for the manufacture of luxuries or anything else. Here is an effort to increase a tax over the rate fixed by the House, and I do not think at this stage of business in America we ought to vote to increase taxes. We ought to reduce the excessively high war tax rates as far as possible.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SPENCER in the chair). The question is on the amendment of the committee. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. EDGE (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to my pair and its transfer, I vote "nay."

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL]. I am unable to obtain a transfer, and I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. REED. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state his inquiry.

Mr. REED. Are we voting on a motion to agree to the Senate committee amendment as printed or are we voting on a motion to change the provision?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate is voting on a motion to agree to the committee amendment.

Mr. REED. Then a vote in the affirmative would be a vote in favor of retaining the 10 per cent tax?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct in his understanding.

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before as to my pair and its transfer, I vote "nay."

Mr. RANSDELL (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT]. In his absence I am not permitted to vote. If permitted to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before with reference to my pair and its transfer, I vote "yea."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). Owing to the absence of the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], with whom I have a pair, I am not at liberty to vote. If I were, I would vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Owing to the absence of my pair, the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], I withhold my vote.

Mr. SIMMONS. I transfer my general pair with the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] to the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] and vote "yea."

Mr. TRAMMELL. I have a pair with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT]. In his absence I transfer that pair to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] and vote "yea."

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I desire to announce that the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] is necessarily absent. He is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS]. If the Senator from Mississippi were present and permitted to vote, he would vote "yea."

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce that the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] is paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. HALE. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] to the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] and vote "nay."

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I transfer my general pair with the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] to the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. WELLER] and vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 44, nays 19, as follows:

So the amendment of the committee was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I offer the following amendment: On page 200, line 21, I move to strike out the words "pleasure canoes." The Senate has already stricken out of the bill section 5, which includes the tax on sporting goods. In that section were included the words "canoe paddles and cushions."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Maine is not in order at this time, as the committee amendments have not yet been disposed of. The Secretary will state the next amendment.

The READING CLERK. The next committee amendment is on page 200, to strike out lines 23, 24, and 25, and on page 201, lines 1 to 12, both inclusive.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state his inquiry.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I noticed the ruling of the Chair just a moment ago. I desire to inquire whether the unanimous-consent agreement, under which we operated last night and which would have made the amendment offered by the Senator from Maine in order, is not still in existence? It was to apply to the entire excise-tax title.

Mr. McCUMBER. It was to apply to the excise-tax title, as the Senator said, and we were to take each section as we came to it and dispose of it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. May I suggest to the present occupant of the chair that it was under that unanimous-consent agreement that we struck out the fur tax?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has evidently been misinformed. The present occupant of the chair was not here when that agreement was entered into. The Senator from Maine will be recognized to offer his amendment.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I renew my offer of the amendment, to strike out the words "pleasure canoes" on page 200, line 21.

A large number of canoes are manufactured in my State. The tax of 10 per cent is extremely embarrassing to the canoe business, and it falls particularly upon a class who are unable to pay it. Those canoes are not used by the wealthy people of the country to any great extent. They are used principally by the young people of the country, and whatever anyone may think about the tax on yachts, there is no reason why canoes should be included with yachts. Therefore I offer this amendment, to take them out of this section, and I hope very much the amendment will be agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The READING CLERK. On page 200, lines 20 and 21, strike out the words "and pleasure canoes."

Mr. FLETCHER. May I inquire of the Senator whether those canoes are over 22 feet in length?

Mr. HALE. It includes all canoes. The limit of the bill is $15. All canoes cost over $15, so it applies to all canoes. The revenue from this source is very small. The revenue derived from the whole section has been estimated at $400,000. I have asked the experts as to the tax derived from this item, and while they were not able to give me the full figures they estimate that it would be somewhere around $25,000 or $30,000, not more than that.

Mr. McCUMBER. I agree entirely with the Senator in his motion to strike out the words "pleasure canoes," but I think he should also include the balance of the line, because anything sold for $15 must be a canoe or something that is much cheaper. None of these articles, such as pleasure boats, could be sold for less than $15, and to make the section read as it ought to, the Senator, I think, should extend his amendment so as to strike out the words "and pleasure canoes if sold for more than $15."

Mr. HALE. I am glad to accept the amendment, but I thought $15 applied equally to pleasure boats.

Mr. McCUMBER. But there could not be a pleasure boat, which could be called such, that would be sold for less than $15.

Mr. HALE. I accept the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The READING CLERK. On lines 20 and 21 strike out "and pleasure canoes if sold for more than $15."

Mr. REED. How much revenue will that take away?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. About $500,000. About half a million dollars is involved in it.

Mr. REED. On canoes alone?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The statement as to the return of revenue covers the entire paragraph. I can not tell just how much of it is derived from canoes of a certain length or value.

Mr. REED. I would like to know why a man should escape a tax on a boat he moves with one paddle and another man who rows a boat with two oars should pay a tax, except that we are exempting canoes and we are leaving the tax on the ordinary rowboat. There is not any sense in that, in my judgment.

Mr. HALE. While it is true that pleasure boats can be purchased of almost any size, canoes are not built over a certain length.

Mr. REED. Certainly they could be of any size, and we could have a limit provided, and we did have a limit upon the value, but the Senator from North Dakota stated it is so low it would include all boats. However that may be, if the amendment of the Senator from Maine is agreed to we will be in exactly the position that if a man buys a canoe and rows it around with one paddle he will not have to pay any tax, but if he buys a rowboat and moves around with a pair of oars he will have to pay a tax.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I would like to know how expensive these canoes are which are paddled with one paddle.

Mr. REED. Ordinarily speaking, I should say you could get a fair, average canoe in prewar times for about $30 or $35. I suppose they cost more than that now.

Mr. HALE. They are much more now.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. What do they cost now?

Mr. HALE. I think $65 or $70.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Not more than $100?

Mr. HALE. Some run as high as that.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. One hundred dollars for a canoe?

Mr. HALE. Yes.

Mr. REED. Here is a concern making an ordinary rowboat, that is used not for pleasure nearly so much as for actual service. A canoe is a pleasure boat pure and simple, except on the rarest occasions. The Senator wants to exempt canoes. They make the very best kind of canoe up in Maine.

Mr. HALE. In Oldtown, Me.

Mr. REED. Yes; and that is the reason why he wants them exempt. They are made in Maine. I do not blame him for that. That is natural.

Mr. HALE. I have already given the reason. I have said that the Senate has already taken off the tax from sporting goods, including the tax on canoe paddles and canoe cushions, and therefore I see no good reason why they should not take it off of the canoes themselves. If the Senator would like to add "pleasure boats" to my amendment, I am entirely willing to do that.

Mr. REED. No; I think they should all be kept in. The fact that we have taken the tax off of billiard balls and golf balls and golf sticks and other paraphernalia of that kind is no reason why we should take it off of all luxuries. The fact that we have made one mistake is no reason why we should make 20. The absurdity of the situation is illustrated by the fact that a canoe is a pleasure craft, pure and simple. A rowboat, which would still be taxed under the bill with the Senator's amendment attached, is a boat that is used constantly for the practical purposes of life. It is true it is referred to here as a pleasure boat. I do not know how we would define it, but I suppose if a man got an ordinary rowboat it would be called a pleasure boat if he used it for pleasure alone, and something else if he used it for work.

I do not think we ought to delay very long over this canoe question. The Senator said there is very little revenue derived from this source, and if that is true there is very little revenue to pay.

Mr. HALE. The business is not a very large business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE].

Mr. REED. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I misled myself, and consequently misled the Senator from Maine, in my misreading of the section in which I read it as though it was applied to boats which were sold for less than $15, and not more than $15. Therefore the suggested amendment that I made to the Senator from Maine should be withdrawn, I think, and let the matter stand as suggested by the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the pending amendment.

The READING CLERK. On page 200, lines 20 and 21, strike out the words "and pleasure canoes."

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, it is called to my attention that if the amendment is left as I offered it, it might be construed that pleasure canoes came under the term "pleasure boats," so I would suggest inserting the words "except pleasure canoes" after the words "pleasure boats."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment as modified.

The READING CLERK. On page 200, line 20, after the word "boats," strike out the word "and" and insert the word "except."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the amendment satisfactory to the Senator from Maine as it reads now?

Mr. HALE. I would like to have the words "except pleasure canoes" placed in parentheses.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated as finally modified.

The READING CLERK. Page 200, at the end of line 20, strike out the word "and" and insert in parentheses the words "except pleasure canoes."

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. How will the clause read with that amendment agreed to?

The READING CLERK.

Yachts and motor boats not designed for trade, fishing, or national defense; and pleasure boats (except pleasure canoes) if sold for more than $15, 10 per cent.

Mr. REED. On that question I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before, I withhold my vote.

Mr. EDGE (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before with reference to my pair and transfer, I vote "yea."

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL]. In his absence, being unable to obtain a transfer, I withhold my vote.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before, I vote "yea."

Mr. HALE (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before, I vote "yea."

Mr. RANSDELL (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. SIMMONS (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] to the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] and vote "nay."

Mr. STANLEY (when his name was called). Has my colleague [Mr. ERNST] voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That Senator has not voted.

Mr. STANLEY. I have a general pair with that Senator. In his absence I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before with reference to my pair and its transfer, I vote "nay."

Mr. TRAMMELL (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT], which I transfer to the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS], and vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). Repeating the announcement made on the last vote with regard to my pair, I withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote upon this question, I would vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I wish to announce that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] is necessarily absent. He is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS]. If present, the Senator from West Virginia would vote "nay."

Mr. STERLING. I transfer my pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] to the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CROW] and vote "nay."

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] is paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD].

The result was announced—yeas 23, nays 37, as follows:

So Mr. HALE's amendment to the committee amendment was rejected.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, on page 200, line 21, I move to strike out "$15" and to insert "$100," so that pleasure boats and pleasure canoes which are sold for more than $100 shall pay the tax of 10 per cent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I give notice that I shall reserve a separate vote in the Senate on the amendment which has just been agreed to.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the amendment was adopted with a great many Senators not knowing what it was. I therefore ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the amendment was agreed to may be reconsidered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to reconsidering the vote by which the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] was adopted? The Chair hears none, and the vote is reconsidered. The question is upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the proposition is to raise the value of these boats which it is proposed to tax 10 per cent to $100. Of course, that lets in tax free the canoes and the small pleasure craft. That is all it means. We have by a pronounced vote just defeated an amendment to exempt canoes. This is only another way of exempting pleasure canoes and small pleasure craft. The argument has been made on that question and need not be repeated. All I ask is that the Senate may know exactly what question is being presented. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I think the argument of the Senator from Missouri to the effect that the amendment offered by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] freed canoes but did not free rowboats, that it freed the little boat that was propelled with one oar but did not free the boat that was rowed with two oars, was so convincing that the Senate possibly might have voted against the amendment because of that fact. As it now stands, under the amendment offered by the Senator from New York, the little rowboats and canoes which cost less than $100 would be exempted from taxation.

Mr. REED. Yes; it would exempt a pretty high class of them. Even if $50 were made the limit of the exemption, it would simply leave pleasure craft free from taxes; that is all.

It is true that I did make the argument to which the Senator refers. That was one argument that I made of several. It did present a case of discrimination; but why should we exempt this class of craft which is a luxury pure and simple, and then pile taxes on necessities? That is all there is of it. Every Senator in whose State there is a manufacturer who wants a tax taken off can get up here and make a special plea for the industry of his State. If we all do that there will not be any taxes levied. Every one of us has been besieged by the manufacturers of our respective States asking us to get that particular individual released from taxation. Nearly all of those manufacturers have furnished briefs, and I have heard arguments made on the floor of the Senate to-day, and on other days, that were almost in hæc verba the briefs that I have seen handed in by these interested parties.

We may continue taking taxes off luxuries until we have reduced this bill to a point where it will be necessary to put taxes upon necessities to a greater extent than at present. I am opposed to that process, and I am opposed to it as a matter of principle. I have asked to have the vote by which this amendment was agreed to reconsidered, and the Senate very kindly has allowed a reconsideration. I do not feel like taking time to discuss the amendment further.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I am sure the Senate would like the facts in connection with the amendment which is now under consideration. I think the paragraph has been very much improved by exempting the type of small boats costing under $100. For the information of the Senator from Missouri I will say that I represent in part a State on the coast, and there are hundreds, yes, thousands, of such small boats being used to-day by men who are engaged in the clamming and oystering business, men who have absolutely no capital but a little boat with a pair of oars, who go out and gather clams and oysters for the market. As a matter of fact, with the change in the amendment, exempting the small rowboat costing under $100, we shall be benefiting directly a very large class of men who are engaged in that industry all along the Atlantic coast.

Mr. REED. The language of the statute excludes the very case of which the Senator from New Jersey speaks. The language is "pleasure boats"; not clam boats, fishing boats, or oyster boats.

Mr. EDGE. The language of the amendment limiting the cost to $100, I am sure, will cover that type of boats.

Mr. REED. Certainly; but that type of boat does not have to pay anything. The language of the bill is—

Yachts and motor boats not designed for trade, fishing, or national defense; and pleasure boats and pleasure canoes—

Mr. EDGE. So far as that is concerned, Mr. President, the word "pleasure," I think, in order that there should be absolutely no doubt about it, should come out, and it should read "boats and canoes if sold for more than $100." Then there would be no question that it would exempt that type of boat which is used in the bays, the inlets, and the sounds along the

New England coast, along the Jersey coast, along the Virginia coast, and along the North Carolina coast by hundreds of thousands of men who are engaged in the industries to which I have referred.

Mr. REED. But they will not be taxed a cent under this bill or under any other law. The only boat which is taxed is a pleasure boat.

Mr. EDGE. I think it is very questionable whether they would not be taxed under the provision as it now stands.

Mr. REED. I do not think the Senator from New Jersey will seriously say that if he will again look at the language.

Mr. EDGE. Such boats may be used for both purposes.

Mr. REED. They may be used for both purposes.

Mr. EDGE. We would make it absolutely certain if we should leave out the word "pleasure" and adopt the amendment of the Senator from New York.

Mr. REED. There is no use in leaving out the word "pleasure," because it is only pleasure boats that are taxed; and if we take out the word "pleasure," then we should be taxing the boats that are used for productive purposes. If the Senator's suggestion were adopted, then, for the first time, we would be levying a tax upon work boats. Under the present law, if they are used for any business purpose they are not pleasure boats.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Missouri allow me?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. McCUMBER. How is the manufacturer to determine when he sells a two-oared little rowboat whether it is going to be used for clamming purposes or whether it is going to be used for the pleasure of the person who purchases it? As there would have to be an investigation of every one of those little cases, would it not really be about as cheap for the Government to exempt little rowboats and little canoes, even though they might be used by a boy or a girl for pleasure?

Mr. REED. No; I think not. I think there is no difficulty about it. We have this law upon the statute books now, and there has been no difficulty in its administration. The canoe is now built exclusively for pleasure, of course. There is a class of rowboats that are fitted up handsomely for young gentlemen to take their girls out, and in the future, I presume, under the new régime, for girls to take their young men out and show them around. Those boats are fitted up with cushions; they are luxuries; they are pleasure craft. If a man wants a boat with which to go fishing or to go hunting clams, he procures a very different kind of boat; he secures a work boat.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Missouri yield?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. CALDER. I have inquired about the matter of these rowboats, and I will say to the Senator from Missouri that a rowboat leased for fishing purposes would pay the tax of 10 per cent, because it is used for pleasure. If a man builds a boat for work purposes and then leases it out for pleasure purposes, he would have to pay the 10 per cent tax.

Mr. REED. Yes; if the man is a fisherman and then goes into another business and leases his boat, it would probably be a pleasure boat in that instance; but it ought to pay a tax, because it is a luxury.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from New York. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the Secretary will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. EDGE (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to the transfer of my pair as on the previous vote, I vote "yea."

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to my pair as heretofore, being unable to obtain a transfer, I withhold my vote.

Mr. HALE (when his name was called). Making the same announcement in regard to my pair and its transfer as heretofore, I vote "yea."

Mr. RANSDELL (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. SIMMONS (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] to the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] and vote "nay."

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to my pair and its transfer as on the previous vote, I vote "yea."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before with reference to my pair and its transfer, I vote "yea."

Mr. TRAMMELL (when his name was called). Making the same announcement with regard to my pair and its transfer as on the last vote, I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Making the same announcement as before, I vote "yea."

Mr. PENROSE (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], who is absent. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] and will let my vote stand.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I desire to make the same announcement as before regarding the absence of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] and his pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS]. If present, on this question the Senator from Mississippi would vote "nay."

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]; and

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS].

The result was announced—yeas 35, nays 28, as follows:

YEAS—35.

Brandegee	Gooding	Nelson	Spencer
Calder	Hale	New	Stanfield
Cameron	Jones, Wash.	Newberry	Sterling
Curtis	Keyes	Nicholson	Sutherland
Edge	Lenroot	Oddie	Townsend
Ernst	McCumber	Penrose	Wadsworth
Fernald	McLean	Phipps	Watson, Ind.
France	McNary	Poindexter	Willis
Frelinghuysen	Moses	Smoot

NAYS—28.

Ashurst	Heflin	McKellar	Sheppard
Borah	Jones, N. Mex.	Myers	Simmons
Broussard	Kendrick	Overman	Stanley
Capper	Kenyon	Owen	Swanson
Caraway	King	Pittman	Trammell
Dial	Ladd	Pomerene	Walsh, Mass.
Harris	La Follette	Reed	Watson, Ga.

NOT VOTING—33.

Ball	Fletcher	McCormick	Smith
Bursum	Gerry	McKinley	Underwood
Colt	Glass	Norbeck	Walsh, Mont.
Crow	Harreld	Norris	Warren
Culberson	Harrison	Page	Weller
Cummins	Hitchcock	Ransdell	Williams
Dillingham	Johnson	Robinson
du Pont	Kellogg	Shields
Elkins	Lodge	Shortridge

So Mr. CALDER's amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the next amendment passed over.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 200, beginning with line 23, the committee proposes to strike out all of the bill down to and including line 12 on page 201, in the following words:

(20) Carpets and rugs, including fiber, if sold for more than $3.60 a square yard, 5 per cent.
(21) Trunks, if sold for more than $30, 5 per cent.
(22) Valises, traveling bags, suitcases, hat boxes used by travelers, and fitted toilet cases, if sold for more than $15, 5 per cent.
(23) Purses, pocketbooks, shopping and hand bags, if sold for more than $4, 5 per cent.
(24) Portable light fixtures, including lamps of all kinds and lamp shades, if sold for more than $10, 5 per cent.
(25) Umbrellas, parasols, sunshades, if sold for more than $2.50, 5 per cent.
(26) Fans, if sold for more than $1, 5 per cent.
(27) House or smoking coats or jackets and bath or lounging robes, if sold for more than $3, 5 per cent.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry: Has the committee amendment as amended been adopted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The last amendment was to the House text.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the matter that has just been reached had better be acted upon as one amendment; and I will say this: The items to be stricken out on page 200 and page 201 will be found on page 204, in section 904. The House imposed a flat tax upon carpets and rugs, including fiber, if sold for more than $3.60 per square yard, of 5 per cent. In section 904, page 204, if Senators will look at line 24 they will see the change that is made. It reads:

Carpets and rugs, including fiber, on the amount in excess of $4 per square yard in the case of carpets and $6 per square yard in the case of rugs.

In other words, we are imposing the tax only upon the amount in excess of the rate per square yard, and upon items such as trunks, valises, and so forth.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 201, beginning on line 13, the committee proposes to insert "(21)," which should now be "(15)," and the following:

Toilet soaps and toilet-soap powders, 3 per cent.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I ask to have that amendment rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the chairman of the committee what change that will make in existing law?

Mr. PENROSE. The existing law is 3 per cent, and it was thought that these highly desirable articles might perhaps escape taxation.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, we will lose by that two or three millions of revenue. I do not want to discuss it. I shall not interrupt the Senator.

Mr. PENROSE. No; I shall be glad to hear from the Senator.

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not want to enter into any lengthy discussion of the amendment, but I can not see any special reason why these soaps and powders should not pay some tax. Three per cent certainly is a very small tax, especially, I think, in view of the fact that we get $2,000,000 of revenue from this source. There does not seem to be any special reason why the tax should be taken off. It had better be kept on. I will ask the Senator what is the reason for taking it off?

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, it means a loss of about $2,000,000 in revenue, and it was thought that it might be desirable to lighten the charges on soap and make cleanliness more available.

I submit the question to the Senate.

Mr. SIMMONS. We imposed this tax on soap and soap powders during the war. We had to raise a great deal of money then, and we shall have to raise a great deal of money now.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, what is the object of putting a tax on soap? Is not soap a necessity?

Mr. SIMMONS. I suppose it is a necessity, but we have a great many other taxes upon necessities in this bill. In fact, we have stricken out now most of the luxury taxes, or reduced them to a minimum, and about all that are left in the bill now are the taxes upon necessaries. This is a necessary, it is true; but why not let it keep company with the other scores of necessaries that you have taxed in this bill?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes; I yield the floor.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the Senator from New Jersey if, with the elimination of this and other taxes upon luxuries, it will not require a sales tax, general or limited in character, or a tax upon various other articles in order to raise sufficient revenue to meet the expenses of the Government? And may I ask whether the Senator would not vote for a sales tax?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN rose.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I can answer the Senator's question. I have given the matter a careful investigation down in the committee room, and have just returned, and I am persuaded that up to the present time there is an ample margin of revenue contained in this bill for the requirements of the Government.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator permit me to make an inquiry?

Mr. PENROSE. Yes.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator think that with the eliminations that have been made from the pending bill there will be sufficient revenue to meet the expenses of the Government for the current year without our adding a sales tax of some kind?

Mr. PENROSE. I do—an ample margin.

Mr. KING. Then, has the Senator figured——

Mr. PENROSE. I have figured it. I have not the figures here, and am not in position and do not desire to submit them at the present time.

Mr. KING. I shall not ask the Senator for them.

Mr. PENROSE. The Senator would hardly expect it, with the fluctuating condition that the bill is in.

Mr. KING. No. What I was about to ask, though, was whether the Senator, as a result of his computations—and I am not going to ask him to state them approximately—is satisfied that there will be sufficient revenue from the bill as now constructed, without some additional taxes being imposed, to meet the demands of the Government for the coming year?

Mr. PENROSE. I should say that I made a computation just now, after a long conference in my room, which persuaded me that even including cuts to be expected in the balance of this bill there is a margin of at least $10,000,000; and I do not know that all these cuts will occur.

Mr. KING. I am very glad to receive assurance that the bill, as perfected by the assaults made from this side, with the assistance given by some Senators upon the other side of the Chamber, will be sufficient to meet the needs of the Government. However, I think the Senator will be compelled to admit that if it does—that is, if the bill will yield sufficient revenue to meet the expenses of the Government—it is due largely to the efforts of the able Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], supported by the Senators from Missouri [Mr. REED], New Mexico [Mr. JONES], Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], and Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY], and other Democratic Senators, who have pointed out the iniquities of the bill as it came from the Finance Committee. They compelled modifications and secured amendments which placed upon corporations of great wealth taxes of which they had been freed by the Republican members of the Finance Committee.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, it shows my high appreciation of the devotion and sacrifice of the Democracy that I want to give them free soap.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I think there ought to be no opposition to the course suggested by the Senator from Pennsylvania. In fact, I think opposition will be useless. It must be remembered that the soap manufacturers were large contributors, and, so far as I am concerned, I am willing that they shall have this concession.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I presume the Senator means to the Democratic campaign fund?

Mr. REED. Oh, no; I mean to Mr. Wood and some of your people, all of which has been fully explained.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I think the Senator ought to be specific and state what the companies were.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the next amendment passed over.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. After line 14 it is proposed to insert:

(22) Perfumes, essences, extracts, toilet waters, cosmetics, petroleum jellies, hair oils, pomades, hair dressings, hair restoratives, hair dyes, tooth and mouth washes, dentifrices, tooth pastes, aromatic cachous, toilet powders (other than soap powders), or any similar substance, article, or preparation by whatsoever name known or distinguished, any of the above which are used or applied or intended to be used or applied for toilet purposes, 4 per cent; and

Mr. REED. Mr. President, a word of inquiry. Since we have become so much interested in soap—and a very laudable interest it is—I am wondering if the same logic would not lead us to take the tax off of tooth paste and tooth powder.

Mr. PENROSE. Yes, Mr. President; realizing the requirements of the situation, I was going to move to strike out the words "tooth and mouth washes, dentifrices, tooth pastes."

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Let me suggest to the Senator, if he will yield, that I think petroleum jellies, which are really medicine, I assume, if I am not mistaken as to what is meant by those words, would include vaseline and things of that kind. I see no reason for taxing that, if we are not going to tax soap or tooth paste. Petroleum jelly is really a medicine.

Mr. PENROSE. There are a great variety of things which come under that title. I am somewhat familiar with the name, as I had it put in the present law myself.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. That is a mere suggestion to the Senator. I do not want to insist upon it.

Mr. McKELLAR. Why not strike out the whole section?

Mr. SMOOT. Nearly everything in this section, with the exception of the things just spoken of by the Senator from Pennsylvania, is a luxury. They are toilet articles used by very few people.

Mr. McKELLAR. How much revenue do we get from the tax on them?

Mr. SMOOT. We get about $4,500,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. Are not those what are called "nuisance taxes"?

Mr. SMOOT. No; only a part of them.

Mr. McKELLAR. Certainly we ought to repeal the tax as to that part.

Mr. PENROSE. I have also been requested by my associates to move to strike out the words "toilet powders (other than soap powders)."

Mr. REED. I assume the reason why the words "other than soap powders" are in this section is because soap was taxed above.

Mr. PENROSE. That is right.

Mr. REED. Therefore "other than soap powders" ought to come out in order to make it conform with the amendments adopted.

Mr. PENROSE. That is correct. I make that motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania, to the committee amendment, which the Secretary will state.

The READING CLERK. On page 201, line 16, it is proposed to strike out the words "petroleum jellies"; on lines 17 and 18 to strike out the words "tooth and mouth washes, dentrifices, tooth pastes," and in lines 18 and 19 to strike out the words "toilet powders (other than soap powders)."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PENROSE. Now I move, on line 22, after the word "purposes," that there be inserted the words "except tooth and mouth washes, dentrifices, tooth pastes, toilet powders" and a comma. That is only to make it technically carry out the purpose of the amendment just agreed to.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I move to strike out the entire paragraph.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia moves to strike out the entire paragraph (22) as amended.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, we would lose a lot of revenue on a good many things which are purely luxuries, such as perfumes, essences, extracts, toilet water, cosmetics, and hair dyes. I submit any man who dyes his hair ought to pay a tax.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator would not demand that some of us should be in favor of a tax on hair restoratives?

Mr. PENROSE. I would be willing to relieve hair restoratives from taxation, but I would strenuously oppose freeing from taxes the other articles, for I think many of them are very harmful and injurious, and I would favor increasing the tax on these pomades, hair oils, and hair dressings, which are very suspicious articles, in my opinion.

Mr. REED. If there is anything in the world that we can afford to tax, it is such things as we have left in this paragraph since the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania was agreed to, which did apply to many things which are absolute necessities.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, this paragraph covers essences and extracts. It seems to me those terms are pretty broad, and might include articles which would be used in culinary processes. The words "essences" and "extracts" are used without any definition. I should like to have some information as to what those two words embrace. It strikes me that if they do embrace the articles used in culinary processes, they ought to be excluded from the bill. I do not understand that essences or extracts are used for the purposes of restoring hair or in the nature of toilet articles.

Mr. McLEAN. The Senator will note that lines 21 and 22 identify their use and confine them to applications for toilet purposes.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The Senator's idea about that may be correct, but I am not sure of it. It says, "Perfumes, essences, extracts, toilet waters," and so on, "or any similar substance, article, or preparation by whatsoever name known or distinguished, any of the above which may be used or applied or intended to be used or applied for toilet purposes." I rather think the Senator is right about that, and my anticipation is not well founded.

Mr. EDGE. May I inquire of the chairman if the amendment already adopted included the elimination of petroleum and jellies?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has.

Mr. EDGE. They are eliminated?

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. In order that we may vote intelligently on the motion of the Senator from West Virginia why can we not be told what has been stricken out already?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania which has been adopted.

The READING CLERK. On page 201, line 16, the words "petroleum jellies" are stricken out; on lines 17 and 18 the words "tooth and mouth washes, dentifrices, tooth paste" are stricken out; on lines 18 and 19 the words "toilet powders (other than soap powders)" are stricken out; on line 22, after the word "purposes," the words "except tooth and mouth washes, dentifrices, tooth paste, and toilet powder" are inserted.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I assume that the words "petroleum jellies" shall be added to the language inserted in the last line if they are stricken out above.

Mr. PENROSE. I did not understand that I moved to have them stricken out. I did not intend to include the tax on petroleum jellies in my motion to strike out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator did so include it.

Mr. PENROSE. I had the words put in existing law, and had to look them up in the dictionary and know a little about their pedigree and history.

Mr. EDGE. That is the reason I made the inquiry a few moments ago, in order that I might be entirely clear about it. It seems to me, if I understand the definition of petroleum jelly correctly, that it consists mainly of vaseline and products of that kind, which surely are medicinal, and it seems to me that of all the eliminations petroleum jellies, if that is a correct designation of it, ought to be eliminated. It does not come under the heading of lip sticks, cosmetics, or other preparations of that character.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. As the amendment now stands, petroleum jellies are stricken out.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I object to having my amendment stated in a way in which I did not present it. It should not have been included in the language which the Clerk submitted to the Senate and which should have been declared agreed to, as I understand it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks the Senator from Pennsylvania is mistaken, though he may have included it inadvertently. When he stated the amendment the Chair recollects that he did include petroleum jellies.

Mr. PENROSE. I ask for a reconsideration, because I absolutely state that I did not intend to include, and did not include, petroleum jellies.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the vote by which the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania was adopted is reconsidered.

The question now is upon the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania with the words "petroleum jellies" eliminated.

Mr. KING. May that be reported now as it will read?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment as it will read as amended.

The READING CLERK. On page 201, beginning with line 15, the amendment as amended will read:

Perfumes, essences, extracts, cosmetics, petroleum jellies, hair oils, pomades, hair dressings, hair restoratives, hair dyes, aromatic cachous, or any similar substance, article, or preparation by whatsoever name known or distinguished, any of the above which are used or applied or intended to be used or applied for toilet purposes, except tooth and mouth washes, dentifrices, tooth pastes, toilet waters, 4 per cent.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I realize, of course, the temptation that is afforded to impose a tax upon such articles as hair oil, pomade, hair dressing, hair restoratives, and perfumes; but there is a peculiar situation in connection with this amendment which I think we ought to understand.

Under the terms "essences, extracts, and toilet waters," I think undoubtedly will be found included in brackets articles which are of considerable medicinal value used in hospitals. They are not to be classed, in my judgment, with hair oils and pomades or the lip sticks which have been mentioned here recently. It is exceedingly difficult to differentiate between all these different articles and to draw a line as to what are purely luxuries and never used for any purely beneficial purposes and those which are used a goodly portion of the time for beneficial purposes.

We have just stricken out on lines 13 and 14 the tax on toilet soaps and toilet soap powders, and I want to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the greatest manufacturers of toilet soap and toilet-soap powders also make perfumes and toilet waters and pomades and essences and extracts, and I apprehend that we will find this situation, if this tax goes on as now proposed by the committee since this amendment was adopted, that a great soap manufacturing concern, making fancy soaps, perfumed soaps as well as ordinary soaps, and commanding a tremendous trade, can very easily carry the tax of 4 per cent on the perfumes which it makes, and the extracts and the essences can carry that tax without feeling it very much, as by far the greater portion of its business is in soaps, which we have already exempted from taxes. That will leave the perfume manufacturer or the extract and essence manufacturer taxed on practically his entire output.

We can all remember that there are several big soap companies in the country which as a side line, as it were, carry perfumes and extracts. We have exempted the soaps and the soap powders. These same concerns make tooth powders. If Senators will search their recollection a little, I think they can recall that fact. We have exempted tooth powders. The taxes as now proposed, in my humble judgment, will bring about a tremendous advantage and benefit to the great concerns and leave the legitimate perfume and extract manufacturers as the only element in this combined business having a tax on his entire product.

Mr. President, a gentleman came in to see me the other day who is a perfume, extract, and essence manufacturer. He does not make soaps. There is very sharp competition in the business, and the hardest kind of competition comes from the big soap manufacturer who makes perfumes as a side line. As I understand, if the manufacturer of perfumes does next year as he did this last year and produces $200,000 worth of perfumes gross, he will pay a 4 per cent tax on them. As his profits were only 5 per cent, Senators can see what a 4 per cent gross tax would do. It makes it almost impossible for him to compete against Colgate & Co., much the greater portion of whose business is in soap and whose goods have a splendid reputation and a very wide sale all over the country. Colgate & Co. can absorb the tax that it has to pay on perfumes and extracts in the great mass of its soap business, but the perfume manufacturer can not do so, and he will have a tax on practically his entire output.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, does the Senator mean to imply that he would keep the tax on soap, so that the man who makes nothing but perfumes can compete?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; I would not. I would strike out the whole thing.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The whole paragraph?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. PENROSE. That is the pending question.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes, it is. I am coming to that point. I think discussion of all the excise taxes up to this point has pretty clearly indicated to the observant mind that they are full of inconsistencies. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] has made some observations about inconsistencies, and with some of them I have a good deal of sympathy. Other inconsistencies have been brought out by other Senators, and the longer we discuss the list of industries that are to be singled out and taxed, the more inconsistencies we find and the more difficulties we find. Also, as we continue we will find hardships placed upon concerns whom we least expect will endure hardships under the provisions of the law.

I believe that what is left of paragraph 22 is going to impose a hardship on the little manufacturer of perfumes and extracts to the benefit of the large manufacturer of other articles who manufactures perfumes and extracts as a side line.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. KING. I have heard the statement made—I do not know whether there is any truth in it, but it seems at variance with the position taken by the Senator—that the manufacturer of perfumes alone requires so little machinery, so little capital, so few mechanical appliances, and so little labor, measured by the capital, machinery, appliances, and labor in the manufacture of soap and perfumes, that the former is at an advantage over the man who is engaged in the manufacture of soap and perfumes and other various products.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have never heard that stated before. All the information that comes to me has been that the small perfume manufacturer is having a hard time to live in competition with the great concerns.

Let us transpose the situation to another field of manufacture. Suppose we put a high tax on soap but refrained from putting a tax on meats of any kind, would not the packers have an immense advantage over the small soap manufacturer? They make soap as a comparatively small side line, meat being their great product. Leaving meat untaxed and taxing only soap, the tax imposed upon the soap would be absorbed in very large degree in the meat business, and the small soap manufacturer, who never took any part in the production of meat-food products, would have to pay a tax on his entire output.

The same thing is going to be done here I fear. I do not pretend to be completely and finally informed on the subject, but it illustrates—at least, I have attempted to illustrate—some of the dangers of these manufacturers' taxes at varying rates of tax imposed at random around the country, singling out one here and one there and one somewhere else.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I wish to tell the Senator that he is not only entirely right but no one pretends for a moment that there is any logic or consistency about any of these taxes. It has been frequently observed in the existing law, when that bill was being considered, and in the present bill that the committees have imposed taxes where they thought the money could be conveniently and least injuriously raised to make up deficits here and there. If the Senator is looking for logic, he ought not to look in this bill.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I realize that the Senator and I agree upon that phase of the matter. I had hoped, and I still hope, that later on during the discussion of the bill we shall have at least a logical proposal concerning the taxation of manufacturers.

Mr. PENROSE. On that point I have no doubt some day we can evolve one, but just now the people are accustomed to a certain system of direct taxation and the bill is to meet an emergency and ought to be passed soon. It contains many admirable propositions for the relief of the taxpayer and the readjustment of taxes. I hope it can be passed promptly. If we plunge into something new and untried, we do not know where we will land.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I suggest to the Senator from New York that we have had for many years excise taxes upon various articles?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Oh, yes.

Mr. KING. And various nations have had the same taxes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. But never at such rates. A 4 per cent tax is a serious tax.

Mr. KING. During the Civil War and for many years following it, as the Senator knows, there were excise taxes upon a large number of articles.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It was pretty nearly all comprehensive.

Mr. KING. Before we entered the war there were a number of articles upon which excise taxes were laid. I believe that a direct or excise tax upon many articles is a wise thing. I think we could with propriety tax gasoline and other articles that we could single out, and thus derive a large amount of revenue. We may say, fitting that tax in with the general industrial or economic system of the country, that it seems illogical or seems unjust.

I am not sure that the criticism is well founded that because you may tax some article that lends itself readily to a comprehensive system of taxation and would yield a great deal of revenue without much trouble is unjust or makes a system illogical. I do not agree to that. If we can find articles upon which we may lay an excise and obtain a great amount of revenue without undue burden to the people, and particularly where those articles are largely luxuries or consumed by a limited number, it seems to me where we can find such articles and apply taxes to them we can approximate a very fair standard of taxation.

Mr. PENROSE. I think, if the Senator from New York will permit me, that the statement of the Senator from Utah is absolutely correct and admirably put.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The phrase to which I object as used by the Senator from Utah is "singling out." I am willing to single out anything in time of war that will get money, but I think it is a bad policy to continue that singling out in time of peace. I have thus far voted in favor of every reduction or elimination of the excise-tax provisions that has been voted upon under this title. I have done it because I believe that individually and collectively they are unsound.

We are fast approaching a condition which is next door to absurdity. We have taken the tax off chewing gum, and I was in favor of it, but we have left a tax of 10 per cent on cameras. We have left 3 per cent tax on candy and a 5 per cent tax on photographic films. That can not be defended. We have left a 3 per cent tax on automobile trucks and a 5 per cent tax on automobiles and motor cycles, being careful to leave the words "except tractors" in there. Why? Why should not the tractor pay. The Senator from Utah the other day hinted at the reason. It was because too many people were purchasing tractors.

Mr. KING. May I interrupt the Senator right there—and I apologize for so doing. A tractor is used essentially for farming. It is engaged in the production of the necessaries of life—food. That may not be said of bicycles or some other things of which the Senator spoke.

Mr. WADSWORTH. But it can be said of motor trucks.

Mr. KING. I was not directing my attention to motor trucks.

Mr. WADSWORTH. There is the difficulty. Here we come to the Senator's singling-out process. This singling-out process does one thing above everything else. It spreads discontent all over the country. I received a letter the other day, which may not be material and may not be a very intelligent protest, but a constituent of mine notices that carpets and rugs are taxed under the bill as they are taxed under the existing law. He is a manufacturer of carpets and rugs. He is one of those, of course, who have been led to believe that his taxes would be reduced. Perhaps they are reduced a little, but they are still continued somewhat. He wants to know why brocades and other upholstery materials are not taxed. Can anybody tell him? There is no answer.

Mr. PENROSE. There is an answer, if the Senator desires to have it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I should be glad to have it. Perhaps I made a rash statement.

Mr. PENROSE. It may not be a very good answer, but it was uppermost in the minds of the Ways and Means Committee of the House and the Finance Committee of the Senate not to bring in, if possible, any new articles and subject them to taxation, not to go afield and bring in a vast array of suggested articles.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am very glad the Senator's committee did not bring in any new articles.

Mr. PENROSE. That was the thought.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I sympathize with the Senator in that, but what are we going to say to the carpet manufacturer?

Mr. PENROSE. Let me correct the Senator, if I may, and then I shall sit down. The Senator said there has been some invidious singling out. These taxes are administered under a general law on articles of general distribution. There is no singling out. No individual, no class is singled out. Certain articles, being able to afford a moderate tax and being subject to conditions which render them available for the collection of a tax, have been taken. Other nations have done the same thing. We did the same thing during the Civil War. No one contends that there is any great logic in it. It is simply a question of practicability and convenience.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, as I said a moment ago, I have no criticism to make of it when it is done in war time, but the country to-day is expecting us to enact a permanent revision of the revenue laws to continue in time of peace. When one industry finds it is taxed and another industry next door is not taxed under the excise-tax title, it is very difficult to explain. It leads to discontent and misunderstanding. I would be in favor of a very low tax on all these articles; but as a matter of principle I am opposed to singling out a few and imposing heavy rates of taxation on them.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I simply wish to say that I think Federal excise taxes constitute the most unfortunate kind of taxation that we have. I receive more complaints about the petty little taxes of various kinds in this subdivision of the bill than about all the remainder of the taxes combined. The people do not like them. As the Senator from New York has pointed out, some are taxed and some are not; some articles are called luxuries and some are not; and each tax is a cause of complaint. I think it is a great pity that we can not raise enough revenue from other sources of taxation without resorting to excise taxes of the kind proposed to be imposed in this subdivision of the bill. I should like to vote against all of them, and I have voted against a number of them. I have very serious doubt as to whether I ought not to vote against all of them. I think it is an unfortunate and an unfair way of collecting Federal revenue. It is certainly unjust and unfair to many businesses in our country. We should either treat all these commodities alike, as suggested by the Senator from Utah, or we should do away entirely with the taxes on them. My own judgment is that it would probably be better to do away with them entirely.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Tennessee that there is more complaint about the peculiar taxes which are involved in this paragraph than about any other taxes in the bill. They affect more directly perhaps the lives of the great mass of the people than any other class of taxes and affect them in an irritating way. I believe that the Senate and the committee would do well to eliminate this paragraph from the bill.

The Treasury experts inform me that the paragraph as it is now written with the 4 per cent tax would produce about $3,000,000 of revenue. That is about twice as much, however, as has been yielded by the tax on the same items under the system which has been in force whereby the taxes were collected from the consumer in the store. So by the elimination of this paragraph we would be losing from existing taxation about a million and a half dollars. If we retain this paragraph in its present form, we would be doubling the taxes which are now being paid by the people on these items. In other words, we would be raising $3,000,000 on items on which the people have been paying only $1,500,000.

Mr. KING. May I inquire whether the Senator's contention is that the tax is increased?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The tax is increased, because the taxes either have not reached the Treasury Department or they have not been collected from the consumer at the drug stores.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. The rate is not increased, if I may be pardoned.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The rate is the same.

Mr. KING. So that if the law is properly and fairly administered there will be no more paid upon these particular articles in the future than has been paid in the past?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That is perfectly true.

Mr. KING. The Senator's argument, then, is a criticism of the administration of the existing law?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes; but owing to the nature of the tax it is very difficult to administer and hard to collect. It requires a great many agents to go around and inquire and ferret into the business of many little stores to ascertain whether the taxes are paid. I repeat, it is a very difficult tax to collect.

Mr. KING. Is this tax collected upon the retailer or upon the manufacturer?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Heretofore it has been collected from the retailer, but this bill contemplates the collection of the tax from the manufacturer.

Mr. KING. Exactly. This proposes a transfer to the manufacturer, so that it will be more easily collected. The criticism the Senator has been making, then, can not be addressed to the system if this amendment shall be adopted?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I repeat the point, however, that we should have actually collected into the Treasury about twice the money in taxes on these items that we are collecting under existing law.

Mr. McCUMBER. Is not that because the taxes were being evaded?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. They were either being evaded or were not being collected, or when collected were stolen.

Mr. McKELLAR. Has the Senator any figures to show how much it costs to collect the various excise taxes such as are embraced in this subdivision? I imagine it costs a great deal. I doubt very much whether the Government gets any very great benefit out of it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I will say to the Senator that, of course, under the bill as now framed by the committee it is expected to collect these taxes from the manufacturer, so that the collection of the taxes will be more easy and will be accomplished more completely, as we shall get practically all the taxes we should get. But, Mr. President, the selection of certain items in the bill for elimination and the retention of others is, as expressed by the chairman of the committee, who is well informed upon the subject, absolutely illogical and indefensible.

Mr. PENROSE. I did not say "indefensible."

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Indefensible, except as a means of getting revenue.

Mr. PENROSE. Oh, no; I did not use the word "indefensible" or even think of it. I hope the Senator will not impute that to me.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. PENROSE. There is no scientific system in connection with the collection of taxes on these articles. It is simply a practical proposition, but not indefensible. On the contrary, I said that every civilized nation in the world followed similar methods, and that we ourselves followed similar methods during the Civil War.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I meant to say "indefensible" from a scientific standpoint, as a matter of selecting for taxation one item in preference to another. I did not mean to misrepresent the Senator.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Mr. KING. Can not the Senator differentiate any of the articles embraced in the paragraph which he seeks to eliminate from articles which everybody concedes are necessaries of life? There is a great deal of difference between pomades and perfumes and toilet waters and other similar preparations and those things which all recognize as necessities of life. It may be difficult at times to say where the line is to be drawn between necessities and luxuries; it fades away and is lost in a sort of twilight zone, but I submit there can be no difficulty in determining that these particular articles come within the category of luxuries, and if we are to tax luxuries then it is clear that at least some of the articles named in this paragraph should be taxed.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, does the Senator from Utah include in the category of luxuries vaselines and cosmolines used in the care of infants in all parts of the country?

Mr. KING. I am not so sure that I would include as luxuries some of the articles which the Senator has mentioned. They were unknown a few years ago, and yet some of them, vaseline, for instance, have become necessities.

Mr. EDGE. Did the Senator ever hear of a nursery without such articles?

Mr. KING. I hope the Senator does not expect to bring my experience in the nursery into the Senate. Of course, there are some articles comprised within "petroleum jellies" that should be classed as necessities and they should be exempt from an excise tax.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I therefore hope, Mr. President, that the Senate will decide to eliminate this paragraph. The chairman of the committee has stated that we shall have an excess of revenue of about $10,000,000 anyhow, and it would seem that that margin is probably sufficiently large to enable us safely to eliminate this paragraph.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, there again I must take issue with the Senator from West Virginia. My estimate did not contemplate in any way the loss of revenue from this paragraph. If four or five million dollars are to be deducted through the elimination of this paragraph, the margin will become very small.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I understood, Mr. President, that the estimate did not include this paragraph, but that without any change in this paragraph there would remain a margin of $10,000,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the committee as amended.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, when this bill was reported to the Senate, and after the discussion was entered upon, the Senator from North Carolina, not only in his opening address but in subsequent ones, pointed out what he conceived to be serious defects in this bill; he also challenged attention to amendments that were proper and which the Senate has adopted. His valuable efforts have materially improved this bill. If his suggestions had been followed we would have had a bill that would have, in my opinion, met the requirements of the country; but it looks as though the majority were seeking—I withdraw the word "majority" and will say it looks as though some upon the other side of the Chamber are doing all that they possibly can to eliminate from this bill luxury taxes and other provisions which impose taxes upon corporate wealth in order that the Senate will feel constrained, in order to get needed revenue, to fasten an obnoxious turnover sales tax, or something akin to it, upon the country. Selfish interests have determined, if they have the power—and they think they have—that they shall escape taxation, or, at least, evade the payment of an honest and legitimate tax to the Government. They are using the Republican Party to aid them in their effort, and some upon the Republican side of the Chamber are aiding in this purpose by voting to strike from this bill articles upon which excise taxes should be laid, and against the inclusion within this bill of provisions which render such proper subjects for taxation.

The Senator from West Virginia in his attack upon this provision has not been able to demonstrate that the articles herein taxed are not luxuries. He is assuming that they are necessities; he is refusing to perceive that there is a clear line between luxuries and necessities and that it is wise and just legislation to impose taxes upon luxuries, particularly at the present time.

I can not comprehend his attitude in contending that burdens should not be laid upon luxuries. If his view prevails, it is obvious that we shall be compelled to levy a heavy sales tax that will reach the necessities of life.

I would be willing to support a sales tax that would reach luxuries and other commodities such as gasoline and others that readily suggest themselves to the minds of Senators that can not be classed as necessities, such as are imperatively required for the sustenance and life of the people. Food products, clothing, and so forth, are real necessities. They should never be taxed unless some contingency arises. If we persist in this policy of whittling down the list of articles upon which taxes shall be levied, we will be confronted with the fact that there will be a great deficit. Indeed, I think that situation is now before us.

I do not agree with the Senator from Pennsylvania that the bill as it now stands, with the amendments which have been made, will furnish sufficient revenue for the Government. I predict that if this bill shall be passed in the form contemplated by the Senator from Pennsylvania there will be a deficit of from $500,000,000 to $1,000,000,000, and I protest against a course which will compel amendments to this bill or supplementary legislation increasing the burdens upon the great body of the American people. The working classes are now suffering unduly. Their interests should be regarded and scrupulously protected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, is the motion that I made in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia moved to strike out the paragraph; but the paragraph can not be stricken out, not having yet been incorporated in the bill. The parliamentary situation is that the vote comes upon the amendment of the committee as amended; and a negative vote will accomplish the result which the Senator from Virginia had in mind.

Mr. McKELLAR. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum is suggested. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hale	McKinley	Simmons
Broussard	Harris	McLean	Smoot
Calder	Heflin	McNary	Spencer
Cameron	Hitchcock	Myers	Stanfield
Capper	Jones, N. Mex.	Nelson	Stanley
Caraway	Jones, Wash.	New	Sutherland
Curtis	Kendrick	Newberry	Swanson
Dial	Kenyon	Norbeck	Townsend
Edge	Keyes	Oddie	Trammell
Ernst	King	Overman	Wadsworth
Fernald	Ladd	Owen	Warren
Fletcher	La Follette	Phipps	Watson, Ga.
France	Lenroot	Poindexter	Willis
Frelinghuysen	McCormick	Ransdell
Gerry	McCumber	Reed
Gooding	McKellar	Sheppard

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-one Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as found on page 201, lines 15 to 22, as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the next amendment passed over.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 201, beginning with line 23, the committee proposes to insert:

(23) Office furniture and fittings, made of rosewood, any imported cabinet woods (except oak), or solid mahogany, or of which such rosewood, imported cabinet wood (except oak), or solid mahogany is the component material of chief value, 5 per cent.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I hope that amendment will be rejected. It is an amendment putting a tax upon furniture if it is made of certain woods. I think the difference in price to-day between walnut and mahogany, and practically between birch and mahogany, is almost nothing. For the last year they have been practically the same; and I think the understanding on the part of the majority of the committee is that that amendment should be rejected.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, there was confusion in the Chamber, and I could not hear the explanation of the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. McCUMBER. This is an amendment whereby we put a tax of 5 per cent upon office furniture and fittings made of rosewood or any imported cabinet wood, no matter what it is—except oak—or solid mahogany, or of which such rosewood, imported cabinet wood—except oak—or solid mahogany is the component material of chief value.

Mr. REED. Why is imported oak excepted?

Mr. McCUMBER. Because certain oak, like Japanese oak, is said to be a very cheap wood. Of course, I take the position myself that none of this should be in the bill; that we should not levy this tax upon ordinary office furniture.

Mr. REED. The Senator is asking to have the amendment rejected?

Mr. McCUMBER. That is correct.

Mr. REED. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey will state it.

Mr. EDGE. When we passed over section (22) and voted on the committee amendment I made an effort to get the recognition of the Chair, but did not succeed. We passed on, and the next item was the paragraph relating to office furniture and fittings. I desire to offer a further amendment to section (22), eliminating petroleum jellies, which are purely and simply medicinal preparations. I do not know how we can get a vote on a matter of that kind, except to address the Chair and endeavor to offer the amendment.

I move that the vote by which the section was adopted be reconsidered for the purpose of making a separate motion that petroleum jellies, vaseline, and cosmoline be eliminated from the paragraph.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the vote is reconsidered. The Senator from New Jersey has the floor.

Mr. EDGE. Now I move that from that paragraph, in line 16, page 201—the same paragraph from which we have eliminated soaps, tooth pastes, and toilet powders—we eliminate the words "petroleum jellies."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On line 16, page 201, it is proposed to strike out the words "petroleum jellies" and the comma.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator what he understands is comprehended within the words "petroleum jellies"?

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I am informed that petroleum jellies include in the main the vaselines and cosmolines that are sold in all the druggists' shops and chemists' shops of the country for the purposes which are thoroughly understood, I am sure, by every Senator in this Chamber. If we eliminate the other articles that we have already eliminated, recognizing thoroughly the practical use of these commodities, I can not see why they should remain in the bill, so that every purchaser of cosmoline or vaseline will be taxed 4 per cent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Now, Mr. President, I move that the entire amendment be disagreed to, and on that I ask for a division.

Mr. McCUMBER. I raise the point of order that that matter has been voted upon and the amendment has been agreed to.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. It has been reconsidered, and is now before the Senate. I move that it be rejected, and ask for a division.

Mr. KING. I raise the point of order that it was reconsidered merely for the purpose of submitting the motion which was indicated by the junior Senator from New Jersey.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah is right. The question now is upon agreeing to the section as amended.

Mr. McKELLAR. That will bring up the question so that we can have a vote on it. I ask for the yeas and nays, Mr. President.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I wish we could have a yea-and-nay vote on it. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I ask for a division, then, Mr. President.

On a division the amendment as amended was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the next amendment.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. I understand the amendment I offered, to strike out the words "petroleum jellies," in line 16, was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was agreed to.

Mr. EDGE. I would like also to include in that amendment, if I may have unanimous consent, the same words on line 22 of the substitute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. SIMMONS. After we have reconsidered and then voted again, and the Chair has declared that the amendment is agreed to as amended, how can we do that?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina is correct; it can not be done except by unanimous consent. The Senator from New Jersey asks unanimous consent.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I do not intend to give my consent to reopen that section any more, because if we do consent every time a Senator hears from one of his constituents we will soon have eliminated every item in the section.

Mr. EDGE. A parliamentary inquiry. As it is a purely technical correction, I understand it can be offered in the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It can be. The Secretary will now state the next amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 202, beginning with line 3, the committee proposes to insert the following:

If any manufacturer, producer, or importer of any of the articles enumerated in this section customarily sells such articles both at wholesale and at retail, the tax in the case of any article sold by him at retail shall be computed on the price for which like articles are sold by him at wholesale.

The taxes imposed by this section shall, in the case of any article in respect to which a corresponding tax is imposed by section 900 of the revenue act of 1918, be in lieu of such tax.

The amendment was agreed to.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The committee proposes, on page 202, to strike out lines 13 and 14, as follows:

SEC. 809. Section 901 of the revenue act of 1918 is amended to read as follows:

The amendment was agreed to.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 202, at the end of line 20, after the word "act," insert a comma and the words "at less than the fair market price obtainable therefor."

The amendment was agreed to.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 203, the committee proposes to strike out lines 10, 11, and 12, as follows:

SEC. 810. Section 902 of the revenue act of 1918 is amended by striking out the figure "10" and inserting in lieu thereof the figure "5."

The amendment was agreed to.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The committee proposes to insert, on page 203, beginning with line 13, the following:

SEC. 902. That there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid upon sculpture, paintings, statuary, art porcelains, and bronzes, sold by any person other than the artist, a tax equivalent to 10 per cent of the price for which so sold. This section shall not apply to the sale of any such article (1) to an educational institution or public art museum, or (2) by any dealer in such articles to another dealer in such articles for resale.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, for the purpose of perfecting this amendment, I move to strike out the figures "10" on line 16 and to insert in lieu thereof the figure "5."

Mr. REED. Mr. President, we have taken the tax off of billiard balls, dice, playing cards, baseball bats, polo mallets, tennis rackets, golf balls, golf sticks, golf bags, and all those things. Now it is proposed to levy a tax on art. Art is educational. I will not say there is nothing we need to cultivate more in this country than art, but I will say that it is one of those attributes of mind and taste which ought to be cultivated in America much more than it is.

Instead of taxing it, we ought to encourage it. Instead of putting the burden of taxation on it, the public treasuries of the States, of the municipalities, and even of the Nation, might be drawn upon to a reasonable extent in order that we might have the best of the arts in the world. These objects of beauty, miracles of the chisel and the brush, works of the geniuses of the ages, all have the highest value in training the mind and elevating the tastes of the people. It is true they are frequently purchased by the very wealthy and placed in their homes, where they are observable only by the fortunate people who are invited to their houses, but almost invariably they reach the galleries of art, places where the public are admitted. I think it very unwise to tax works of art and to take the tax off sporting goods.

Mr. President, I ask that we disagree to the entire section. I ask for the yeas and nays on the question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota to the amendment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. May I suggest something to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the Senator desire the yeas and nays on the motion to reduce it from 10 per cent to 5 per cent?

Mr. REED. Oh, no; I thought that had been done.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is the question now.

Mr. REED. I have no objection to that at all.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state his inquiry.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I was not on the floor when this matter came up, or when the Senator from North Dakota made his motion, and I would like to know what the motion is.

Mr. McCUMBER. The motion is to strike out the figures "10" on line 16, and to insert in lieu thereof the figure "5," so as to reduce the tax from 10 per cent to 5 per cent. The Senate, of course, will remember that in all of our tariff bills we have regarded these as luxuries; they have been subject to very much higher tariffs, and always subject to higher taxes, both in the Democratic and in the Republican tariff and revenue measures.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I only heard the concluding portion of the remarks of the Senator from Missouri, and I am in entire accord with his view about the taxation of art. I do not know in what parliamentary form a motion could be made to strike out the tax entirely.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I can answer that. This is an amendment proposed by the committee. If it is voted down, the tax automatically disappears.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. My understanding was that the House provision in the bill was for 5 per cent and the Senate committee amendment raised it to 10. Now, the Senator from North Dakota asks to amend the Senate amendment, and therefore I assume that an amendment to strike out "5" and leave it nothing would be an amendment in the third degree and perhaps could not be offered at this time.

I will make the motion when it will be in order if such a motion will be in order. I hope this tax, which is simply a fetter upon what the Senator from Missouri has so admirably called the education of the people, their cultural education, may be abolished altogether. I am aware that what the Senator from North Dakota has said is true. In the past apparently the idea has prevailed in Congress that a tax upon art, sculpture, and painting was in some way a tax upon a luxury of the rich, but I do not take that view of it. Many of the other great countries of the world encourage by largesses the productions of their great artists. They establish great national galleries, and they are an infinite source of enjoyment to all the people.

What the Senator from Missouri has said is quite true, that while the more expensive of the paintings and sculptures, the products of the geniuses of the world, if they are purchased and brought to this country, or if they are made and purchased in this country, have to be purchased by rich men, in nine cases out of ten when those collections are dissolved they go into the hands of others, and ultimately they are collected in the galleries of this country and are free to the public.

If I have the figures correctly, the striking out of this tax entirely would mean a matter of only $400,000 in revenue, and I think the public taste should be encouraged by making art free. It is just as much a part of the education of the public as their education in schools, or their education in music, or their education in religion, and, indeed, the masterpieces of sculpture and painting furnish inspiration to the higher impulses of the people everywhere.

This is a paltry matter as to revenue. I think the impulse given to artists and to those who want to accumulate and ultimately dispense their productions, after they have enjoyed the study of them themselves for a while, ought to be encouraged, and I think it would be greatly encouraged by the sentiment exhibited by the Congress toward the great subject of art.

I am cordially in favor of the entire elimination of this tax.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, the Senator, of course, will have no difficulty in reaching the parliamentary situation. The amendment offered by me is to perfect the committee amendment. If it is perfected by reducing the tax from 10 to 5 per cent, and adopted, that will cut it in half. The Senator can then move, of course, to disagree to the committee amendment.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The question would then be upon agreeing to the committee amendment.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; the question would be upon agreeing to the committee amendment. But if the Senate will give attention to the provision, I think that many of the criticisms which are made of this section, if I may call them such, will disappear.

I will read it:

That there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid upon sculpture, paintings, statuary, art porcelains, and bronzes, sold by any person other than the artist—

If the artist sells them directly himself, there is no tax at all. The tax is intended only to cover those instances in which they are bought by the dealers and then often sold at an enormous profit and for enormous sums of money. As amended it would then read—a tax equivalent to 5 per cent of the price for which so sold.

That is, if sold by a dealer.

This section shall not apply to the sale of any such article (1) to an educational institution or public art museum—

Therefore it will apply only when sold to those who are wealthy and can afford probably to pay this little additional tax—or (2) by any dealer in such articles to another dealer in such articles for resale.

So when we get to its real meaning it will be seen that if the artist himself or the sculptor or the painter sells it directly, there is no tax whatever. If it is sold to a museum or an art gallery or any place for public exhibit, there is no tax. Therefore it only applies to those sales made by a dealer in those articles that generally sell for many, many times what the dealer pays to the artist. I do not think that a 5 per cent tax is high.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I was familiar with the exact language of the provision. The difficulty is that a tax upon the purchase of paintings is really in its effect a tax upon the artist. It discourages the business.

While I am in favor of exempting the sales of one dealer to another dealer, that is about as far as I would go; but I fail to see why a dealer, who the Senator says generally makes a great deal more profit than the man who painted the picture, should be exempt from the tax when he sells to another dealer, but if he sells to me I have to pay the tax. I do not understand that; but that is a small point. My theory is that Congress should show its appreciation of the beauties and the cultural thing connected with it, the inspiration that art is to the whole people, by saying that that industry and that thing shall be tax free in this country. I think the paltry amount of revenue we get out of it ought not to weigh as against the considerations that appeal to me.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I do not wish to prolong the matter because I really wish to hasten the final consideration of the bill. I shall regret very much if we keep this tax on. It is the only tax in the bill that is specifically aimed at a tribute when the article passes from the wholesaler to the retailer. The bill is drawn so that the artist himself can sell it, but he must sell it in ninety-nine cases out of one hundred to a man who sells it to somebody else, and the minute it reaches that stage the tax becomes effective. The result of it is that whenever an artist goes to sell his picture to a dealer he sells under those conditions. The dealer knows that when he sells it he must pay the tax, and the probabilities are he deducts that tax from the price he pays the artist.

Mr. President, I have here a brief that was handed to me on behalf of the American Federation of Arts, composed of 273 chapters, located in almost every State in the Union, and which includes practically all the art museums and art societies in the United States. Among these are the National Art Club of New York City, the Fine Arts Federation of New York City, the League of New York Artists (Inc.), the National Academy of Design, the New York Chapter of the American Institute of Architects, the American Water Color Society, the Society of American Artists, and others. There are a large number in addition to those I have named. They protest against this tax. They protest against it upon the ground that it is a tax upon education and upon the cultivation of the finer sensibilities and finer tastes of a people.

I absolutely agree with that proposition. If there is anything in which America is lagging far behind the rest of the world it is in its works of art produced by the native American. The reason probably is found in the fact that in this country we so little regard art that we absolutely levy a tax upon its sale, whereas in other countries the artist is honored, his works are hung in great galleries, and his reputation if he is successful is of a character that may be taken as superior to almost any other reputation.

I have never had the privilege of going abroad, but I know that the cities of the Old World are beautified by works of genius. I know that the knowledge of art, among even the humble in Europe, is far superior to the general knowledge of art in this country. There is nothing more typical of the character of a people than its works of art. The genius of Greece that produced the immortal marble flowered and came to perfection along with that genius which produced the highest character of literature and the most splendid monuments of architecture. It would be better, sir, if we were to take the money from the Public Treasury and establish schools of art, as indeed we are in a modest way in various parts of the country, than to be taxing the product of the brush and the chisel of those who have devoted their lives to a profession or calling that is all too unremunerative.

I repeat what I said a moment ago. If we can take the tax off of golf balls and billiard balls and chewing gum, we ought certainly to take it off of paintings and statuary, and take it all off.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, just a moment, to understand what the amendment provides. The amendment does not provide for any tax when sold by the artist. It does not provide for any tax then. It is exempt from tax when sold by the owner to any public institution. The 5 per cent tax will only apply when sold by somebody other than the artist to some other private individual.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, does the Senator deny that generally these paintings are sold through art dealers? The Senator does not challenge the fact that generally paintings are sold through art dealers?

Mr. LENROOT. They may be. I merely desired to explain what the amendment does.

Mr. REED. If an artist brings his picture to an art dealer, the art dealer when he buys it knows that he will have to pay the tax, and he takes that into consideration in purchasing the picture.

Mr. LENROOT. That is probably true.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, it is perfectly well known that any sales there may be from the living artist to the final purchaser must be comparatively few. Most of these works of art were created by people who have been dead many years. The real works of art are of that type, and those can not be bought from the producer. I think that the exception practically amounts to nothing. I agree with the Senator from Missouri that if we are to take off any tax anywhere, we ought to save these works of art.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I understand the parliamentary situation now to be that the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota, changing the rate of taxation from 10 to 5 per cent, has been agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has not. That is the pending question.

Mr. REED. I am agreeable that that should be voted upon, and then I desire to offer an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota striking out the numeral "10" and inserting the numeral "5."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I now move to strike out of the section, in lines 14 and 15, the words "sculpture, paintings, statuary, art porcelains, and bronzes, sold by any person other than the artist," and to insert in lieu of the words stricken out the words "tennis rackets, nets, racket covers and presses, skis, toboggans, polo mallets, basket-ball goals and uniforms, football helmets, golf bags and clubs, lacrosse sticks, balls of all kinds, including baseballs, footballs, tennis, golf, lacrosse, billiard, and pool balls, fishing rods and reels, billiard and pool tables, chess and checker boards and pieces, dice, games and parts of games."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri desire to leave in the exemption applying when the articles are sold to an educational institution?

Mr. REED. I am offering this amendment now. We shall get to the educational institutions later on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. I ask for the yeas and nays upon my amendment, Mr. President. I am in dead earnest about it.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. REED. I raise the question of the lack of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum is suggested. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Brandegee	Gooding	McCumber	Simmons
Broussard	Hale	McKellar	Smoot
Bursum	Harreld	McKinley	Spencer
Calder	Harris	McLean	Sutherland
Cameron	Heflin	McNary	Swanson
Capper	Hitchcock	New	Townsend
Curtis	Jones, Wash.	Newberry	Trammell
Dial	Kendrick	Norbeck	Wadsworth
Edge	Kenyon	Oddie	Walsh, Mass.
Ernst	Keyes	Overman	Warren
Fernald	Ladd	Phipps	Watson, Ga.
Fletcher	La Follette	Pittman	Watson, Ind.
France	Lenroot	Reed	Willis
Gerry	McCormick	Sheppard

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-five Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. REED. I desire to perfect the amendment offered by striking out all of the section after the word "sold," in line 17. I ask the Secretary to read the amendment to the Senate.

The READING CLERK. On page 203, in lines 14, 15, and 16, it is proposed to strike out "sculpture, paintings, statuary, art porcelains, and bronzes sold by any person other than the artist," and to insert in lieu thereof the words "tennis rackets, nets, racket covers and presses, skis, toboggans, polo mallets, basket-ball goals and uniforms, football helmets, golf bags and clubs, lacrosse sticks, balls of all kinds, including baseballs, footballs, tennis, golf, lacrosse, billiard, and pool balls, fishing rods and reels, billiard and pool tables, chess and checker boards and pieces, dice, games and parts of games."

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, as I have stated, I should like to vote to strike out the art objects proposed to be taxed in this paragraph. I wish we could have a separate vote on that. I am unable to vote for the Senator's motion to strike out and insert, because I do not want to tax any of these articles.

Mr. REED. I am perfectly willing to have the vote in the form suggested by the Senator from Connecticut, but if it is taken in that form I should like to have it understood that if it is defeated I can then offer my amendment.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I should like to have the Senator have that privilege.

Mr. REED. If the Senator will make his motion in the form to disagree to the amendment, then I can offer the amendment I desire, and I will withdraw the amendment for the time being.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. As I understand, the question is on agreeing to the committee amendment as amended. If we vote that down, then the House provision stands, and then, I assume, we can strike out the 5 per cent tax provided by the House provision, if the Senate so desires. So the question is on agreeing to the Senate committee amendment as amended.

Mr. REED. And a vote "yea" is a vote to tax art and a vote "nay" is a vote not to tax art. That is the way the question will stand.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Exactly.

Mr. REED. On the adoption of the committee amendment as amended I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. EDGE (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as heretofore in regard to my pair and its transfer, I vote "nay."

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL]. Being unable to obtain a transfer, I must withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. HALE (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as heretofore with regard to my pair and its transfer, I vote "nay."

Mr. McLEAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS]. In his absence, I withhold my vote.

Mr. SIMMONS (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] to the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before with reference to my pair and its transfer, I vote "yea."

Mr. TRAMMELL (when his name was called). Making the same announcement with regard to my pair and its transfer as on the last roll call, I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. FERNALD (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES]. In his absence, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. ERNST (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CROW] and will let my vote stand.

Mr. McCORMICK (after having voted in the negative). I note that my pair, the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK], is absent from the Chamber. Therefore I transfer my pair to the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. WELLER] and will let my vote stand.

Mr. McCUMBER (after having voted in the affirmative). I notice that my pair, the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], has not voted. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH];

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL];

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD];

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS];

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON];

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH]; and

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

The result was announced—yeas 32, nays 18, as follows:

YEAS—32.

Bursum	France	Heflin	McCumber
Cameron	Gerry	Jones, Wash.	McKellar
Capper	Gooding	Ladd	McKinley
Curtis	Harreld	La Follette	McNary
Ernst	Harris	Lenroot	Oddie

Pomerene	Smoot	Swanson	Walsh, Mass.
Sheppard	Stanfield	Townsend	Warren
Simmons	Sutherland	Trammell	Willis

NAYS—18.

Brandegee	Hale	Newberry	Wadsworth
Broussard	Keyes	Overman	Watson, Ga.
Calder	McCormick	Phipps	Watson, Ind.
Dial	Moses	Reed
Edge	New	Spencer

NOT VOTING—46.

Ashurst	Fletcher	McLean	Robinson
Ball	Frelinghuysen	Myers	Shields
Borah	Glass	Nelson	Shortridge
Caraway	Harrison	Nicholson	Smith
Colt	Hitchcock	Norbeck	Stanley
Crow	Johnson	Norris	Sterling
Culberson	Jones, N. Mex.	Owen	Underwood
Cummins	Kellogg	Page	Walsh, Mont.
Dillingham	Kendrick	Penrose	Weller
du Pont	Kenyon	Pittman	Williams
Elkins	King	Poindexter
Fernald	Lodge	Ransdell

So the amendment of the committee as amended was agreed to.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I stated a while ago that I should reserve the right to offer an amendment to substitute for these works of art the various sporting goods that have already been exempted. I thought we could get a pretty good idea of the temper of the Senate by presenting it in that way. This vote is decisive. The Senate has already voted to exempt sporting goods, and has just now voted by a large majority to tax art, and I think it would be of no use to offer my amendment; so I shall not offer it. We will let the record stand just as it is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the next amendment passed over.

The READING CLERK. The next amendment passed over is on page 203, after line 21, to insert a new section as follows:

SEC. 903. That every person liable for any tax imposed by sections 900, 902, 904, 906, or 907 shall make monthly returns under oath in duplicate and pay these taxes imposed by such sections to the collector for the district in which is located the principal place of business. Such returns shall contain such information and be made at such times and in such manner as the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may by regulations prescribe.

The tax shall, without assessment by the commissioner or notice from the collector, be due and payable to the collector at the time so fixed for filing the return. If the tax is not paid when due, there shall be added as part of the tax a penalty of 5 per cent, together with interest at the rate of 1 per cent for each full month, from the time when the tax became due.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator from North Dakota if he does not think that is rather too heavy a penalty to impose for the nonpayment of taxes—and, of course, it will apply if the tax is not paid on the very day on which it is due—a penalty of 5 per cent, and, in addition to that, interest at the rate of 1 per cent for each full month?

Mr. McCUMBER. I will say to the Senator that that is the 1918 law.

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes; I agree to that. The 1918 law, as the Senator knows, was not a perfect law, as no law is a perfect law.

Mr. McCUMBER. I appreciate that, but I want to add also that it is consistent with all of the other penalties that are provided for disobedience, and so forth, and I am inclined to think that if we should make a change in this penalty we would have to make a good many other changes in the bill which would be also modifications of the old law.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I shall not make any point about the matter. I simply wanted to call it to the attention of the Senator in the hope that if he thought the penalty was too great it might be modified in this case and in other cases; but if it would cause embarrassment I shall not press it.

Mr. McCUMBER. In this case the taxpayer can always make application for an extension of time, showing any good reason that he may have, and it will always be granted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The READING CLERK. On page 204, it is proposed to strike out lines 15 and 16 and to insert the following:

SEC. 904. That from and after January 1, 1922, there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid, in lieu of the taxes imposed by section 904 of the revenue act of 1918, upon the following articles sold or leased by the manufacturer, producer, or importer, a tax equivalent to 5 per cent of so much of the price for which so sold or leased as is in excess of the price hereinafter specified as to each such article—

(1) Carpets and rugs, including fiber, on the amount in excess of $4 per square yard in the case of carpets and $6 per square yard in the case of rugs;

(2) Trunks, on the amount in excess of $35 each;

(3) Valises, traveling bags, suit cases, hat boxes used by travelers, and fitted toilet cases, on the amount in excess of $25 each;

(4) Purses, pocketbooks, shopping and hand bags, on the amount in excess of $5 each;

(5) Portable lighting fixtures, including lamps of all kinds and lamp shades, on the amount in excess of $10 each; and

(6) Fans, on the amount in excess of $1 each.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I hesitate a good deal to take the time of the Senate in calling attention to these things, but it seems to me we have now struck a portion of the bill which can be truly described as containing nuisance taxes. Here we are to tax an article, if it costs more than so much, 5 per cent of the excess over that upset figure, as it were.

If a fan is going to cost a dollar and a half, we are going to impose a tax of 5 per cent on 50 cents and endeavor to collect it and put it in the Treasury.

If a trunk costs $36, we are going to assess a 5 per cent tax on $1, which is 5 cents, and put it in the Treasury. I do not know upon what theory these things have been picked out.

I do not know why carpets and rugs are picked out. Why not wall paper? Why not hangings or upholstering material?

Purses and pocketbooks, shopping and hand bags, are to pay a 5 per cent tax on the amount in excess of $5 each. Everybody knows that lots of shopping and hand bags are made by seamstresses, not by manufacturing concerns. They are embroidered by women who work at their own homes and sell them where they can. Does anybody think he can collect that tax? If it can be collected, does anybody think it ought to be collected? I do not know what the total of this would amount to, but the term "nuisance tax" exactly describes this whole thing.

Portable lighting fixtures, including lamps of all kinds and lamp shades, are taxed on the amount in excess of $10 each. I suppose under that language a lamp shade is regarded the same as a portable lighting fixture. Not many lamp shades, I suppose, cost more than $10. Some do that are hand decorated by some poor woman who is trying to eke out a living. In a great many instances it is done in that way. If by any chance she is able to command $10.50 for a lamp shade which is made of paper and strung on wires and decorated by her, she has to pay a 5 per cent tax on the excess over $10.

This is the kind of thing I referred to before as creating discontent. The people whom it is here proposed to tax will always ask, "Why are we picked out?"—and there is no answer. You can not answer the taxpayer when he asks that question.

I merely desire to register my protest against these taxes.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, another thing, if the Senator will permit me: A great many of the articles mentioned here, with the high price of everything, must cost the limit that is fixed here. You can scarcely go in anywhere and buy any of these articles that are worth having at the prices which are fixed here.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, may I correct what is possibly a misunderstanding on the part of the Senator?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. McCUMBER. This is not the retail price. Take a purse that is sold by the manufacturer for $5, and you probably could not buy it for $25 at a retail place; and along all of these lines of manufacture you will find the article running from four to five times the manufacturer's price at the time the article is sold at the retail store. These are wholesale prices.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It does not say "wholesale."

Mr. McCUMBER. I think it does. The tax is levied on the manufacturer, and the manufacturer's sale, of course, is at the wholesale price.

Mr. WADSWORTH. What constitutes a manufacturer?

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, it may be that some of the things that are made by the great manufacturers of purses and these other articles, high-priced draperies and carpets and rugs, and so forth, may also be made by some woman in her own home; but such articles would not be one-thousandth of 1 per cent of the whole, and if they did escape being caught and taxed it would amount to nothing.

The Senator from Pennsylvania stated a short time ago that we still had about $10,000,000 to the good. Since then I think there have been $4,000,000 of that cut away. This will take between $3,000,000 and $4,000,000 away, and before we get through cutting out these nuisance taxes—and I admit they are nuisance taxes—we will have a deficit, and we will have to hunt around for some other means of taxation and revise this bill.

A carpet which sells for $6 a yard at the manufacturer's I will guarantee you can not buy for less than $12 at the department store, and this touches only those excessively high-priced articles.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I might have some sympathy with this proposal if I were certain that the Senator's guaranty were correct. He says that a yard of carpet which costs $6 to manufacture can not be purchased for—how much?

Mr. McCUMBER. I say you would not get it for less than $12; sometimes a little less than $12, possibly; but the Senator well knows that in the case of all furniture the profit is 50 per cent.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator just said 100 per cent.

Mr. McCUMBER. No; it is cut in two. In other words, anything you sell for $50, manufacturer's price, you are supposed to sell for $100 at the retail price.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am not acquainted with any such rule.

Mr. McCUMBER. I am sufficiently familiar with these matters to know that that is the rule.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I would like to have that demonstrated by competent testimony. The Senator can not persuade me that everything has jumped 100 per cent in value between the manufacturer and the retailer.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think the Senator from Utah possibly could give some information upon that which would be of interest to the Senator.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Of course, there are certain instances; but if that is the fact, why not tax them all? On what theory are these picked out? Is there an element of viciousness in them? Is there an element of guilt attached to them?

Mr. McCUMBER. I can tell the Senator, if he will allow me, on what theory they were picked out. They were articles that were in the old law. We cut out all we thought we could and yet obtain the necessary revenue. We retained the tax on articles of this character, which were regarded as luxuries. I say that you can count on the fact that when any articles that are sold at wholesale for any of the prices mentioned are sold at retail they are sold all the way from twice the manufacturer's price up to five times the manufacturer's price.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator has referred to these things as luxuries. Does the Senator contend that a $35 trunk is a luxury?

Mr. McCUMBER. If the trunk costs $35 at the manufacturer's, it will cost not less than $75 to $100 at the retailer's.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is an assumption.

Mr. McCUMBER. Then it becomes more or less of a luxury.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Then why not tax it at the retail price? We are moving on assumptions here. The Senator says that a $35 trunk, manufacturer's price, is a $100 trunk retail price.

Mr. McCUMBER. I said from $75 to $100.

Mr. WADSWORTH. From $75 to $100, the Senator said. Why not tax it at the retail price?

Mr. McCUMBER. Because it is not a tax upon the retailer; it is a tax that is to be paid by the manufacturer when it is sold for those prices.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Who pays it eventually?

Mr. McCUMBER. The person who can afford to buy a $12 per yard carpet will pay it, if it is a carpet; the person who can afford to buy a $75 or $100 trunk undoubtedly will pay it, if it is a trunk.

Mr. WADSWORTH. And the woman who may try to buy a $2 fan will pay 5 per cent of $1?

Mr. McCUMBER. If it is the manufacturer's price, I should say that it will be a $5 fan when the woman buys it at the retail store.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is another assumption.

Mr. McCUMBER. Those are not assumptions entirely. I have been on the Finance Committee long enough to have examined into the difference between the manufacturer's price and the retailer's price of our stores, and know that it is not an assumption when I say that the price ranges all the way from double the manufacturer's price to five times the manufacturer's price, and I can cite many cases where it would be ten or twenty times the manufacturer's price.

Mr. WADSWORTH. This is a proposition to add another 5 per cent.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I want to know if I am mistaken about my memory as to the arguments of the Senator from North Dakota on imposing these luxury taxes when I was a member of the committee and he was also a member. If I recall correctly, he was very much opposed to them at that time, and gave some very excellent arguments why they should not be imposed.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think the Senator, perhaps, is referring to the question of clothing. I was opposed to putting a tax upon the clothing which the American people wear. I think this is an entirely different proposition.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, as I have endeavored to say several times—though perhaps this is only the second time I have discussed it with any emphasis—I can not understand upon what theory these things are picked out for taxation, to be included in a law which is supposed to represent a permanent revision of the tax laws of the United States. The Senator says they are picked out because they are luxuries which, when they reach the retail store, command high prices, in some instances 100 per cent over and above the manufacturer's price. Are these the only things which are in that category? If they are not the only things, why are not the other things put in?

Certainly the Senator can not contend that they are the only things. May I ask the Senator what is done with the tax on silk stockings? It is taken off, is it not?

Mr. McCUMBER. I have stated to the Senator that, as far as I am concerned, I am not willing to tax silk stockings or woolen stockings or anything that the men and women of this country have to wear and things which they need every day, and there is a vast difference between a silk stocking and a purse which costs $60.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The purse referred to here is only going to cost $5.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is the manufacturer's price. When you get it to the retailer it will be many times $5.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly the Senator would not say it would be $60?

Mr. McCUMBER. It might be.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am merely pleading for a sense of proportion, Mr. President. If we sat down to think over this proposition we could think of a great many other things which are not articles of clothing and which come under this criticism.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I call the attention of the Senator from New York to the committee's report to the Senate covering this particular section, in which they admit:

> Section 904 of the revenue act of 1918 imposed a tax of 10 per cent upon the selling price of specified articles selling above a fixed price. This section has been very difficult of administration and has placed a burden upon retailers disproportionate to the revenue collected.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Upon retailers.

Mr. EDGE. "Upon retailers" is their language, and they continue:

> The taxes imposed by this section are regarded as nuisance taxes, and your committee recommends their repeal as of January 1, 1922. It is recommended, however, that a tax be imposed upon the manufacturer equivalent to 5 per cent of so much of the amount paid for any of the following articles as is in excess of the price hereinafter specified as to each such article.

Simply to further edify those who were selected with the reduced tax of 5 per cent and those that were eliminated, I have looked up the present law, and they have retained these 7 articles and have taken up some 14 other articles, including, as the Senator from New York has remarked, silk stockings and hose, kimonos, waists, and various other articles of clothing.

The point I want to make is that the committee themselves admit that these taxes are difficult of collection. The amount received from them is disproportionate to the cost of collection, and in view of their own statement, it seems to me that some other method of raising the revenue which would be expected from this could very readily have been devised and would have been much more consistent than continuing this type of tax, which everybody admits, including the committee, is not a scientific tax.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator from New Jersey certainly would not give that as an argument against what the committee has done in making this change. That criticism was directed by the committee toward the collection of this sum from the retailer. That is the old law.

Mr. EDGE. I understand.

Mr. McCUMBER. So it was changed, to be simplified and lessened as a tax upon the manufacturer, so that when it passes the manufacturer's hands it is subject to this tax, and we do not need a thousand officers to be circulating around through the country getting the reports of the retailers.

Mr. EDGE. I admit that the method of collection will undoubtedly be simplified by putting it back to the point of production, you might say, the manufacturer; but I infer from this statement that the committee do believe that that type of nuisance taxes is an unfortunate type of taxes.

Mr. McCUMBER. I wish we could get rid of every one of them. We all heartily wish that, and if those who oppose this tax upon luxuries, and also who vote to take away the excess-profits tax, and a great many other taxes, will show us where we can make up this difference I certainly will be glad to join them in finding something that is a more proper subject for taxation.

Mr. EDGE. The only answer, it seems to me, is that the only equitable way to treat this instead of picking out four or five articles would be to put the tax on all manufactured articles.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is true, and I know the Senator would vote for the Smoot amendment if he could have the opportunity.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator from North Dakota has laid a good deal of emphasis on the assumed fact, which at least he assumes—I doubt the accuracy of his calculation—that there is a tremendous spread between the manufacturer's price and the retailer's price, in some cases as much as 100 per cent. He can not, however, say that about the imported price, and this provision taxes the importer who sells. There is not 100 per cent difference there.

Mr. SMOOT. Between the retailer and the importer?

Mr. McCUMBER. That may be many hundred.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator from New York that in the hearings on this bill we had a beaded purse that was imported from Austria exhibited to the committee. That beaded purse was landed in this country for $2.87, with all expenses paid. I asked the man who was selling the goods what the retail price was and the answer was $20.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Is not that an exception?

Mr. SMOOT. It is an exception.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Do you build tax bills on such an example as that?

Mr. SMOOT. No; I am offering no excuse whatever. Probably as good an example of the difference between the tax collected from the retailer and the tax when imposed upon the wholesaler is the case of the imposition of a tax on proprietary medicines.

In framing the act of 1917 the Finance Committee decided to impose a tax of 2 per cent on the manufacturers of proprietary medicines. That was in force until the act of 1918 went into effect. When the act of 1918 was under consideration we decided that we would have to raise more money on proprietary medicines and that we would raise the rate of taxation from 2 per cent on the manufacturer to 5 per cent on the retailer's price, thinking, of course, that that being the case, we would get 5 per cent upon whatever profits there were between the manufacturer's cost and the retailer's selling price. The result was that we did not collect as much money at 5 per cent on the retail price as we did at 2 per cent on the manufacturer's price. So it goes through all of the bill, and that is why I want to place one tax at one source, and that source where there are just as few people to collect from as possible, and at a source where we can know we will get the money.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have a good deal of sympathy with that contention, but I do not think the Senator from Utah will defend taxing six articles when there are probably a thousand and six that may be taxed likewise. What are you going to say to these people? I know, of course, that we taxed these and 14 others during the war. The patriotic taxpayer would stand for anything in war time, just as we in the Senate will stand for anything to raise money with which to whip the enemy; but the war is three years behind us and the people are looking to Congress to pass a revenue bill that will reflect a permanent policy and raise revenue for the support of the Government. We know the revenues must be very large, the aftermath of the war, but the enemy is no longer facing us; we are not in a desperate situation; we do not have to raise $10,000,000,000 in a year and a half with which to whip the Germans.

We have a well-understood problem to work out, so much interest on the national debt each year to pay off, and within certain reasonable limits we can all understand what it will cost to maintain the branches of the Government and take care of dependent soldiers. There ought to be a settled policy of taxation, and you can not defend this as a settled policy of taxation. When they come to ask you, "Why am I taxed and the man across the street not taxed," you can not answer them.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President——

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LENROOT. Does the Senator think that all these taxes are paid at the source?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Some are and some are not.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator does not, however, agree with those who say that a manufacturer's tax is carried on to the consumer?

Mr. WADSWORTH. That depends entirely on the circumstances. I think that in a majority of instances it will be.

Mr. LENROOT. I think so, too, but I do not say they will always be carried on to the consumer.

Mr. WADSWORTH. May I say to the Senator from Wisconsin that I do not think we can adopt and adhere to a rigid formula or rule in that question. When I was speaking earlier in the evening about the tax on perfumes, I said that I think the small manufacturer can not pass it on. I think the great big soap manufacturer, the maker of fancy perfumed soap, can pass on the tax on perfumes which he makes as a side line. The little people can not pass this tax on the way the big people can. They have not the organization, the selling agencies, and they do not deal in any other products.

Mr. LENROOT. That would be true of any manufacturer's tax.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am inclined to think so as a general matter of principle, especially in a falling market.

Mr. LENROOT. And on a rising market of course.

Mr. WADSWORTH. On a rising market they could all pass it on. In normal times I think they would about split even. In a falling market they could not pass anything on.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I wish to call the attention of the Senator from North Dakota to subdivision 1, page 204, line 24. That is a subdivision which provides for a tax on carpets of $4 per square yard and a tax in the case of rugs of $6 per square yard. I have had numerous communications indicating that that is unjust and gives the rugs a preference over the carpets. Does the Senator from North Dakota think it possible to make the rate on carpets $6 per square yard, the same as the rate on rugs?

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator understands, of course, there is quite a difference in the cost of the manufacture of carpets and rugs. In the rug are the pattern and the border to be taken into consideration. The pattern is not the same as in a straight piece of carpet. There is not a manufacturer of carpets in the world who will not admit at once that he can make his square yard of carpet for a great deal less money than he can make any kind of a similar quality of rug. I doubt whether there is any discrimination here as to value based on the actual cost per square yard.

Mr. CALDER. As between $4 and $6?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes. That is only a 50 per cent difference.

Mr. CALDER. The carpet manufacturers have protested to me that $4 on carpets and $6 on rugs is unjust to the carpet manufacturers.

Mr. SMOOT. If anything, that would be the case, I think.

Mr. CALDER. The Senator thinks it would be unjust?

Mr. SMOOT. It would be a little unjust, if anything, to the carpet manufacturers, because the rug does cost more to make per square yard.

Mr. CALDER. Does it cost 50 per cent more?

Mr. SMOOT. Many of them cost even more than that, and some of them not nearly as much. The common ordinary rug with a plain weave, with a pattern that would run clear across the rug without any change and a mere border upon one side, would perhaps not cost so much. Then in that case there is not a 50 per cent difference in the cost of the product. I should not think it would cost more than 20 per cent or perhaps 30 per cent more in that case. That is the reason why I say if there is any discrimination between the two it would be against the carpet manufacturer, taking into consideration the cheap rug manufacturer, but when it gets into the fancy rug and the costly rugs, then I think, of course, there would be no comparison.

Mr. CALDER. The difference is so slight I do not like to offer an amendment that would not be agreed to. Would the Senator from North Dakota object to an amendment changing $4 on carpets to $6?

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator will remember, we have already tried to equalize that by increasing the price from $3.60, at which the House placed it, to $4, and the 40 cents per square yard was added for the very purpose and for the reason now assigned by the Senator from New York.

Mr. CALDER. The Senator from Utah undoubtedly knows more about this business than I do, but the carpet manufacturers in New York have protested to me on the subject and feel that an injustice has been done them in making the rug $6 and the carpet $4. For that reason I suggested the idea of changing the $4 to $6 on carpets.

Mr. SMOOT. That would be unjust.

Mr. CALDER. Would $5 on the carpets be unjust?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I think $5 would. I thought that $4 would equalize it, taking the whole line of rugs, and that is about the only way we can do it. That is the reason why we raised it from $3.60 to $4.

Mr. WADSWORTH. What is the distinction between a rug and a carpet?

Mr. SMOOT. The rug is really a carpet woven a certain length and certain width with a border all around the rug. The borders are quite expensive many times because of the fact that the loom has to have entirely different manipulation and the headings are handled in an entirely different way than where you are weaving a carpet right straight along. The headgear must be different.

In the manufacture of a carpet it is simply one straight weave; you never have to change anything at all. The filling goes on right through, not 1 yard or 2 yards or 3 yards or 4 yards, as is the case with a rug, but for fifty or a hundred or a thousand yards it is just the same. It is the same filling with no change. You can weave more yards of it, and it does not cost as much to produce as the same yardage in a rug or a rug of the same number of yards.

Mr. CALDER. I am not going to press the amendment unless the Senator from North Dakota is entirely agreeable to it, but I am anxious to do something. It seems to me an unjust difference.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the Senator from North Dakota would agree to it that we should raise the $4 to $4.50, and I am quite sure that would be as high as we could possibly go to equalize the difference in cost. I do not think we should go any higher than that.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I am not an expert upon the subject of the difference between the rug and the carpet. Of course, many carpets are made into rugs by sewing the carpets together and putting a border around them. It may be that $4.50 to $6 would make a better ratio than $4 to $6. If the Senator from Utah, who has had considerable experience along this line, thinks that is a better arrangement, I have no objection to it.

While I am on my feet I wish to correct what seems to be a misapprehension, not only in the Senate but among the American people generally, as to the vast difference between a manufacturer's price and a retailer's price of articles. The Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] was not prepared to accept my statement of the difference between the wholesale price or the manufacturer's price of general merchandise and what those same articles of merchandise are sold for in a retail store.

A few years ago that matter was investigated, either by the Tariff Commission or by a subcommittee of the Ways and Means Committee, as to many articles on which a tariff was levied. I think I perhaps have the hearings in my office. They covered almost everything upon which we levied a tariff, and as a matter of fact the average was not simply 100 per cent above the manufacturer's price at the retail stores, and I do not care whether it consisted of porcelain or whether it consisted of articles of furniture or of anything else that was either imported or manufactured in the United States, but the average was several hundred per cent difference between the manufacturer's and the retailer's price.

The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], in discussing that matter, presented these facts to the Senate, and I know that he will pardon me if I recall his argument. I looked it up and found that his argument applied not only to the things that he mentioned, but to almost all the things that we buy. The Senator stated at that time that he bought a couple of little stocking caps for his children. I think he said he paid $4.50 for them. This was before the war and before the profiteer as we now understand him got in his deadly work. He then investigated who was the manufacturer of those articles and traced them back and found that the manufacturer's selling price of the $4.50 stocking caps which he purchased was 89 cents, as I now remember. That is but a fair sample of the difference between the ordinary manufacturer's selling price and the ordinary price in our stores.

I am not complaining of the retailer at all because these articles first pass through several hands and there are the overhead charges and so forth, but there is a vast difference. That is the reason why, when you get this article, the manufacturer's sale price of a carpet is $4 a yard and the rug $6. The chances are that it is increased at least 100 per cent before it is sold in the furniture store. In articles like ladies' handbags and things of that character they have increased several hundred per cent before they are sold.

Mr. CALDER. Will the Senator yield right there?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. CALDER. The Senator speaks of ladies' handbags. Those are now taxed in the bill presented before us. Several manufacturers of those bags came to Washington and conferred with me about it. They submitted evidence to me that those handbags, where the manufacturer's price was $5, sold from $9 to $11 in the retail store. They took me to a store in the city of Washington where the manufacturer showed me a bag that he sold to this dealer here for $4, and it was being retailed for $7.

Mr. McCUMBER. But many of them sell for very much more than that. Let me give the Senator another example.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him there?

Mr. McCUMBER. I will.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the Senator think that a $9 bag should be taxed?

Mr. McCUMBER. I think if we are looking closely for something on which to raise revenue, even a $9 bag might be taxed a little 5 per cent, if it is necessary for the support of the Government.

Now, let me give the Senator another illustration.

A short time ago there appeared before the Finance Committee a manufacturer of razors. He brought before our committee a number of razors that were manufactured in Germany. We obtained the German price and found it was 59 cents a dozen. They were not safety razors, but the ordinary old-fashioned razors. Each one of those razors in its case was marked $3; the razors which cost but 59 cents a dozen in Germany, and, after the tariff tax had been paid, cost 81 cents a dozen to land in the United States, and which could be sold for $1 a dozen to the jobber, were marked $3 apiece, or $36 a dozen, which was the regular retail price. If the Senator will investigate the report which was made by the committee some years ago, before the World War and before these exorbitant prices obtained, he will find, just as I have said, that the price of the article in the hands of the retailer is generally 100 to 500 per cent above the manufacturer's price.

If the Senator will show where we can get $4,000,000 or $5,000,000 of revenue somewhere else in any better way, we might be better able to consider his proposal. The Senator says that the turnover tax which is advocated by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] would afford a better way, and I am not prepared to say that he is not right; but we are constructing this bill up to the present time along a different line. If when we come to the amendment of the Senator from Utah it shall be adopted, then, of course, we can dispose of and dispense with all these so-called nuisance taxes, but until we are prepared to do that, I think we ought to adopt this amendment as it now stands.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, on page 204, line 25, before the words "per square yard," I move to strike out "$4" and to insert "$4.50."

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, so far as I am able to do so, I will accept the amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon the amendment to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I am in receipt of a letter from an electrical-fixture manufacturing concern calling my attention to portable lighting fixtures. The manufacturer points out that a great many houses are now being constructed without any fixtures at all being built into the house, and says:

> During the last year an insistent demand has been created for attaching all electric-lighting fixtures to ceilings and side walls by portable means, so that they can be removed or installed by the customer owning the fixtures without calling on a wireman. Elaborate methods for performing this function have been developed and the equipment is to be manufactured by 12 or more manufacturers. This means that within the course of the next five years all fixtures for factory, household, and public-building purposes will become portable fixtures, so that a person having desirable fixtures can when removing to a new locality take the fixtures with him. They can also, if they so desire, remove the side wall fixtures and plug in a fan motor, a sewing machine, or any other portable device, placing the fixture back in position when evening comes for illuminating purposes. It also means that fixtures can be changed occasionally if one becomes tired of the design.

Mr. McCUMBER. The electric lighting fixtures referred to in the letter which the Senator from New York has just read certainly are luxuries, and I think that they are luxuries that can perhaps stand a little tax, when we remember that the tax is not on what the fixtures sell for to the consumer, but is a manufacturer's tax, the consumer's price being probably three times as much as that of the manufacturer.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I have occasion frequently to consider matters in connection with the construction of dwelling houses and apartments, such construction work being along the line of my business. I know that there are now being built a great many houses with electric plugs and base plugs and sidewall plugs; in fact, when I was in the city of New York the other day I observed as to some houses which I myself am building in one or two of the rooms that plan has been started as an experiment to ascertain how it will work out.

I am going to offer an amendment to the provision found in lines 7 and 8 on page 205 to the effect that where the fixtures are used in lieu of regular lighting fixtures they shall not be taxable under the provision. I send the amendment to the Secretary's desk and ask that it may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New York to the amendment of the committee will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 205, line 7, after the word "fixtures" and before the comma it is proposed to insert in parentheses the words "other than those designed to take the place of permanent lighting fixtures."

Mr. CALDER. The amendment is designed to provide that where such fixtures as are used in lieu of permanent lighting fixtures they shall not be taxed.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I simply wish to say that the Senator might as well strike out the whole provision if we insert the amendment proposed by him.

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly; because every portable lamp is supposed to take the place of a fixture. Therefore I think if the Senator from New York really wants to have the bill read according to what he suggests he should move to strike out the portable lighting feature provision.

Mr. CALDER. If I had my way, I would strike it out; but I do not intend to make a motion of that character. It is a fact that a great many houses are being constructed to-day without having any fixtures at all in some rooms, but with wall plugs and base plugs for attachments being provided in their place.

Mr. SMOOT. May I say that most of the houses now being constructed are being built after that fashion? I do not see that there is any reason for having them built in any other way. One may have a portable lamp and move it to any room he wishes and also use the same electric plug or outlet for running sewing machines, as the Senator has said, or running a carpet sweeper or any other electric device.

Mr. CALDER. No; there are many electric fixtures which would be taxed under the paragraph, such as the elaborate lamps we see in the libraries and reception rooms of the homes of the well to do, and desk lamps and other articles of a similar character which could easily be taxed. The adoption of the amendment which I have offered would not, in my opinion, reduce by very much the revenue which would otherwise be derived by the provision, probably not more than a quarter, I ask for a vote on the amendment.

Several SENATORS. Vote!

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from New York.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment passed over will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 205 it is proposed to strike out lines 9, 10, and 11, as follows:

SEC. 812. The first paragraph of section 905 of the revenue act of 1918 is amended to read as follows:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment passed over was, on page 205, line 12, before the word "That," to insert "Section 905. (a)."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 205, line 12, to strike out "April 1, 1919," and to insert "January 1, 1922."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment passed over was, on page 205, line 14, after the word "by," to strike out "subdivision (e) of"; in the same line, after the word "section," strike out "600" and insert "905"; and in line 15, after the word "of," to strike out "1917" and insert "1918."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment passed over was, at the top of page 206, to insert a new paragraph, as follows:

(b) Every person selling any of the articles enumerated in this section shall make returns under oath in duplicate (monthly or quarterly as the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may prescribe) and pay the taxes imposed in respect to such articles by this section to the collector for the district in which is located the principal place of business. Such returns shall contain such information and be made at such times and in such manner as the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may by regulations prescribe.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment passed over was, on page 206, after line 11, to insert:

(c) The tax shall, without assessment by the commissioner or notice from the collector, be due and payable to the collector at the time so fixed for filing the return. If the tax is not paid when due, there shall be added as part of the tax a penalty of 5 per cent, together with interest at the rate of 1 per cent for each full month from the time when the tax became due.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment passed over was, on page 206, after line 19, to insert:

SEC. 906. That from and after January 1, 1922, any person engaged in the business of leasing or licensing for exhibition positive motion-picture films containing pictures ready for projection shall pay monthly an excise tax in respect to carrying on such business equal to 5 per cent of the total rentals earned from each such lease or license during the preceding month. If a person owning such a film exhibits it for profit he shall pay a tax equivalent to 5 per cent of the fair rental or license value of such film at the time and place where and for the period during which exhibited. The tax imposed by this section shall be in lieu of the tax imposed by section 906 of the revenue act of 1918.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am directed by the committee to ask that that amendment be rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, before the amendment is voted upon I should be glad to have the Senator from Utah tell us why it is proposed to disagree to the amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will tell the Senator. In this bill the owners of moving-picture theaters are taxed, first, upon their seating capacity. They pay a tax not merely upon the seats that are occupied but upon every seat in their houses.

In the next place, they are taxed all admissions 10 per cent. There has also been a tax upon the films, which is passed on to the man who runs the moving-picture theater. As the films are leased by the great corporations that produce and make them, it is possible for the lessors to pass on the tax; and so every moving-picture man in the United States who shows one of those films pays 5 per cent. It seemed to the committee that with two special taxes and a corporation tax and then an income tax that it was overdoing the thing to impose a further tax. These five different taxes were placed upon this industry, of course, during the war, when we thought that they afforded a splendid way of raising money to be collected monthly, and there was no special objection; but they have come to us and notified the committee that under the taxes imposed it was next to impossible for them to live, and to-day we find that about one-third of the moving-picture houses of the country, particularly the small ones, are closed up.

Remember, Senators, the conditions in the remainder of the country are not the same as they are in the District of Columbia. This is the seat of Government; the employees are paid here, whether or not there are hard times everywhere else in the country; in fact, the harder times are in the United States at large the better it is for the Government employees in the District of Columbia. We find that of the little moving-picture houses that have been located in small towns all over the United States, many of them bearing four and five different taxes, one-third of them have been closed up. I repeat, that I do not want Senators to consider the conditions existing in the District of Columbia as typical of the conditions affecting the moving-picture houses in the United States at large.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. McCUMBER. I agree with the Senator that possibly this may work a hardship on the little picture houses in the little country towns, but I wish there were some way in which we could tax the manufacturers of these films and tax these moving-picture concerns that can afford to pay hundreds of thousands of dollars of salary to any ignoramus who has the ability to make faces or wobble his eyes, or to pay a hundred or two hundred thousand dollars of salary to any ignorant girl who can make goo-goo eyes for a picture, and get something out of those concerns. I try not to be a crank, and I possibly am as liberal as most people, and I can see many educational benefits to be derived from these moving pictures; but I can also see the wicked side of it, the depraved side of it, and much of this depravity comes from the excessive prices that are paid to actors and actresses who are showing in our great cities. The public are paying those enormous salaries, and some one is getting enormous sums of money. If this provision can not reach them, I wish the Senator could devise some means by which the Government can get some compensation out of these companies that produce the Arbuckles and that class of depraved people by paying enormous wages to them. Certainly if we have to suffer as a Nation the disadvantages arising from the shows that are produced in the country we ought to get some little compensatory advantage from them.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, no one could have expressed my thoughts better than the Senator from North Dakota has just expressed them. I have not the least sympathy with the producer of the film—none whatever. I have not the least sympathy with the unheard-of, unjustifiable wage that is paid these moving-picture stars. The trouble is that when they pay these people the man who uses the film has to pay a 5 per cent rental upon all the charges made for producing the film, and the higher the charge the more he pays.

If I knew how I could get at them, if I knew how to write some law that would compel them to pay this tax, and they could not put it on the people, it would not be five minutes before I would offer such an amendment to this bill; but I am speaking now for the industry—not in the city of New York, not in the District of Columbia—I am speaking for the great number of these moving-picture shows that are found out in the little towns, where they constitute about the only recreation and pleasure that the people have.

Mr. CALDER. Where the admission is 10 cents.

Mr. SMOOT. Where the admission is 10 cents. There is a splendid provision put in here by the Senator from Wisconsin exempting them from any form of taxation on admission, and that ought to be done; but what this means is that they load it on the man who shows the film. The man that makes the film and pays these wages does not pay one cent of it. Another thing: In the case of the little fellow in the country towns and small cities of the United States, Saturday nights are about the only nights the people can go to see these picture shows, and he has to have a number of seats in the room to take care of the Saturday night attendance. The other five or six nights of the week they are not filled; but under this bill we tax him for the number of seats there are in the building.

Mr. REED. The seats as well as the admission?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; not only the seats but admission besides. I was just saying that we have five taxes upon this industry, and this is simply a proposal to remove the one tax of 5 per cent upon the films made by the people referred to by the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. REED. Would it not be better, just applying this to the Senator's argument, to take the tax off of the seats, for instance, and reduce the tax on the admission? Then the proprietor of this theater that is having a hard struggle would get the benefit, or the customer would get the benefit. This proposes a tax, as I understand, upon the large producing concerns.

Mr. SMOOT. It is a lease of 5 per cent, paid by the exhibitor of the film. Every time the producer gives permission to show that film, before ever it is given to a moving-picture man to show it, he has to sign a contract, and in that contract he agrees to pay this 5 per cent lease upon the film. It is 5 per cent upon the cost of the film, and not only upon the cost of the film but the profit that the man wants to make upon it.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. The producer has passed it on to the exhibitor.

Mr. SMOOT. He always does in his contract. This produces $5,600,000 revenue. The majority—that is, a majority of the majority of the Finance Committee—in considering this thing were unanimous that this part of it ought to be taken out, and that is what they are asking; and I do not believe there is a Senator who, if he knew the situation, would hesitate a minute to do it.

I therefore ask that the amendment known as section 906 be rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the next amendment passed over.

The READING CLERK. The next amendment passed over is, on page 207, to strike out lines 9 and 10, in the following words:

SEC. 813. Section 907 of the revenue act of 1918 is repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The READING CLERK. After line 10 it is proposed to insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. 907. (a) That on and after January 1, 1922, there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid the following taxes:

(1) A tax of 10 per cent of the amount paid by any transient to the proprietor of any hotel (1) for a room, or room and bath or bathing facilities, if the charges for such room, or room and bathing facilities, are more than $5 per day for one person or more than $8 per day for more than one person, and (2) for two or more rooms if the average charge per room is more than $5 per day for one person or more than $8 per day for more than one person; and

(2) A tax of 10 per cent of the customary charges for a room or rooms, or room or rooms and bath or bathing facilities, where accommodations are furnished a transient on the American plan and the customary charges for such room, or rooms and bath or bathing facilities, or substantially similar rooms, when furnished on the European plan, are more than $5 per day for one person or more than $8 per day for more than one person.

(b) As used in this section: (1) The term "hotel" includes any building which is held out to the public as a place where sleeping accommodations are furnished by the day. (2) The term "transient" includes any guest at a hotel except one who is furnished accommodations for a continuous period of one month or more.

(c) The taxes imposed by this section shall be paid by the person making such charges. No separate billing or statement of the amount of such taxes shall be presented to the person paying for such accommodations. Whoever, in connection with the hiring, furnishing, or payment for any hotel room or rooms, makes any statement, written or oral, ascribing a particular part of the charge therefor to the taxes imposed by this section, knowing that such statement is false or that the tax is not so great as the portion of such charge so ascribed to such tax shall be subject to a penalty of not more than $1,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LADD in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I understood, in looking over this pamphlet entitled "Proposed amendments to H. R. 8245," that the Committee on Finance, or a majority of the committee, propose to offer an amendment to strike out section 907, which has just been read by the Secretary. If the committee have no suggestions to make regarding it, I simply want to say a word.

It appeals to me that the section proposed is a very unscientific one, and I do not think it would possibly reach the people, perhaps, that the committee in suggesting the amendment hoped to reach. In my judgment, it can have but one effect, and that is to raise the price of rooms in hotels to the traveling public. There could not be anything more direct or more easy to accomplish than that.

If a hotel charging $5 per day for one person, or $8 a day for two persons, is taxed 10 per cent, the most natural thing for the hotel proprietor to do, I assume, would be to add another dollar to the charge for his $5 room and make it $6, and add another dollar, perhaps, to the charge for his $8 double room and make it $9, with the result that he would collect a dollar, pay the Government 60 cents, and have 40 cents in addition to his usual $5 or $8.

Beyond all that it seems to me that the provision is an unusual one. It even goes beyond the provisions we have been discussing during the afternoon, where prices above a certain amount are taxed a certain sum. This amendment provides that the entire sum shall be taxed—not the excess above a certain amount at all, but if the price of the room charged for is $5, you tax the entire $5. It appeals to me as a tax directly increasing the cost of living. I could discuss it at length, if necessary, but I understand that the majority of the committee has decided not to press the amendment, so I shall not take the time of the Senate unless it becomes necessary to do so.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, the Senator understands that this is one of the "bloc" amendments.

Mr. EDGE. Yes; I so understand.

Mr. McCUMBER. Personally, I shall vote in favor of the committee amendment. I do not think it is proper to say that this is proposed by the committee.

Mr. EDGE. I think I used the term "a majority."

Mr. McCUMBER. It is a result of the compromise that has been made by certain Senators with the bloc, and they have agreed upon some propositions which I personally can not swallow.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, as I understand, the question arises on agreeing to the committee amendment, and that will be the question—whether the committee amendment will be agreed to or not.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is it.

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not agree with the committee as to this amendment. I do not believe it will accomplish any purpose except to increase the charges on patrons of hotels. The very good excuse will be given by every hotel proprietor that he is taxed so much by the Government, and must add that to the bill. The charges are certainly high enough now, and I do not think we ought to encourage making them any higher.

Mr. FERNALD. Mr. President, I want to say a word on this amendment. The suggestion has been made that it might affect some of the higher priced rooms. It doubtless would; but I think there will be a higher price charge for the medium-priced rooms, enough to make that up. It is simply a matter of bookkeeping by the management of a hotel, and I am inclined to think that the cost to the hotel patrons would be more than the tax would be. While my heart does not bleed very much for the hotel people who charge high prices for rooms, I am inclined to think that the general public will pay more by the addition of that amount to the lower priced rooms, bringing up the general average of the expense of the hotel by just the amount proposed.

Mr. McCUMBER. The only trouble I see with the amendment is that, instead of making it 10 per cent on the entire amount, it should be 100 per cent of the excess above a certain amount, and then, if they desire to charge for a room for the use of it for one week a sum that would pay for all the furniture there was in it, at least the Government would get something of that steal, and in order to remedy it correctly the bill should increase the amount above the prices which are charged, so that it will never be profitable to charge any more.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, several remarks which have been made this afternoon shed light into my mind, at least, with reference to the recommendations which have been made here. I have had occasion several times to refer to the agricultural bloc as having been traded with. I am inclined to think that I have been unjust to the agricultural bloc, properly speaking. I understand that was a group who were really interested in agricultural estates, was composed of Democrats and Republicans, and who met for the purpose of considering legislation which would be of interest to their particular constituents.

I understand that after that some Senators who happened also to belong to the agricultural bloc had a meeting, and there was also a meeting of the majority of the majority of the Finance Committee, and some sort of an arrangement was made between the majority of the majority of the Finance Committee and this new group that had been formed, which had some of the men in it who happened to belong to the agricultural bloc, and a sort of hard-and-fast agreement was made that if certain concessions were made to that small group they would then vote with the majority of the majority of the committee on its recommendations.

So we have been voting here for days on what have been called committee amendments, when, in fact, they have been amendments agreed upon between the majority of the majority and a minority composed partly of members of the agricultural bloc and perhaps some others.

I make that statement so that there will be no criticism of the agricultural bloc. I think it is to be exonerated as a group from having made this deal. I think the ambitions of certain Senators to shine a little bit, to have their amendments adopted, had something to do with the effectiveness of that arrangement.

Now, a few words with regard to this amendment. It is proposed to levy a tax of 10 per cent on all rooms where the price for a single room for a night's lodging is $5 or more, and, where two people occupy the room, $8 or more. The very purpose of levying the tax in that way is this, that if a man undertakes to add a tax to the bill of his guests he must add a tax of not only the 10 per cent upon the excess he charges over $5 but he shall add a tax which is 10 per cent on the entire bill, and that will make a very substantial increase, so that a room which would be rented at $6 would have to pay a 60-cent tax, and, if added on, the landlord would have to charge his guest substantially $7. The minute a landlord begins to charge that kind of prices in a hotel which has been a $5 hotel he will find that at least some of his customers will find other places in which to lodge and he will be inclined to take his $5 guest rather than lose him altogether. It may be true that the tax should be so high as to absolutely prevent these charges, but that is employing the tax for a different purpose than for revenue, and, as far as I am concerned, I thought it wise to try this tax as it is.

Let us consider for a minute what the hotel situation is. Only a few years ago a man could go to New York City and get a room in a hotel for $3.50 or $4 a day, which he is compelled to-day to pay from $7 to $8 or $9 for. The singular thing is that as soon as a custom or a price is established in New York City it seems to be copied in nearly every city of the United States. Then every little country hotel will copy the rates of the city that is in its vicinity. The result is that as you travel over this country to-day, in automobiles or in trains, and stop at a little country hotel you are likely to be charged $5 or $6 for a room. I unhesitatingly say that in my judgment there has been no class of men who have as utterly disregarded the rights of the public and fair dealing as the hotels in this country, taken as a whole. There are exceptions, of course.

They have introduced also many modern things of late years. They have introduced the European tipping system, and the waiters in hotels get the principal part of their stipend to-day in tips from the people who pay four or five prices for everything they eat. They have located a girl or a boy at the door, and for the holding of your hat or laying it upon a shelf there is another tip exacted, for we might just as well call it an exaction; and that privilege is leased by the hotels to companies, and the money that the guests give to the girl or the boy goes into the coffers of the company having the privilege to prey upon the guests of the hotel.

In practically all hotels, if you pick up a telephone, you pay 10 cents for the privilege of talking to somebody outside the hotel, although the amount which the hotel pays, as I understand, is only one-half, or less than one-half, of the amount exacted from the guest; and if a man is in a hotel, and has business to transact with friends, his telephone bill can easily reach $2 or $3 before the day is over.

They have extended this so that other accommodations which have always been secured free of charge can now only be obtained by dropping nickels or dimes into slot machines, and they hold their conventions regularly and discuss how they can raise the prices upon their guests. I attended a hotel convention one time in which I heard a gentleman deliver to a very interested audience of hotel men a dissertation on how they could make more money by charging for the bread and butter in addition to the meal, and that is a charge which is made to-day in many hotels of the United States.

In many hotels they are now inaugurating the system of charging you for your seat at the table where you are to be robbed. Only recently I happened to be driving across the country and stopped at a wayside hotel, and when I paid my bill I paid 50 cents per head for the privilege of sitting down and paying seven prices for what I ate. The whole dinner was not worth more than 50 cents, but it cost me about $3 a plate.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That was the cover charge.

Mr. REED. I am speaking of the cover charge, or the seat charge. Mr. President, I have no antipathy toward hotels. I have no harsh word to utter in regard to a hotel man that I would not utter in regard to anybody else; but the truth of the matter is that hotels are subject to public regulation, both as to the manner of treatment of the guests and as to the prices charged, and if the hotels of this country do not soon learn that there is some limit to the patience of the public they will find themselves confronted by propositions to regulate them the same as we have regulated the railroads.

Mr. President, at the last national convention held in the city of Chicago I know one gentleman whose sons occupied an ordinary room worth, according to ordinary hotel charges, about $7 a day, and those charges very high. They charged that man's two boys $50 a day for occupying that room.

We know that the reason we did not have a great inaugural ceremony here in the city of Washington, the chief reason, the determining reason in the minds of many Senators which led them to refuse to make a large appropriation, was the fact that the hotels of the city of Washington had agreed that no man could rent a room during the week of the inauguration unless he rented it for the entire week, and, if I recollect right, the price was $250 per room.

The hotel business has become so profitable that it is being incorporated in the form of chains of hotels. In my own city the two principal hotels have been brought under one management, and every time there has been a proposition for a new hotel it has been met with a threat of competition of the old management, and the old management have gone to the extent of acquiring some of the most desirable property for hotel purposes in order to forfend against any possible competition. I say that in all kindness, for the hotel treats me very well. I live in one of those hotels, and it is my home when I am back where I love to be, in my own State.

Chains of hotels are being organized all over the country. Frequently it happens that in a city all the hotels of good class are under one control. Fabulous fortunes have been made out of the hotel business in the last few years. I know of an instance related to me the other day of a gentleman in a New York hotel with two other men who sent downstairs for a pitcher of ice, and they received a bill of 50 cents for that pitcher of ice.

Everybody, of course, has read the Dodge Club, and, if he will remember, the American tourists in Europe found the rates at the hotels exceedingly low, so low that they were delighted, and then they found that they were being charged for a candle a fabulous sum, for water to wash their hands a fabulous sum, for sheets on their beds another sum, and so on until when they evacuated the hotel in the morning they had been despoiled of a large part of their wealth. That system is being introduced substantially in the hotels of America, and is being brought to the point of a fine art.

Mr. President, I should like to see this tax tried. According to the estimate that was made, a rough and offhand estimate at the time the bill was before the committee, it would bring a large sum of money into the Treasury. If the hotels proceed to add this onto the patron's bill and increase his bill, there is a penalty if they make any misrepresentation to their customers. If they claim that they raise the rates because of the tax and misrepresent the tax, there is a penalty. What is the limit to-day to their charges? It is simply the ability to extort money from their customers. There is no question of conscience about it. There is no question of value or worth about it. It is merely "how much can we get from the public and keep our trade."

I believe this tax will have a tendency to make more $5 rooms in the country or rooms less than $5. I believe that it will give to the Government a large revenue from a source from which it gets now no revenue except the ordinary taxes, and that it is time to inaugurate the system.

I know the hotels got very much wakened up and appealed to everybody. They wrote their Congressmen, and they wrote their Senators, and they also telegraphed them. The hotel publications printed abusive articles and also proceeded to tell how poor the hotels were. I know a little about the inside of the hotel business, and I know that fabulous fortunes have been made out of them, and recently. Staggering profits are made. You can go down to one of these hotels and get a lamb chop, for which they paid the packinghouse 5 cents or 10 cents at the outside, but about 5, I think, and in some of them you are charged 50 or 60 cents for that chop. You can get a little bit of head lettuce with 5 cents worth of dope to put on it, and you pay 50 or 60 cents for that. The gardener got about 3 cents for his lettuce.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. DIAL. If they do not reduce the rates, would it not be a good scheme for the public to boycott them all they can?

Mr. REED. The trouble is that the public are at their mercy and always have been. The way hotels came to be under the control of the law and peculiar rules to be adopted for their government grew out of the very fact that the public was at their mercy. The public inn in England became so bad at one time—and this is, of course, no reflection on the present hotel man, but I am simply speaking of the origin of the law—and people were robbed so frequently in those hotels that it was declared to be the law that if a man lost his goods in a hotel the hotel proprietor was liable. That is the common law to-day, so that you see in nearly every State they have passed a statute providing that if a hotel posts a sign that it has a safe in which to place your valuables, that shall exculpate them from liability if the goods are lost in your room.

But this rule and other rules of law came into existence because the public were forced to patronize the hotels. The hotel is a public institution; it is a public house. It is just as much a public institution as a railroad or a telegraph or a telephone. It is obliged by law to receive all guests it can accommodate, provided the guest comes in a proper and decent way for his accommodations.

Mr. President, I have no tirade to make against hotels. There are many splendid gentlemen in the business, but the truth about them is that they have been charging conscienceless prices and pursuing conscienceless practices. I think there is no business in the United States that could better afford to pay a license tax, provided it charges more than $5 a room, than the hotel business. We tax the theaters, we tax the moving pictures four or five times, and that is all right. Nobody has to go to the theater, and nobody is obliged to go to the moving pictures. People who go pay their money out voluntarily. The man who goes to a hotel is compelled to go there, and he gives up his money involuntarily when he gives up these excessive prices.

Mr. President, these are my views on the question, and I submit them for the consideration of the Senate.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I wish to say just a word in reply. I have no desire to take the time of the Senate. Very much that the Senator from Missouri has stated is undoubtedly true in connection with individual experience in hotels. I can only repeat that it appeals to me as absolutely the wrong way to attempt to cure the situation. There can be but one result of the imposition of this type of tax and that is the increasing of hotel rates, and naturally, as a result, a higher cost of living. I could go into an argument in connection with that and take the time of the Senate, but I do not think it is necessary to do so.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit a question?

Mr. EDGE. Certainly.

Mr. KING. I will ask the Senator if he does not believe that there is a combination upon the part of the hotels of the United States to maintain these high prices and to accomplish the very evils of which the Senator from Missouri has spoken? I wish to say that I believe the Senator from Missouri has not overdrawn the picture at all. If there is such a combination, a combination for the purpose of fleecing and robbing the public, does not the Senator from New Jersey think the bill will accomplish some good; and if not, what is the Senator's remedy?

Mr. EDGE. I do not think it will. If the suggestion which the Senator from Utah makes is correct and there is a combination—I know nothing about it, whether there is or is not—I am quite sure this type of regulation will not accomplish the breaking up of any such combination.

I should like to call attention to another matter. The $5 rate to-day we must admit is perhaps equivalent to a $2.50 rate in hotels erected before the war. Everyone knows perfectly well that the construction of hotels recently put up cost 100 per cent more.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President——

Mr. EDGE. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. MOSES. I merely wish to call the attention of the Senator from Utah to the fact that if a combination such as he suggests exists, the remedy for it already exists. If an illegal combination of that sort exists it clearly can be dealt with under the law. It does not require a tax of this sort.

Mr. KING. May I say to the Senator from New Hampshire, if the Senator from New Jersey will pardon me, the Senator from New Hampshire certainly does not contend that because there may be a remedy which has not been invoked or applied by the Attorney General of the United States or by the attorney generals of the various States, that should be a reason why Congress should refuse to take other measures which it may deem proper for the purpose primarily of obtaining taxes, and secondly, for the purpose of banishing the evil?

Mr. MOSES. If the Senator from New Jersey will yield to me still further, I will say to the Senator from Utah that I do not, because the evil exists, think that is any reason why cumulative penalties should be piled up by the Congress of the United States.

Mr. EDGE. The penalties, I might say, will be absolutely absorbed by the traveling public. We have unanimously taken off the tax on transportation. The hotels are a necessary connecting link between railroad transportation and the traveling public and comprise, I think, the third or fourth largest industry in the country. The whole thought in taking off the tax on transportation, as I understand it, was to reduce naturally the cost of travel to the traveling public, and here we are going right back on that with a proposed tax that we do not get out of any one of these men and can not get out of them in that way. The bill did reach them by increasing the corporation tax from 10 to 15 per cent, because they are practically all corporations. We get them in every other method of income taxes, but we certainly will not reach them at all by simply levying a tax that they will pass on to the guests who stop at the hotels.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me further? The Senator does not defend the extortion of the hotels of the United States, I am sure. He has indicated that the plan suggested by the Senator from Missouri is not adequate to deal with this confessed evil, but what plan does the Senator suggest?

Mr. EDGE. I would be very glad to discuss a plan to reach the hotel proprietors, but we are now considering a proposed amendment to the tax bill imposing a tax on the charges for hotel rooms. I am absolutely positive that that bill will not reach the situation, but I think we should first dispose of the pending amendment.

Mr. KING. Then the Senator does not care to disclose any plans which he may have in his mind to deal with this evil?

Mr. EDGE. There might be the ordinary plan provided by some regulatory legislation, such as the Senator from Missouri suggested we now have over transportation companies and utilities companies of various kinds, but a tax will never control the exorbitant charges that may exist and which unquestionably do exist in some classes of hotels.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, the only way to prevent the charging of exorbitant rates at hotels and apartment houses in the city of Washington is through the District Rent Commission. The law is broad enough to enable the rent commission to regulate such charges in this city. That is one of the objects of the Ball Rent Act. At the time the law was framed I was a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia, and I have on at least two occasions since the passage of that act brought the attention of the rent commission to this great local abuse.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator permit an inquiry?

Mr. DIAL. Yes, sir.

Mr. KING. My recollection is that the bill which we recently passed does not deal at all with hotels as such or with business property.

Mr. DIAL. Possibly, then, the bill was changed, for the original bill did that.

Mr. KING. The bill was materially modified.

Mr. DIAL. It was the intention of the bill as originally framed to cover the rates in hotels; and if a provision to that effect is not in the law as it now stands we should amend it so as to make it broad enough to cover that matter. Exorbitant hotel charges afford one of the principal means for robbing people here. There are thousands of people who are kept away from Washington every month by reason of the extortionate rates which are charged in this city for the rent of rooms.

A short time ago I learned of an insignificant hotel in this city charging at the rate of $6 a day for a room for a short time. The excuse they gave for that was that on account of a convention which was going to be held here they could not make a long contract for the rental of a room. So I think it would be a good thing so to amend the law applying to the District of Columbia as to regulate rental charges of hotels here. Let us try the experiment on the hotels in the Capital of the Nation.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, for the purpose of the RECORD may I trespass upon the Senate's time for about a minute and a half? When this proposal was first made I asked the management of a hotel to have an accountant of the hotel inform me as to the comparative cost of labor and materials before 1914 and the cost to-day as affecting the operation of the hotel. I have received a statement from one of the largest hotels in New York City, prepared by the accountant of the hotel. I think it may be of interest to certain Senators at this time, and I will read it:

The largest single item of increase is in the cost of labor, the average wage per capita in 1914 having been $48.12—and at the present time $79.41, an increase of over 65 per cent and equal to $1.51 per room per day.

That is per month—

The loss of revenue due to the enactment of prohibition has cost the hotel approximately $1 per room per day in net profits.

Coal has increased from $3.43 per ton to $7.90 per ton, over 130 per cent, and gas used for fuel in the kitchen has increased 87½ per cent. These items taken together will add 18 cents to the cost of operating each room per day.

City taxes have increased from a rate of $1.78 in 1914 to $2.77 in 1921. This, with the increase in the amount of the assessed values, amounts to an increase of 30 cents per day per room.

Maintenance materials which are required to maintain and keep the hotel in repair have increased enormously. Building materials are still 50 per cent higher than in 1914. China, glass, and silver have increased 120 per cent; linen between 150 and 200 per cent. Taken together, these various items show an increase of 79 cents per room per day over the cost of 1914 operation. Prices of food have increased over 66 per cent and the attached statement will indicate important items priced as of June, 1914, June, 1921, and September, 1921. It will be noted that there has been an increase in the cost of food during the past three months.

Taking the increases in room operation alone, the following list is a résumé of the figures given in the above paragraphs:

	Per day per room.
Prohibition costs the average hotel	$1.00
Increased wages	1.51
Coal	.18
Taxes	.30
Maintenance items and repairs	.79
Miscellaneous	.25
Total	4.02

That gives some indication as to the reason for the increase in hotel rates.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I notice that the hotel only figures on its increased costs. Among other things it is stated that food has increased in cost. Has the Senator from New York the other side of the balance sheet to show how much the hotels have increased their prices on all the foods which they sell to their guests?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No. I have not.

Mr. REED. Certainly not.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am simply stating what this accountant certifies. I ask to have made a portion of my remarks a table showing the price paid for the principal foods purchased by this large hotel, as shown for June, 1914; June, 1921; and September 2, 1921; which indicates 66 per cent advance on food, as I have said, from June, 1914.

Mr. REED. Yes; and everybody who has eaten at one of these hotels knows that there has been an advance to him of probably 300 or 400 per cent on everything he has eaten. What kind of a balance sheet is it and what kind of an accountant is it who comes forward and states the increased costs, but does not tell anything about the increased revenue?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is but fair to say that I did not ask for the prices of the hotel; I merely asked for the increases in costs.

Mr. REED. I have seen exactly similar figures that were printed as a speech delivered by one of the leading hotel men, giving the increased costs, but not saying one word about the increased receipts.

The hotel charges $1 a day per room to prohibition; so they immediately add a loss which they claim comes from inability to sell liquor as an increased cost. It is a strange system of bookkeeping.

Mr. WADSWORTH. But it is a loss of revenue.

Mr. REED. Yes; it is a loss of their revenue. Then they do not tell us what their revenue is. I should like to see the balance sheet of that hotel company; I should like to see how much money they made net, particularly if they operate a big hotel in New York City.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, permission will be granted to the Senator from New York to insert in the RECORD the table referred to by him.

The table referred to is as follows:

Comparison of wholesale food prices, June, 1914 (before the war), June, 1921, and September, 1921.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri a question, if he will give me his attention for a moment. Under this proposed law what would there be to prevent a hotel keeper who has been charging $10 a day for a room from simply making the price of that room in the future $11 a day?

Mr. REED. That has already been discussed, but I am very glad to answer the Senator to the best of my ability. There is nothing to prevent it, except it is fair to assume that the hotel is in some kind of competition with other hotels that may not charge as high rates. If it charges $10 for a room to-day and adds $1, it will be charging $11, and the tendency will be to drive some of its trade away from it into other hotels that do not charge such excessive prices, and the result will be a loss to that hotel. Therefore, it is quite likely there will be some reduction.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, no matter how outrageous the prices may seem to be, nevertheless there seems to be no limit to their ability to secure customers.

Mr. REED. There is a limit to their outrageous prices. Undoubtedly they keep as near the limit as they can keep. Nobody has any idea that they only charge what they think is fair and what will make them a fair income. They now charge as much as they can get; but if we put this tax on I do not believe any of them can increase their rates except those hotels which cater to a class of people who will pay any sort of price, and even such a hotel would begin to lose its customers, I think.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, if I may say a word to the Senator, I think his statement might be exemplified very clearly by the experience many of us had at the last Republican national convention at Chicago. I wish the actuary or accountant referred to by the Senator from New York could have gone over the figures that were charged to the public by the Chicago hotels for one week there and ascertain how much money the Government could have obtained even by a 10 per cent tax, for $5 rooms were charged for at the rate of $25 a day and $10 rooms were charged for at the rate of $50 a day and continued for a week. I am rather inclined to think that there ought to be some way of getting them to divide up a little with the Government.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, if the Senator from Missouri will permit me further, I do not think the public is ever squeezed quite so hard but that it can be squeezed a little harder. I believe that the result of this proposed law will be that every first-class hotel in the United States would instantly add 10 per cent to the prices of its rooms and the public would be "stung."

Mr. REED. Mr. President, that may be possible, but I do not think it probable. Of course, we are always told when we propose to levy a tax that the tax will be carried on to the ultimate consumer; and yet it is a singular thing that the hotels are the first to protest. If they could pass the tax on to their customers, there would not be very much of a protest.

Mr. MYERS. I suggest to the Senator that, from his description of them, the hotel keepers are probably such a tender-hearted class of people that they feel they can pass the tax on but they are very loath to do so.

Mr. REED. I suspect that the Senator believes that. He is ironical as he usually is.

Mr. MYERS. I have been associating with my friend from Missouri for a long time.

Mr. REED. And the Senator from Montana has been gradually improving. [Laughter.]

Mr. MYERS. In the one respect which the Senator has named and in one only; but I hope that my association with him may improve me in a few more respects in the future and may improve him in very many more, if such a thing is possible.

Mr. REED. Well, Mr. President, the latter is not possible as to the Senator from Missouri, but I am sure it is so far as it affects the Senator from Montana, for there is ample room, and if he will continue to follow my example I am sure he will continue to progress.

We can decline to levy this tax if we want to, but it is a tax that ought to be levied, and I believe that if the hotel man finds that if he charges $6 for a room he will have to give 60 cents of it to the Government, and also finds himself in competition with another hotel that charges a little less rate, he is quite likely to forego the 40 cents in order to keep his customers. I believe such a tax will have a tendency to keep the hotel rates down; I am sure it will realize a very large revenue to the Government; and I am sure that this tax will fall upon a class of people who have been highly prosperous, for no class of people, so far as I know, have made more money through the war than the hotel keepers. The war sent hundreds of thousands and millions of people in the United States from their homes across the country. Some of them were boys on their way to camp; some of them returning; some of them were the relatives of those boys going to visit them, and all over the United States the hotel rates went up.

The pretense that they can justify an increase of a dollar a day because they are not permitted to sell booze does not appeal to me, sir. I do not believe that any hotel in America, with 400 or 500 rooms, has realized that much from the sale of booze taken on the average throughout the year. I believe that that has been a mere pretext for raising rates. I do not believe that the bar of a hotel has ever been so profitable an institution as that; and I have heard some hotel men say that it was a great blessing to them that the barrooms were removed, that they were rid of a class of people hanging around their corridors that they were better rid of, and that they escaped many unpleasant conditions because the saloon no longer existed within their own precincts; and I think that is true to-day. These concerns are getting rich. They are charging extortionate prices. The public is absolutely at their mercy, for the traveling public has no other place to go. We have a right to insist upon decent prices, and here is one method proposed.

Senators say it will not work; but the Senators who say it will not work keep locked within the temples of their mighty brains the particular scheme that would work. They do not enlighten us at all as to the great schemes and plans they have.

Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the question.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, if I felt that this amendment would afford any relief to the traveling public I would vote for it; but I am afraid that the remedy proposed will redound to the detriment of the traveler himself.

The Senator from New Jersey a moment ago referred to the efforts that were being made to reduce the cost of travel, and the Senate has done something in that behalf. One of the reasons for wiping out the tax on transportation was to cheapen travel, and we know the effect of it upon business. At the present time there is pending before the Interstate Commerce Committee a bill requiring the railroad companies to sell 5,000-mile tickets at 2½ cents a mile. The reason for it is to cheapen travel, so as to encourage men to go out and seek business.

The Senator from North Dakota a moment ago referred to the exorbitant charges of the hotels in Chicago. He did not need to go that far from the Capitol. We remember that at the time we were preparing for the inauguration the rates in the hotels here went skyward. The sky alone was the limit. No one can have any sympathy with men who do business in that kind of a way. Hotel men of that type are a detriment to any city.

But what is the situation here with this bill? It has been attempted by the draftsman, in paragraph (c), to compel the landlord to pay this tax. The first sentence requires that he shall pay it. Then it provides that "no separate billing or statement of the amount of such taxes shall be presented to the person paying for such accommodations." It does not prevent the proprietor from making a charge or taking that into consideration when he presents his bill.

Now we come to the penalty clause:

> Whoever in connection with the hiring, furnishing, or payment for any hotel room or rooms, makes any statement, written or oral, ascribing a particular part of the charge therefor to the taxes imposed by this section, knowing that such statement is false or that the tax is not so great as the portion of such charge so ascribed to such tax, shall be subject to a penalty of not more than $1,000.

But the penalty is not imposed against his increasing that charge by some mental operation or by some method of bookkeeping. If I am a landlord, and my regular rate is $5 a day for a room, and I know that the Congress of the United States has added a tax which is going to increase my expense, is there anything in this bill to prevent my revising my schedule of rates and, instead of charging $5 for a room, charging $6 for the room?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Not only that, but of necessity you would revise your rates so as to affect every room in your hotel, and it would be virtually a guaranty that the rates on every room in your hotel would be raised.

Mr. POMERENE. Undoubtedly that is so. We can try to relieve the situation by suggesting that if there is an addition to the regular rate in one hotel the guest will go to some other hotel; but Senators have traveled enough through the industrial cities and towns of this country to know that there is no excess hotel accommodation. You can scarcely go to an industrial town or one of the larger cities and get hotel accommodations if you have not asked for them in advance; and while this section provides for a tax of 50 cents on each room, it will be 50 cents, aye, a dollar added to the price of that room if this amendment goes into effect, in my judgment.

Mr. REED. Why do they not add a dollar now?

Mr. POMERENE. I suppose they have added thus far as much as they think their business will bear. I do not know.

Mr. REED. Then how will they add any more?

Mr. POMERENE. They will have the excuse that they have the tax to pay.

Mr. REED. The tax will not give them the excuse to add anything more than the tax, certainly. The Senator's position is that they are charging as much as they can charge now, and that if we impose the tax they will not only add the tax but they will add more.

Mr. POMERENE. That statement hardly presents the situation. The Senator has asked me why they have not added more. I think they have added perhaps all they thought they could reasonably add; but if we are going to increase their expense by increasing the tax that is another excuse for adding something more.

Naturally, the question comes up, "What can we do?" Congress has a remedy by the aid of the rent commission here in Washington. I do not think that we have jurisdiction, so far as hotels in the various States are concerned; but my thought is that each of the States can control that matter if it is thought advisable to control it. I am sure that we in the District can control these rates just the same as the State of Illinois could control the rates of storage houses for grain, and that action was sustained in the famous case of Munn against Illinois, in Ninety-fourth United States.

Another way in which we probably can get at this is by providing some sort of an excess-profits tax.

Mr. REED. Why would not that be added, just the same as this?

Mr. POMERENE. It might be, and I think it would be taken into consideration. I think every time we impose a tax it is passed on to the consumer, and that is what is going to be done here. If I had any assurance that this would grant any relief to the traveling public, I would be for the amendment; but I am satisfied that it would add to the expense of every traveler.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, just a word. It can not be admitted in one breath that the hotels are already charging all that the traffic will bear, and then be claimed in the next breath that if we should levy a tax of 50 cents on a room the hotel people can and will add a dollar to the price of the room. Those two statements will not stand together. It might be claimed that the hotel keeper was charging all that he thought he could charge and keep his customers to-day, and that if he added the tax to the bill he might in some way induce the customer to pay the tax; but that is not true if there are $5 rooms that can be had.

I will tell you how I think this law will work, and I should like to see it given an opportunity of trial. I think that nearly every traveling man in the United States who goes to a hotel, if this law is passed, will demand a $5 room or under, and he will tell the hotel keeper that he does not propose to pay any tax or pay any penalties, and the result will be a great many more $5 rooms. Senators assume the whole case. They assume that the tax will be added on, and a lot more added onto the tax, when the fact is that a man having a $6 room, charging $6 now and realizing that he is charging all that he can get, finding that he will be obliged to pay 60 cents of that money to the Government, will be very likely to drop his room to the $5 rate in order to escape the tax and please his customer and keep his customer. I think that is the way this will work. If I did not think so, I would not have offered the amendment.

We are constantly told that the tax is passed on. Some taxes are passed on and some are never passed on. If the tax is entirely passed on, and the interests that have been resisting these taxes knew that that would be the fact, every one of them would sit silent and allow the tax to be levied, for it would make no difference to them whether the tax were levied or not; and yet you have found the resistance to the taxes in this bill coming invariably from those upon whom the taxes were levied.

Why have they resisted? Because they know that they can not pass on all of these taxes. They may pass on part of them, but in a great many instances they have taken all that they can extort, and they can extort no more even though they are obliged to pay a tax. The hotel keepers in the United States have been charging these exorbitant prices. Not one of them has brought his balance sheet to the Senate to show that he has been making losses.

The preposterous argument is put forward that they lose a dollar a day because they can not sell liquor. The other preposterous argument is put forward that the linen in their rooms costs 18 cents a day additional, and they will use the same sheet on the same bed for probably three or four years; maybe longer than that. They say that the silverware costs more. And how many of them have had to buy new silverware? Probably a portion of it has to be bought each year. They claim it costs more for buildings, and yet 99 per cent of them are in the buildings they were in before the war, and before the costs went up at all.

But the hotel that is in the building that was constructed long before the war, when labor was cheap and material was cheap, has advanced its rates right alongside of the hotel that was built since the war, and there have been so few of those buildings that they are scarcely worth counting. These gentlemen who erected a building, or rented a building that was built before the war, want as the first element of their cost to put in the additional price of building the building which they never built and never expected to build. If the cost of building has gone up to double the price their building cost, they add a hundred per cent to the cost of their building and say that is an additional cost, and then they hire an accountant and have him brought in here to present us with that sort of balance sheet.

That is the kind of argument we have had to justify every profiteering expedition which has been exploited in this country since the war began. The truth about the matter is I do not think they can add this tax. If they do, there will be more people demanding $5 rooms. Let the Government fix a tax on rooms above $5, let that tax apply on the entire amount paid, and if there is a charge of 10 cents above the $5 there will be a good many hotels in this country which will be advertising $5 and untaxed rooms, in my judgment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SPENCER in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the Secretary will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. EDGE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] and vote "nay."

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL]. I understand he would vote as I shall on this question and I will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] to the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. WELLER] and vote "nay."

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] to the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CROW] and vote "nay."

Mr. SIMMONS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] to the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] and vote "nay."

Mr. TRAMMELL (when his name was called). Making the same announcement in regard to my pair and transfer as on the last vote, I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. ERNST. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY] to the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL] and vote "nay."

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I desire to announce the necessary absence of the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], who is paired with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS]. If the Senator from Mississippi were present and permitted to vote, he would vote "nay" on this question.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] and vote "nay."

Mr. McKINLEY. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY], who is not present, and therefore I withhold my vote.

Mr. CURTIS. I was requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL];

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]; and

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. GERRY. I wish to announce the necessary absence of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH]. If present, he would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 12, nays 52, as follows:

YEAS—12.

Capper	Kenyon	La Follette	Norbeck

So the amendment of the committee was rejected.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senate having disagreed to the amendment incorporating sections 906 and 907, it will be necessary now to turn to page 203, section 903, and make an amendment. I ask unanimous consent to reconsider the vote by which section 903 was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. SMOOT. On page 203, line 23, I move first to strike out "906, or 907," with the comma.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 203, line 23, strike out the numerals "906, or 907" and the comma.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. On the same page, in the same line, after the numerals "902" and the comma, I move to insert the word "or," so that it will read:

That every person liable for any tax imposed by sections 900, 902, or 904 shall make monthly returns under oath in duplicate and pay the taxes imposed by such sections to the collector for the district in which is located the principal place of business.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the next amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 208, in line 22, after numerals "908" and (a), insert the words "That if."

Mr. SMOOT. Before that is agreed to, I ask that the numerals "908" be changed to "906."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 208, in line 25, and on line 1, page 209, strike out the words "of the revenue act of 1918"—as amended by this act—and insert "or 904"; in line 3, before the word "section," strike out the word "such"; in the same line, after the numerals "900," strike out the words "as in force prior to its amendment by this act," and insert in lieu thereof the words "of the revenue act of 1918"; in line 7, at the beginning of the line, strike out the word "such"; after the numerals "900" strike out the words "as amended by this act," and insert in lieu thereof the words "or 904 of this act or by this subdivision;" in line 10, before the word "section," strike out the word "such"; after the numerals "900" in the same line strike out the words as "amended by this act," and insert in lieu thereof the words "or 904 of this act or by this subdivision;" and on line 12, after the word "price," insert the words, "If a contract of the character above described was made with any person other than a dealer, no tax shall be collected under this act"; so as to make the paragraph read:

908. (a) That if (1) any person has, prior to August 15, 1921, made a bona fide contract with a dealer for the sale or lease, after the tax takes effect, of any article in respect to which a tax is imposed by section 900 or 904, or by this subdivision, and in respect to which no corresponding tax was imposed by section 900 of the revenue act of 1918, and (2) such contract does not permit the adding, to the amount to be paid thereunder, of the whole of the tax imposed by section 900 or 904 of this act or by this subdivision, then the vendee or lessee shall, in lieu of the vendor or lessor, pay so much of the tax imposed by section 900 or 904 of this act or by this subdivision as is not so permitted to be added to the contract price. If a contract of the character above described was made with any person other than a dealer, no tax shall be collected under this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The next amendment is, on page 209, in lines 18 and 19, to strike out the words "the revenue act of 1918 (as amended by this act)" and insert the words "this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I now move to amend in lines 19 and 20 by striking out the words "or by this subdivision."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The next amendment is, on page 209, line 21, before the word "section," to strike out the word "such."

The amendment was agreed to.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The next amendment is, on page 209, lines 21 and 22, to strike out the words "as in force prior to its amendment by this act" and insert the words "of the revenue act of 1918."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McCUMBER. I desire to offer a further amendment on the same page. In lines 22 and 23 I move to strike out "and (2)."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McCUMBER. I now move to insert in lieu of the words just stricken out the following:

(2) The contract price includes the amount of the tax imposed by section 900 of the revenue act of 1918, and (3).

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the next amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 209, in line 25, before the word "section," strike out the word "such."

The amendment was agreed to.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 210, in line 1, strike out the words "prior to its amendment by this act" and insert in lieu the words "of the revenue act of 1918."

The amendment was agreed to.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The next amendment is, in line 2, page 210, before the word "section," strike out the word "such."

The amendment was agreed to.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. In line 2, page 210, strike out "as amended by" and insert the words "900 of."

The amendment was agreed to.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The next amendment is, in line 3, page 210, to strike out the words "or by this subdivision."

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that that be disagreed to.

The amendment was rejected.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The committee proposes, on page 210, beginning with line 7, to strike out all down to and including line 19, on that page, as follows:

(c) If (1) any person has, prior to August 15, 1921, made a bona fide contract with any other person for the sale or lease, after the tax takes effect, of any article in respect to which a tax was imposed by section 900 of the revenue act of 1918 as in force prior to its amendment by this act and in respect to which no corresponding tax is imposed by such section as amended by this act, and (2) such contract does not permit deduction, from the amount to be paid thereunder, of the tax imposed by such section 900 prior to its amendment by this act; then the vendor or lessor shall refund to the vendee or lessee so much of the amount of such tax as is not so permitted to be deducted from the contract price.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to call attention to amendment No. 59, on page 210, inserting a new provision.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. Page 210 after line 19 insert a new subdivision to read as follows:

(c) If (1) any person has, prior to August 15, 1921, made a bona fide contract with any other person for the sale or lease, after December 31, 1921, of any article in respect to which a tax was imposed by section 900 of the revenue act of 1918, and in respect to which no corresponding tax is imposed by section 900 of this act, (2) the contract price includes the amount of the tax imposed by section 900 of the revenue act of 1918, and (3) such contract does not permit deduction, from the amount to be paid thereunder, of the tax imposed by section 900 of the revenue act of 1918; then the vendor or lessor shall refund to the vendee or lessee so much of the amount of such tax as is not so permitted to be deducted from the contract price.

Mr. SMOOT. The only necessity for the amendment is that where contracts have been made and the taxes paid upon the basis of the taxes paid under existing law, and those taxes have been repealed, then there should be a refund of the amount of that tax. That is the object of the amendment.

Mr. McKELLAR. What would the refund amount to under this provision?

Mr. SMOOT. This is the sales price of the goods sold by the manufacturer at the sale price, and so far as the refund is concerned it is by the manufacturer and would be whatever the proportion was of the tax under the contract. So far as the Government is concerned it has nothing to do with it.

Mr. McCUMBER. It has nothing to do with the Government at all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the next amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. Page 210, line 20, strike out "(d)" and insert "(c)."

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that that be disagreed to.

The amendment was rejected.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The next amendment is on page 210, line 25, where the committee proposes to strike out "502 of the revenue act of 1918" and insert in lieu "903."

The amendment was agreed to.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The next amendment is on page 211, line 1, where the committee proposes to strike out "(e)" and insert "(d)."

The amendment was agreed to.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The next amendment is on page 211, line 2, to strike out "or (c)."

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that that be disagreed to.

The amendment was rejected.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The next amendment is on page 211, line 10, where the committee proposes to strike out "(f) as used in this section, the term 'dealer' includes a," and insert "(e)" and the capital letter "A."

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the letter "e" in parentheses be stricken out and the letter "f" inserted instead.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in order that I may know whether the change was made or not, in line 1, page 211, was "(d)" stricken out and "(e)" inserted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. "(e)" was stricken out and "(d)" inserted.

Mr. SMOOT. That should have been rejected, and I ask that the vote by which it was agreed to be reconsidered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the vote by which the amendment was agreed to will be reconsidered. It is so ordered.

Mr. SMOOT. I now ask that that amendment be disagreed to.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the next amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 211, line 13, the committee proposes, after the words "for sale," to insert "shall be included in the term 'dealer,' as used in this section," so as to make the paragraph read:

(f) A vendee who purchases any article with intent to use it in the manufacture or production of another article intended for sale shall be included in the term "dealer," as used in this section.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I would now like to return to page 196——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Michigan allow the Chair to state that that completes the committee amendments as printed in the bill?

Mr. TOWNSEND. That is what I understood. I wish now to return to page 196 and ask reconsideration of the vote by which paragraph or subsection 1 was agreed to, under Title IX, section 900.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Michigan that the vote by which paragraph 1 on page 196 was agreed to——

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am not going to object to taking this action, but as soon as it is disposed of I wish to ask unanimous consent to take up the various amendments that were passed over and not agreed to; not committee amendments, but amendments proposed by the majority of the committee, and then we can clean them all up. I shall not ask the Senator from Michigan to yield for that purpose now. He can go on with the amendment to which he has referred.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Michigan? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The Secretary will read the paragraph now under consideration.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

(1) Automobile trucks and automobile wagons, including tires, inner tubes, parts, and accessories therefor, sold or in connection therewith or with the sale thereof, 3 per cent.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I hope the amendment proposed by the committee will not be agreed to. I think there are obvious reasons why there should be no tax imposed upon automobile trucks, automobile wagons, and their parts. There can be no reason for taxing those articles which would not apply to the ordinary dray or express wagon or any other wagon with whatever power it may be drawn. There is no more reason why trucks should be taxed than freight cars separately, because they are engaged in a business which is of the utmost importance. The trucks are in almost daily use. They are taking their place everywhere, and I think their use ought to be encouraged. I do not believe any good can possibly come from taxing them, except, of course, it be the money which might be derived and which we may need.

I think, with the exceptions which have been made, with the peculiar use to which these trucks are applied, not only in the ordinary business of life but three million and more of them on the farms of the country, they should no more be taxed than the tractor that is used on the farm, because they serve a similar purpose. In addition to that, we all know how much they are used in the hospitals, how much they are used wherever merchandise is required to be transported. Therefore I have thought it would be entirely proper for the Senate to refuse to agree to this amendment.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator from Michigan how much revenue this involves?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I do not know how much it is.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Thirty million dollars in this one item alone.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I was not aware that the amount of revenue was as great as that, and yet I still submit that the item ought not to be taxed.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I will say to the Senator from Michigan, if he will yield to me, that subsection 1 will produce about $30,000,000 of revenue, subsection 2 about $70,000,000, and subsection 3 about $25,000,000, a total of $125,000,000 under the three subsections.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I had not thought of asking to remove the tax on automobiles. I know that the automobile, while it is very largely an article of necessity, is also largely an article of luxury. I am not asking that the tax be removed from them, nor shall I ask it. I had not looked into the amount of revenue which would be derived from this tax, but I still believe that it is a very serious mistake for the Congress to tax the truck or any part of it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I agree with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND], and without supplementing his argument at all—for I do not think it needs supplementing—I desire to lay before the Senate certain figures which may be of interest and which will take only a moment.

I have here a copy of the publication which is known as the Federal Trade Information Service, under date of Tuesday, August 30, 1921, and in a column of statistics with respect to motor trucks, automobiles, and tractors, I find these figures: Motor trucks were reported on 131,551 farms in 1920, or on about 2 farms out of every 100 in the United States as a whole. The number of motor trucks on these farms is 139,000. The States leading in the number of motor trucks on farms were Pennsylvania, first, with 9,300; New York, second, with 9,200; Iowa, Ohio, Nebraska, California, and Illinois following in the order named.

I am not making a plea for the relief of motor trucks from taxation merely on the ground that they are used on farms, although I call the attention of the Senate to the fact that tractors are not taxed. That is presumably upon the theory that they are used on farms; that is the only explanation I have had given to me; but if it is understood that 139,000 motor trucks are used in connection with agriculture alone, we get some idea of the total number of motor trucks which are used in all kinds of legitimate business and are doing hard work.

We have had it explained to us a good many times during the consideration of the excise-tax title that it was its object to impose taxes upon luxuries. Certainly this will not be said to be a tax upon a luxury. For myself, I hope that the tax will be stricken out, as I hope that all these taxes will be stricken out.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I do not think that any of the articles in this title may be declared to be luxuries. The automobile has come to stay; it is a necessity of the civilization of to-day. It is just as much of a necessity as was the light buggy 50 or 60 years ago.

The Senator from New York speaks of the number of trucks that are used upon farms. I think if he will take the report of the Ford Co. he will find that the number of Ford cars that are used upon the farm is many times larger than the number of trucks so used.

Mr. TOWNSEND. There are more than 3,000,000 automobiles and trucks used on farms.

Mr. McCUMBER. In the present day of rapid transit the farmer, as well as the man in the city, has got to keep up with the pace. He can no longer compete and use his old horse and drive 10 or 20 miles to town. It is cheaper for him to have the Ford or some other inexpensive, cheaper machine to do that. It is quite as much a necessity to him as it is to the man in the city. We are not taxing luxuries when we impose a tax upon automobiles; but we have got to raise $125,000,000 of revenue. The tractor itself, of course, is not taxed, but there are $125,000,000 to be taken care of. Where are we going to get it? Do Senators know of any other place where we can levy that tax better than on automobiles, trucks, and so forth? I do not think they do.

I admit that if the Senate shall adopt the Smoot amendment—and many of the Senators are favoring this proposition so that they can vote for the Smoot amendment—we may get rid of these taxes and quite a number of others, but we are framing the bill now upon an entirely different basis. If we are going to follow out the present scheme of the bill, then we have got to raise some $125,000,000 in this manner or in some other manner. When I say "some other manner," I mean in some way other than the Smoot amendment.

Of course, if the Smoot amendment shall be adopted, when we get through with the bill we can strike all of these taxes out, but if we should strike them out and then fail to adopt the Smoot amendment, in what position are we to go before a committee of conference? We would have to revise the whole bill and the whole scheme of taxation. For that reason, Mr. President, I hope we shall agree to the committee amendment, and I hope that we shall get something as nearly right and just as we can out of the conference.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CALDER. I ask if the 3 per cent tax on automobile trucks, and so forth, is not carried in the bill as it came from the other House?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes.

Mr. CALDER. So that even if it went out of the bill in the Senate it could be restored in conference.

Mr. McCUMBER. Only at that rate.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I have insisted all along that the tax imposed by this bill should be taken off autotrucks. The autotruck is becoming more and more the farm wagon of the country, and I do not see how Senators on the other side can vote to keep the tax upon autotrucks when they voted here last night to exempt big holding companies and thereby depriving the Federal Treasury of $20,000,000 of revenue, and you voted just a few days ago to take off the big excess-profits tax, and at that one fell swoop you deprived the Government of $450,000,000 of revenue. In these two items you deprived the Government of $470,000,000, and these two big rich sources go tax free. Now you tell us that several million dollars will be derived from the tax on autotrucks in the United States and that we need and should collect the tax. Again, I say, Mr. President, as I said last night, that we are treated in this Chamber to many amazing spectacles and this proposal is one of them.

Thousands of men out in the country must have auto trucks with which to carry on their work. The auto trucks used by them are not joy-riding vehicles; they constitute a part of the working machinery of the men who toil to produce the stuff that feeds and clothes the people of the country.

You are not going to take the tax off of these farm vehicles, we are told, because you say we need the revenue. Mr. President, it was suggested by the able Senator from North Dakota that if we adopt the sales tax of course all of the needed revenue could be raised by that method. That is true, and the Republican majority is coming to that. Senators, I said two weeks ago that you were coming to it; some of you have been planning to come to a sales tax all the time, so that you may unload the tax burden upon the consuming masses of the country. You intend to make every man and woman and child who buys any of the necessities of life pay this sales tax across the counter when the purchase is made.

I said here one day that the manufacturer when the wholesaler came to buy from him would say to the wholesaler, "The price is increased because of the sales tax imposed by Congress." When the wholesaler would ask, "Have I got to pay that?" the manufacturer would reply, "Why, certainly." Then when the retailer goes to the wholesaler, he will be told that the price has increased, and he would ask, "Have I got to pay that?" the wholesaler will reply, "Certainly; it is a sales tax imposed by Congress." Then the retailer, going back to his store, would face the purchaser at the counter and say to him, "The price is increased because of a sales tax imposed by Congress"; and the consumers, poor unfortunate mass of men and women without a friend, it seems, on the other side, are going to have this whole burden laid upon them.

Mr. President, it seems that the Republican majority is removing all Government taxes from the shoulders of the big holding companies and the privileged profiteers and unloading it upon those least able to pay taxes of any kind. Distribute the taxes equally and justly. When you tax the big concern in any way it is so small that it is scarcely felt by it; but your tax on the poor is heavy and burdensome. I am reminded of the fellow who was selling rabbit hash. A gentleman purchased and tasted some of the hash and remarked, "I do not taste much rabbit in this hash. How do you make it?" The vendor of the hash replied, "I make it out of horse flesh and rabbit meat." His customer asked, "What proportion of horse flesh and what proportion of rabbit meat do you use?" He replied, "Fifty-fifty." "Well, what do you mean?" The vendor replied, "One horse to one rabbit." [Laughter.]

That is what the Republican majority is doing to-day.

You are going on the fifty-fifty plan—a tax burden the size of a horse for the average man and a rabbit-sized tax for the favored millionaire.

Mr. President, a little earlier in the day we saw this Republican Senate remove the tax from fine and costly furs. Yes; you have taken the taxes off of these fine and costly luxuries. They are beautiful things; I like to look upon them; they cost a heap of money, and very few people can afford to buy them. The cost of some of them runs up into the thousands, but the Republican majority has fixed it so that they can be bought now tax free, while the common man out on his farm who wants to buy an autotruck to haul his produce to the market and to carry on his work about the farm is going to have collected from him taxes on autotrucks while fine furs go tax free.

Mr. President, it is fortunate that we have got the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD here in which we can record the truth, so that the people can find out just what is being done here. The big concerns, which can pay these taxes and ought to do so, and never miss the amount paid, are being permitted to go tax free, while those who are less able to pay the taxes are having the burden imposed upon them. Your big holding companies have their millions go tax free; the profiteers pluck out of Government taxes $450,000,000 at one time; but the autotrucks must remain on the tax list, because you say you do not know where you can get the taxes to take the place of this amount. You exempt big excess-profits tax and tax the necessities.

Senators, is not that a pitiable spectacle? As I said last night, you put a premium on crap shooting. You have exempted dice and you have exempted billiard balls and billiard cues.

Billiard cues and billiard balls and dice are put upon the free list. Why, a whole lot of Negro Rastuses will smile on the dice and sit down and chuckle over those bones as they call, "Come seven, come eleven." They are tax free, and you have put a premium on gambling. So they will say we got all this at the hands of the Republican Senate. "Hurrah for the Republican Party!"

But the solemn men and women who take this RECORD and read it are going to sit like a jury on your case, and they ought to. They are going to say: "This Senator is either for me or he is against me." God Almighty laid down a standard by which we could judge men, and you can not escape it: "He that is not with me is against me." The people are going to apply that to you and to me, and they ought to. You are either for them or you are against them, and when you tax an autotruck, that the farmer must have in order to help him make a living and carry on his business, you are against him. You are putting that tax on him for the purpose of getting the money needed without taxing some concern that stands in concrete form and can come here and make its influence felt through the press, through campaign funds to your party, and also in a political way at home. There is not anything on this earth that appeals so powerfully to a Republican as the clinking sinews of war in campaign times.

These people that I am talking about have a wonderful power in this country if they but knew it, and we are going to appeal to them. We are going to ask them to wring this Government out of the hands of the purse-proud classes and restore it to those who will safeguard and administer it properly.

Mr. President, the high-sounding phrases that we heard here last fall will not solve the problems of this day. They will not meet the requirements of the hour. The time has come to act; judgment day has come; and you have got to walk up here and put your names on the record when the roll is called, and the people can read for themselves and judge whether you are on their side or on the side of those who pillage and plunder them.

It was asked, back in the days of the old patriarchs, "Who is on the Lord's side?" How appropriate it is for us to ask to-day, when the Republican Party is intrenched in power in both branches of Congress and in the White House, "Who is on the side of the people; who is on the side of just and fair government in this country?" Mr. President, these questions are appropriate at this time.

I have risen here from time to time and entered my protest, as other Senators on this side have done. We have condemned this tax bill. I have called it by its proper name, a legislative monstrosity; that is what you are imposing upon the American people. The only argument that you make every now and then is, "Oh, well, the people have already spoken. They gave us 7,000,000 majority," and you keep hanging onto that. Well, that is dwindling down, and these cities that have been acting in New England and have been electing Democratic mayors by big majorities ought to be straws to show you how the wind is blowing. Another election will come off about a year from now.

Then we will see how the American people stand. We will watch them in the battle of the ballots in the next election. I expect to hear some of you Senators on the hustings trying to explain some of these votes that you are casting here now, trying to explain how you imposed these heavy taxes upon the people who were least able to pay them. Why, I know just as well what you are going to do as any one can, and I am going to tell you that now, so that when you do it I am going to say that I told you. You are going to knock out that $450,000,000 that is gone of excess profits, $20,000,000 last night of these holding companies, and you are going to say, "Well, now, we have just got to raise $470,000,000," and then you will tax the necessities of life in every home in the country to make up the amount of taxes that you could have collected from the profiteers.

If you can get enough Republican Senators from the West to betray their constituents, but I do not believe you can, I think you will impose the sales tax, but I hope and pray that this side will stand as one man for the voices out yonder that are not heard here except when we plead their cause, the great silent mass of men and women who will be going in and out of the stores at the crossroads, the stores in the little villages, the stores in the towns, and the stores in the cities, undoing their slender purses that represent their hard-earned money, and laying down their coin upon the counter, and paying this tax that pompous profiteers ought to pay.

That is what you expect to do. I am going to fight it. I hope this side will vote to a man to defeat it, and I am hoping that we will get enough Republican votes from the West to kill it as dead as Hector.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the committee amendment as found on page 196, line 16.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, if the ears of the Senate have been sufficiently assaulted with windy bellowings and the intelligence of the Senate sufficiently insulted by blithering balderdash may we now have a vote?

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate recesses to-night it be until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I did not hear all that the smart Aleck Senator from New Hampshire injected into this debate. What I did hear was enough to cause me to think of him as a Senator of exceedingly small mental capacity, but I do not intend that he or anyone else who serves predatory interests in this country shall deter me from speaking for the rights of the people and demanding honest government at this, the Nation's Capital.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the committee as found on page 196, line 16.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, there are 36 amendments that are to be proposed to the bill, as found in these printed amendments. They are nearly all clarifying amendments. There is one, however, that is not to be acted upon to-night, and that is the insurance amendment. That is to go over; but I am going to ask the Senate at this time for unanimous consent to take up these amendments and dispose of them in order. If there is any discussion, of course we do not expect to cut it off in any way; but I ask the Senate to proceed with them in order and pass upon these amendments before any other amendments are considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. McKELLAR. Those have been agreed upon by the majority of the committee?

Mr. SMOOT. They have.

Mr. KING. The Senator denominates them clarifying amendments. I suppose they relate to renumbering of the sections?

Mr. SMOOT. Some of them do, and some of them relate to changes that have to be made in amendments which have already been adopted.

Mr. McKELLAR. Where do they begin?

Mr. SMOOT. With amendment No. 6.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the unanimous consent asked for by the Senator from Utah?

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gooding	McKellar	Shortridge
Brandegee	Hale	McKinley	Simmons
Broussard	Harreld	McLean	Smoot
Bursum	Harris	McNary	Spencer
Calder	Heflin	Moses	Sterling
Cameron	Hitchcock	Myers	Sutherland
Capper	Jones, N. Mex.	New	Swanson
Caraway	Jones, Wash.	Newberry	Townsend
Curtis	Kenyon	Nicholson	Trammell
Dial	Keyes	Oddie	Wadsworth
Edge	King	Overman	Walsh, Mass.
Ernst	La Follette	Phipps	Warren
Fernald	Lenroot	Poindexter	Watson, Ga.
Fletcher	Lodge	Pomerene	Watson, Ind.
France	McCormick	Reed	Willis
Gerry	McCumber	Sheppard

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-three Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I present the following amendment and ask to have it printed and lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be received and ordered printed, and lie on the table. The Senator from Utah makes a request for unanimous consent. Is there objection?

Mr. REED. What is the unanimous-consent request?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state it.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. That the Senate go back and take up seriatim the amendments proposed in the pamphlet which has been printed which have not already been acted upon.

Mr. HEFLIN. Before that is done, I want to give notice that I will ask for a separate vote on the amendment by which auto trucks are taxed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I present an amendment, which I ask to have printed and lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it will be so ordered. The Secretary will state the first amendment under the unanimous-consent agreement.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The first amendment is amendment No. 6 in the printed pamphlet. On page 38 of the bill, line 13, it is proposed to strike out the words "title as income to the," and on the same line in the committee amendment already proposed to strike out the word "taxpayer" and the semicolon and to insert in lieu thereof the word "title."

Mr. REED. Mr. President, does that make any change except merely a clerical change?

Mr. SMOOT. That is all. It is to make it perfectly clear that the exemption should not be to any taxpayer except in the cases of Government obligations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The next amendment is No. 8, on page 39, line 25, in the committee amendment already agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection, the vote by which the committee amendment was agreed to will be reconsidered. It is so ordered.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 39, line 25, after the word "days," insert the words "before or," so that it will read "within 30 days before or after."

Mr. SMOOT. That is to make it doubly sure that not only may the purchase be before but it must be within 30 days after.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Now, I send to the desk a substitute amendment for amendment No. 9.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the substitute.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 40, line 2, strike out all after the parenthesis and all of lines 3 to 7, both inclusive, and insert:

> Substantially identical property, if such acquisition is to the extent of part only of substantially identical property, then only a proportionate part of the loss shall be disallowed.

Mr. SMOOT. That is to take care of whatever the substantially identical property may be. It covers only the proportion of the property that is identically the same, and not the whole of the property.

Mr. SIMMONS. This relates to the excise tax?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; it is a limitation of it.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, it is quite one thing to adopt a printed amendment which we have seen and another thing to adopt a substitute for a printed amendment which we have not seen. I would like to have a moment to examine the text, not only of the amendment but of the clause to be amended.

Mr. SMOOT. Then, while the Senator from Missouri is looking it up may we not proceed to the next amendment?

Mr. REED. I can not look it up and watch other amendments. I shall not be long. [After a pause.] I see no objection to the amendment after a hasty examination.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. The next amendment is No. 11.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The next amendment, No. 11, will be found on page 63 of the bill, at the end of line 9, to strike out the word "the" and to insert the article "a."

The amendment was agreed to.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The next amendment is, on page 63, line 10, after the word "return," to insert the word "thereof."

Mr. SIMMONS. I wish the clerk, after announcing the page, would give us just a moment to turn to it.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The amendment is on page 63, line 10, after the word "return," the first word in the line, to insert the word "thereof."

The amendment was agreed to.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 63, the same page, after line 18, and after the period, insert the following sentence:

> In cases under this subdivision there shall be included, as provided in subdivision (d) of this section, in computing the net income of each beneficiary, that part of the income of the estate or trust which, pursuant to the instrument or order governing the distribution, is distributable during the taxable year to such beneficiary.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah explain this amendment?

Mr. SMOOT. It simply means that the income distributed by the fiduciary must be taken out of the gross income returned by the fiduciary. If that is not done, then the Government would lose the tax that would be due it. This is simply to clarify this language so that there will be no question, and it would prevent any double deduction which may occur by reason of the wording of the law.

Mr. REED. Is it the Treasury expert's suggestion?

Mr. SMOOT. It is.

Mr. REED. For the purpose of making the law certain?

Mr. SMOOT. To make it certain, and not only that but to prevent a possible double deduction as it is now written. Under this provision there can be but one deduction.

The amendment was agreed to.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The next amendment is amendment numbered 12, page 63, line 19.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the vote by which the amendment of the committee was agreed to will be reconsidered. It is so ordered.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The amendment to the amendment is to strike out the words "an irrevocable," before "trust," and insert the letter "A" as a capital, and, on page 64, line 2, to strike out the words "such employee" and insert in lieu the word "distributee."

Mr. SMOOT. Some corporations have created trusts for their employees which are not irrevocable, and this is to take care of that—that is, a trust—so that it covers all.

Mr. REED. It makes a very great difference.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Yes; it does.

Mr. REED. As the proposed law is drawn it reads:

(f) An irrevocable trust created by an employer as a part of a stock bonus or profit-sharing plan for the exclusive benefit of some or all of his employees, to which contributions are made by such employer, or employees, or both, for the purpose of distributing to such employees the earnings and principal of the fund accumulated by the trust in accordance with such plan shall not be taxable under this section.

And so forth.

Now, if an irrevocable trust had been created for the benefit of the employees, of course that could not be taxed to the employer because he has forever put it out of his power to regain that fund. But a trust is easily conceivable which would be a contingent trust and so drawn that the employer might afterwards use the funds to recoup losses in his business. The striking out of the word "irrevocable" of course makes it possible to create the kind of trust I last referred to, so that the change is a change of substance. It may be all right, but it certainly is a change of substance.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that a trust under this subdivision is not taxable at all, whether it is an irrevocable trust or a revocable trust; but when the amount of the tax is distributed, then it is taxable and it makes no difference whether it is an irrevocable trust or a revocable trust. This language is a little broader, and it seems to me it covers just what the department wanted at the time, and what the Congress intended it to be.

Mr. SIMMONS. This does not in any way affect the trust.

Mr. REED. It makes a substantive change. It may be all right. I frankly state I am not certain at all about it, but I am not going to hold up the bill. I know there is a great difference between an irrevocable trust and a revocable trust.

Mr. SIMMONS. I wish to say to the Senator from Missouri that the reason why I said what I did is that I have been over all these amendments, and this one I particularly looked into and reached the conclusion that it did not affect the trust.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The next amendment is, on page 64, line 21, to strike out the words "at the same time" and insert in lieu thereof the words "upon the same basis."

The amendment was agreed to.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. Amendment numbered 14, on page 75, line 15, in the committee amendment already agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the vote whereby the committee amendment was agreed to will be reconsidered. The Secretary will state the proposed amendment to the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. In line 15 strike out the heading "Returns when accounting period changed" and insert in lieu thereof the following heading:

Returns for a period of less than 12 months.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The next amendment is No. 15, on page 76, lines 9 and 10, in lieu of the matter inserted by the amendment already agreed to——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the vote by which the amendment was agreed to will be reconsidered, and the Secretary will state the proposed amendment to the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. In lines 9 and 10, in lieu of the matter inserted by the amendment already agreed to, insert:

(b) In all cases where a separate return is made for a part of a taxable year.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The next amendment is No. 17, on page 82, at the end of line 22.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the vote by which the committee amendment was agreed to will be reconsidered, and the Secretary will state the proposed amendment to the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 82, at the end of line 22, add a new sentence, as follows:

In the case of a foreign corporation or foreign-trade corporation, a computation shall also be made in the manner provided in section 217.

Mr. REED. What change does that make?

Mr. SMOOT. Section 217 provides for the manner in which foreign corporations shall determine their net income.

Mr. REED. I now have it before me. It is satisfactory.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The next amendment is No. 18, page 83, lines 16 and 17, to strike out the words "under the provisions of" and insert in lieu thereof the words "in the manner provided in."

The amendment was agreed to.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. Amendment No. 19, page 84, line 14, strike out the words "title as income to the" and, on the same line, in the committee amendment already proposed——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the vote by which the committee amendment was agreed to will be reconsidered, and the Secretary will state the proposed amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. In line 14 of the committee amendment already proposed, strike out the word "taxpayer" and insert in lieu thereof the word "title."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The next amendment is No. 20, on page 85, line 18, in the committee amendment already agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the vote by which the committee amendment was agreed to will be reconsidered, and the Secretary will state the proposed amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. In line 18, in the committee amendment already agreed to, after the word "taxes" and before the semicolon, insert a period and the following:

For the purpose of this paragraph, estate, inheritance, legacy, and succession taxes accrue on the due date thereof except as otherwise provided by the law of the jurisdiction imposing such taxes.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator from Missouri that this is the same amendment that was agreed to before as affecting individuals, but this affects corporations.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The committee amendment as amended was agreed to.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The next is amendment No. 21, on page 86, line 2, in the committee amendment already agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the vote by which the committee amendment was agreed to will be reconsidered, and the Secretary will state the proposed amendment to the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. In line 2, in the committee amendment, after the word "days" insert the words "before or."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, there is a substitute that I desire to offer in behalf of the committee for amendment No. 22. It is the same as the amendment offered and adopted as to individuals. I send it to the desk.

Mr. SIMMONS. Is the wording identical?

Mr. SMOOT. It is substantially the same.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposed substitute will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 86, line 4, strike out all after the parenthesis, down to and including line 11, and insert in lieu the following words:

Substantially identical property, unless such claim is made by a dealer in stock or securities and with respect to a transaction made in the ordinary course of his business. If such acquisition is to the extent of part only of substantially identical property, then only a proportionate part of the loss shall be disallowed.

Mr. REED. Where is that to be inserted? I could not follow it.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 86, line 4, beginning with the word "identical," strike out the remainder of the paragraph down to and including line 11.

Mr. SMOOT. This applies to corporations, just as the amendment a few moments ago applies to individuals.

Mr. SIMMONS. It is the same amendment?

Mr. SMOOT. It is the same amendment, except that it applies to corporations.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The next amendment is No. 25, page 100, line 21.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be necessary to reconsider the vote by which the amendment on line 21 was agreed to. Without objection, it is so ordered, and the Secretary will state the proposed amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. Strike out, on lines 20 and 21, "of $2,200 (as provided in section 236)" and the period and the quotation mark, and in lieu thereof insert the following:

As provided in subdivision (b) of section 236, which shall be allowed only if the combined net income of the affiliated corporations is $25,000 or less.

Mr. REED. What is the change made by that amendment?

Mr. SMOOT. That is, limiting the $2,000 exemption to affiliated corporations whose incomes are less than $25,000. In other words, on incomes above $25,000 there is no exemption.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The next is amendment No. 26, on page 102, line 22, to strike out the word "contract" and insert in lieu thereof the word "contracts."

The amendment was agreed to.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The next amendment is amendment numbered 29, on page 105, line 24, after the word "property" and before the semicolon, to insert a period and the following:

The deduction allowed by this paragraph shall be allowed in the case of taxes imposed upon a shareholder or member of a company upon his interest as shareholder or member, which are paid by the company without reimbursement from the shareholder or member, but in such cases no deduction shall be allowed the shareholder or member for the amount of such taxes.

Mr. SMOOT. That simply provides that the same deductions shall be allowed to insurance companies as are allowed to corporations.

Mr. REED. That is not very clear to me.

Mr. SMOOT. In the case of insurance companies as in the case of corporations there should be an allowance made for taxes which are paid by the company for its stockholders; but if the stockholder does not receive the allowance and the company pays the tax it is allowed the exemption which otherwise would be allowed to the stockholder.

Mr. REED. Why would not the stockholder be given the allowance?

Mr. SMOOT. We changed it as to all other corporations because so many companies pay the taxes of their stockholders, and they are not paid by each individual stockholder of the corporation.

Mr. REED. Is this one of the Treasury Department's recommendations?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; it is one of the Treasury Department's recommendations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to. The next amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The next amendment is amendment No. 30, on page 106, lines 10 and 11, to strike out the words "title as income to the"; and on line 11, in the committee amendment already agreed to, strike out the word "taxpayer" and insert in lieu thereof the word "title."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the vote whereby the committee amendment was agreed to will be reconsidered. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment to the same committee amendment and ask that it may be agreed to. I will say that this is similar to the amendment that was offered by the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] and also by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] applying to corporations. The amendment simply applies to insurance companies and is couched in the same language and is phrased in the same way as the amendment to which I have referred.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah to the amendment reported by the committee will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 106, line 11, it is proposed to strike out all after the semicolon down to and including line 17 and to insert as a substitute for the proposed amendment of the committee the following proviso:

Provided, That in the case of returns made for the calendar year 1921 there shall be allowed as a deduction in addition to the above so much of the interest paid or accrued during such year on indebtedness incurred or continued to purchase or carry obligations of the United States issued after September 24, 1917, the interest upon which is so wholly exempt, as is in excess of the interest received therefrom during the year.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment is agreed to. The next amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The next amendment, numbered 31, is to the same committee amendment, on page 106, line 17, to strike out the period and insert a semicolon, and after line 17 insert a new paragraph as follows:

(9) In the case of a domestic life insurance company, the net income of which (computed without the benefit of this paragraph) is $25,000 or less, the sum of $2,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment is agreed to. Without objection, the paragraph as amended is agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Now, I ask that amendment numbered 32 go over. That is the insurance paragraph.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Amendment numbered 32 will be passed over.

Mr. SIMMONS. Could not the Senator from Utah propose that amendment to-night?

Mr. SMOOT. I am quite sure that amendment is going to lead to much discussion, and we can not dispose of it to-night. I should like to have the other amendments disposed of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The next amendment is amendment numbered 33, on page 112, line 4, after the word "begun," to insert the following: "in any court."

Mr. REED. Just a moment now.

Mr. SMOOT. The operation of this amendment is limited to such proceedings as may be begun in the courts.

Mr. REED. The amendment reads "in any court." That is pretty broad. Had we not better say "in any court of competent jurisdiction"?

Mr. SMOOT. The object was to prevent the matter coming before the departments.

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not see that there could be any objection to the suggestion of the Senator from Missouri to insert after the word "court" the words "of competent jurisdiction."

Mr. REED. I suggest to the Senator from Utah to add to his amendment, after word "court," the words "of competent jurisdiction."

Mr. SMOOT. I ask the Senator from Missouri to read the language on page 111, where it is provided, beginning in line 25—

No suit or proceeding for the collection of any such taxes due under this act or under prior income, excess profits, or war profits tax acts, or of any taxes due under section 38 of such act of August 5, 1909, shall be begun—

After the word "begun" I propose to insert the words "in any court."

Mr. REED. Mr. President, why do we need to add the words "in any court"? The clause is entirely different from what I thought it was from reading merely two or three lines of it. I had no opportunity to read the entire context.

Mr. SMOOT. The only reason the words are proposed to be inserted there is because it is not desired that such matters should be brought here to the department.

Mr. REED. I have no objection to the Senator's amendment, and the amendment which I suggested is under the circumstances not necessary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. REED. Before the amendment is agreed to let me make this suggestion to the Senator. He says he does not want such matters brought to the department. If we add the words "in any court," if it is possible to bring an action in a department, it would leave it so that it could be brought there.

Mr. SMOOT. The expert advises me that he misinformed me as to the matter of bringing it to the department. That is not the object, but it has relation to restraint proceedings which may be begun.

Mr. REED. I think if we leave the language broadly, so that no action can be begun, it would be better than if we insert the words "in any court." I confess I do not like to be making suggestions of this kind without an opportunity to examine the text, but we are trying to get along so fast that it is impossible to examine the text.

Mr. SMOOT. Suppose a taxpayer leaves the country and is absent from the country for five years and then comes back; we would not want to limit the action here, distraint against him, after the 5-year period. The amendment is suggested to meet just such a case as that.

Mr. REED. If it could not be brought in any court, where could it be brought?

Mr. SMOOT. Distraint proceedings, so I am told, do not have to be brought in any court; they can be brought in the department.

Mr. REED. Then the proposition is to limit the limitation of the statute of limitations so that while an action may not be brought in court it may be brought in the department. That nullifies the purpose of the limitation itself.

Mr. SMOOT. But as it stands now, if a man goes out of the country and remains away for five years and then comes back, no distraint proceeding can be begun against him.

Mr. REED. But suppose that he does not go out of the country and the five years elapse, why could they not proceed in the department against him the same as against a man who has gone out of the country?

Mr. SMOOT. They would in that case, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. REED. Certainly; in other words, this statute of limitations which we put in here in order to end these controversies will be changed by the language the Senator has suggested so that an action may be brought after five years.

Mr. SMOOT. Suit will have to be brought before five years, and that could be done if the taxpayer remains in this country, but suppose he was out of the country and remained away five years and then came back to this country. In that case we do not want to prevent the Government from proceeding to distrain.

Mr. REED. I understand the Senator's point, but it seems to me that the language he uses goes far beyond the point. His point is that if a man leaves the country so that notice can not be served upon him he wants to preserve the right to bring an action in the department, although it can not be brought in a court. I can not tell about this without an opportunity to examine the paragraph. I suggest that the Senator let it go over, because I think that his amendment may accomplish something that we would not want to accomplish.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the amendment go over, then.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I think its effect as I read it, I will say to the Senator from Missouri——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be passed over.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I wish the Chair would permit me to make a statement before the amendment goes over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair did not hear the Senator from North Carolina. The Senator from North Carolina is recognized.

Mr. SIMMONS. I was about to say that I think the effect of the amendment is to provide that after five years no proceeding shall be brought, and the term "in any court" means that no proceedings after that period has expired shall lie in any court. I think that is what it means, and I think, therefore, the words "in any court" are properly used in this connection.

Mr. REED. It is wholly superfluous if that is the construction.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think that is probably true, but that is what it means.

Mr. REED. The words "no action shall lie" are broader than the words "no action shall lie in any court."

Mr. SIMMONS. It says here, "begun in any court." I think if the word "lie" were used it would be sufficient, but it has the word "begun." "No action shall be begun in any court."

Mr. REED. Of course if it were brought before the five years it would lie after the five years. It would not be begun, but it would be a continuing case. If there are such cases as the Senator from Utah has in mind, then a clause of this kind should be added here:

> And if any person shall be absent from the United States so that service can not be had upon him the period of his absence shall be deducted from the period of limitation.

That would cure the defect the Senator has in mind.

Mr. SMOOT. Let me call the Senator's attention to another case that may happen. Suppose the Government got judgment against a taxpayer, and before collection could be made he went to a foreign country and waited until the five-year term had expired, and then returned to the United States. The five-year term having expired, the Senator would not want the Government to be denied the right to bring a distraint against his goods, if he had any, in the United States.

Mr. REED. Oh, no; but that is not an action.

Mr. SMOOT. It is a proceeding.

Mr. REED. That would not be an action in that sense. It would be a process from a court.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Has it not been agreed that this shall go over?

Mr. SMOOT. Let it go over.

RECESS.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, allow me to suggest to the Senator from Utah that we have been running along pretty well to-day, until half-past 10 o'clock, nearly 12 hours. If it is agreeable, I move that the Senate now take a recess until to-morrow morning at 11 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 10 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Wednesday, November 2, 1921, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, November 1, 1921.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Lord and our God, we draw near to Thee with humble confidence. Grant that we may this day walk humbly with Thee and upright among our fellows. How free is Thy infinite nature and how bountiful its gifts. O make us deeply grateful for all and inspire us with the patience, the courage, and the satisfaction of a good life. Be with those who need Thee most, with the tempted, the grievously burdened, and those who are heartsick by the way. And unto all of us be as the shadow of a great rock in a world of toil, passion, and conflict, and may we come to the end of our labors unsoiled and unstained. In the name of Jesus. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled joint resolution of the following title:

S. J. Res. 114. Joint resolution accepting the invitation of the Republic of Brazil to take part in an international exposition to be held in Rio de Janeiro in 1922.

ROADS BILL—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. ROBSION. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill S. 1072 and ask unanimous consent that the statement of the managers on the part of the House be read instead of the conference report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky calls up the conference report on the good roads bill and asks unanimous consent that the statement of the managers on the part of the House be read instead of the conference report. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, this bill originally was never considered in the House for amendment. Members of the House have never given any consideration whatsoever to the Senate amendment, or even to the report of the conferees. It is an entirely new amendment. I think it would be better to have the conference report read, so that the Members may be fully acquainted with the provisions of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin objects. The Clerk will read the conference report.

The conference report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1072) entitled "An act to amend the act entitled 'An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes,' approved July 11, 1916, as amended and supplemented, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the amendment of the House of Representatives, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"That this act may be cited as the Federal highway act.

"SEC. 2. That, when used in this act, unless the context indicates otherwise—

"The term 'Federal aid act' means the act entitled 'An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes,' approved July 11, 1916, as amended by sections 5 and 6 of an act entitled 'An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes,' approved February 28, 1919, and all other acts amendatory thereof or supplementary thereto.

"The term 'highway' includes rights of way, bridges, drainage structures, signs, guard rails, and protective structures in connection with highways, but shall not include any highway or street in a municipality having a population of 2,500 or more as shown by the last available census, except that portion of any such highway or street along which within a distance of 1 mile the houses average more than 200 feet apart.

"The term 'State highway department' includes any State department, commission, board, or official having adequate powers and suitably equipped and organized to discharge to the satisfaction of the Secretary of Agriculture the duties herein required.

"The term 'maintenance' means the constant making of needed repairs to preserve a smooth-surfaced highway.

"The term 'construction' means the supervising, inspecting, actual building, and all expenses incidental to the construction of a highway, except locating, surveying, mapping, and costs of right of way.

"The term 'reconstruction' means a widening or a rebuilding of the highway or any portion thereof to make it a continuous road, and of sufficient width and strength to care adequately for traffic needs.

"The term 'forest roads' means roads wholly or partly within or adjacent to and serving the national forests.

"The term 'State funds' includes for the purposes of this act funds raised under the authority of the State, or any political or other subdivisions thereof, and made available for expenditure under the direct control of the State highway department.

"SEC. 3. All powers and duties of the Council of National Defense under the act entitled 'An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes," approved August 29, 1916, in relation to highway or highway transport, are hereby transferred to the Secretary of Agriculture, and the Council of National Defense is directed to turn over to the Secretary of Agriculture the equipment, material, supplies, papers, maps, and documents utilized in the exercise of such powers. The powers and duties of agencies dealing with highways in the national parks or in military or naval reservations under the control of the United States Army or Navy, or with highways used principally for military or naval purposes, shall not be taken over by the Secretary of Agriculture, but such highways shall remain under the control and jurisdiction of such agencies.

"The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to cooperate with the State highway departments, and with the Department of the Interior in the construction of public highways within Indian reservations, and to pay the amount assumed therefor from the funds allotted or apportioned under this act to the State wherein the reservation is located.

"SEC. 4. That the Secretary of Agriculture shall establish an accounting division which shall devise and install a proper method of keeping the accounts.

"SEC. 5. That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to transfer to the Secretary of Agriculture, upon his request, all war material, equipment, and supplies now or hereafter declared surplus from stock now on hand and not needed for the purposes of the War Department but suitable for use in the improvement of highways, and that the same shall be distributed among the highway departments of the several States to be used in the construction, reconstruction, and maintenance of highways, such distribution to be upon the same basis as that hereinafter provided for in this act in the distribution of Federal-aid fund: Provided, That the Secretary of Agriculture, in his discretion, may reserve from such distribution not to exceed 10 per cent of such material, equipment, and supplies for use in the construction, reconstruction, and maintenance of national forest roads or other roads constructed, reconstructed, or maintained under his direct supervision.

"SEC. 6. That in approving projects to receive Federal aid under the provisions of this act the Secretary of Agriculture shall give preference to such projects as will expedite the completion of an adequate and connected system of highways, interstate in character.

"Before any projects are approved in any State, such State, through its State highway department, shall select or designate a system of highways not to exceed 7 per cent of the total highway mileage of such State as shown by the records of the State highway department at the time of the passage of this act.

"Upon this system all Federal-aid apportionments shall be expended.

"Highways which may receive Federal aid shall be divided into two classes, one of which shall be known as primary or interstate highways, and shall not exceed three-sevenths of the total mileage which may receive Federal aid, and the other which shall connect or correlate therewith and be known as secondary or intercounty highways, and shall consist of the remainder of the mileage which may receive Federal aid.

"The Secretary of Agriculture shall have authority to approve in whole or in part the systems as designated or to require modifications or revisions thereof: Provided, That the State shall submit to the Secretary of Agriculture for his approval any proposed revisions of the designated systems of highways above provided for.

"Not more than 60 per cent of all Federal aid allotted to any State shall be expended upon the primary or interstate highways until provision has been made for the improvement of the entire system of such highways: Provided, That with the approval of any State highway department the Secretary of Agriculture may approve the expenditure of more than 60 per cent of the Federal aid apportioned to such State upon the primary or interstate highways in such State.

"The Secretary of Agriculture may approve projects submitted by the State highway departments prior to the selection, designation, and approval of the system of Federal-aid highways herein provided for if he may reasonably anticipate that such projects will become a part of such system.

"Whenever provision has been made by any State for the completion and maintenance of a system of primary or interstate and secondary or intercounty highways equal to 7 per cent of the total mileage of such State, as required by this act, said State, through its State highway department, by and with the approval of the Secretary of Agriculture, is hereby authorized to add to the mileage of primary or interstate and secondary or intercounty systems as funds become available for the construction and maintenance of such additional mileage.

"SEC. 7 That before any project shall be approved by the Secretary of Agriculture for any State such State shall make provisions for State funds required each year of such States by this act for construction, reconstruction, and maintenance of all Federal-aid highways within the State, which funds shall be under the direct control of the State highway department.

"SEC. 8. That only such durable types of surface and kinds of materials shall be adopted for the construction and reconstruction of any highway which is a part of the primary or interstate and secondary or intercounty systems as will adequately meet the existing and probable traffic future needs and conditions thereon. The Secretary of Agriculture shall approve the types and width of construction and reconstruction and the character of improvement, repair, and maintenance in each case, consideration being given to the type and character which shall be best suited for each locality and to the probable character and extent of the future traffic.

"SEC. 9. That all highways constructed or reconstructed under the provisions of this act shall be free from tolls of all kinds.

"That all highways in the primary or interstate system constructed after the passage of this act shall have a right of way of ample width and a wearing surface of an adequate width which shall not be less than 18 feet, unless, in the opinion of the Secretary of Agriculture, it is rendered impracticable by physical conditions, excessive costs, probable traffic requirements, or legal obstacles.

"SEC. 10. That when any State shall have met the requirements of this act, the Secretary of the Treasury, upon receipt of certification from the governor of such State to such effect, approved by the Secretary of Agriculture, shall immediately make available to such State, for the purpose set forth in this act, the sum apportioned to such State as herein provided.

"SEC. 11. That any State having complied with the provisions of this act, and desiring to avail itself of the benefits thereof, shall by its State highway department submit to the Secretary of Agriculture project statements setting forth proposed construction or reconstruction of any primary or interstate, or secondary or intercounty highway therein. If the Secretary of Agriculture approve the project, the State highway department shall furnish to him such surveys, plans, specifications, and estimates therefor as he may require; items included for engineering, inspection, and unforeseen contingencies shall not exceed 10 per cent of the total estimated cost of its construction. That when the Secretary of Agriculture approves such surveys, plans, specifications, and estimates, he shall notify the State highway department and immediately certify the fact to the Secretary of the Treasury. The Secretary of the Treasury shall thereupon set aside the share of the United States payable under this act on acccount of such projects, which shall not exceed 50 per cent of the total estimated cost thereof, except that in the case of any State containing unappropriated public lands exceeeding 5 per cent of the total area of all lands in the State, the share of the United States payable under this act on account of such projects shall not exceed 50 per cent of the total estimated cost thereof plus a percentage of such estimated cost equal to one-half of the percentage which the area of the unappropriated public lands in such State bears to the total area of such State: Provided, That the limitation of payments not to exceed $20,000 per mile, under existing law, which the Secretary of Agriculture may make be, and the same is hereby, increased in proportion to the increased percentage of Federal aid authorized by this section: Provided further, That these provisions relative to the public-land States shall apply to all unobligated or unmatched funds appropriated by the Federal aid act and payment for approved projects upon which actual building construction work had not begun on the 30th day of June, 1921.

"SEC. 12. That the construction and reconstruction of the highways or parts of highways under the provisions of this act, and all contracts, plans, specifications, and estimates relating thereto, shall be undertaken by the State highway departments subject to the approval of the Secretary of Agriculture. The construction and reconstruction work and labor in each State shall be done in accordance with its laws and under the direct supervision of the State highway department, subject to the inspection and approval of the Secretary of Agriculture and in accordance with the rules and regulations pursuant to this act.

"SEC. 13. That when the Secretary of Agriculture shall find that any project approved by him has been constructed or reconstructed in compliance with said plans and specifications, he shall cause to be paid to the proper authorities of said State the amount set aside for said project.

"That the Secretary of Agriculture may, in his discretion, from time to time, make payments on such construction or reconstruction as the work progresses, but these payments, including previous payments, if any, shall not be more than the United States' pro rata of the value of the labor and materials which have been actually put into such construction or reconstruction in conformity to said plans and specifications. The Secretary of Agriculture and the State highway department of each State may jointly determine at what time and in what amounts payments as work progresses shall be made under this act.

"Such payments shall be made by the Secretary of the Treasury, on warrants drawn by the Secretary of Agriculture, to such official or officials or depository as may be designated by the State highway department and authorized under the laws of the State to receive public funds of the State.

"SEC. 14. That should any State fail to maintain any highway within its boundaries after construction or reconstruction under the provisions of this act, the Secretary of Agriculture shall then serve notice upon the State highway department of that fact, and if within 90 days after receipt of such notice said highway has not been placed in proper condition of maintenance, the Secretary of Agriculture shall proceed immediately to have such highway placed in a proper condition of maintenance and charge the cost thereof against the Federal funds allotted to such State, and shall refuse to approve any other project in such State, except as hereinafter provided.

"Upon the reimbursement by the State of the amount expended by the Federal Government for such maintenance, said amount shall be paid into the Federal highway fund for reapportionment among all the States for the construction of roads under this act, and the Secretary of Agriculture shall then approve further projects submitted by the State as in this act provided.

"Whenever it shall become necessary for the Secretary of Agriculture under the provisions of this act to place any highway in a proper condition of maintenance the Secretary of Agriculture shall contract with some responsible party or parties for doing such work: Provided, however, That in case he is not able to secure a satisfactory contract he may purchase, lease, hire, or otherwise obtain all necessary supplies, equipment, and labor, and may operate and maintain such motor and other equipment and facilities as in his judgment are necessary for the proper and efficient performance of his functions.

"SEC. 15. That within two years after this act takes effect the Secretary of Agriculture shall prepare, publish, and distribute a map showing the highways and forest roads that have been selected and approved as a part of the primary or interstate, and the secondary or intercounty systems, and at least annually thereafter shall publish supplementary maps showing his program and the progress made in selection, construction, and reconstruction.

"SEC. 16. That for the purpose of this act the consent of the United States is hereby given to any railroad or canal company to convey to the highway department of any State any part of its right of way or other property in that State acquired by grant from the United States.

"SEC. 17. That if the Secretary of Agriculture determines that any part of the public lands or reservations of the United States is reasonably necessary for the right of way of any highway or forest road or as a source of materials for the construction or maintenance of any such highway or forest road adjacent to such lands or reservations, the Secretary of Agriculture shall file with the Secretary of the department supervising the administration of such land or reservation a map showing the portion of such lands or reservations which it is desired to appropriate.

"If within a period of four months after such filing the said Secretary shall not have certified to the Secretary of Agriculture that the proposed appropriation of such land or material is contrary to the public interest or inconsistent with the purposes for which such land or materials have been reserved, or shall have agreed to the appropriation and transfer under conditions which he deems necessary for the adequate protection and utilization of the reserve, then such land and materials may be appropriated and transferred to the State highway department for such purposes and subject to the conditions so specified.

"If at any time the need for any such lands or materials for such purposes shall no longer exist, notice of the fact shall be given by the State highway department to the Secretary of Agriculture, and such lands or materials shall immediately revert to the control of the Secretary of the department from which they had been appropriated.

"SEC. 18. That the Secretary of Agriculture shall prescribe and promulgate all needful rules and regulations for the carrying out of the provisions of this act, including such recommendations to the Congress and the State highway departments as he may deem necessary for preserving and protecting the highways and insuring the safety of traffic thereon.

"SEC. 19. That on or before the first Monday in December of each year the Secretary of Agriculture shall make a report to Congress, which shall include a detailed statement of the work done, the status of each project undertaken, the allocation of appropriations, an itemized statement of the expenditures and receipts during the preceding fiscal year under this act, an itemized statement of the traveling and other expenses, including a list of employees, their duties, salaries, and traveling expenses, if any, and his recommendations, if any, for new legislation amending or supplementing this act. The Secretary of Agriculture shall also make such special reports as Congress may request.

"SEC. 20. That for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act there is hereby appropriated, out of the moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, $75,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, $25,000,000 of which shall become immediately available, and $50,000,000 of which shall become available January 1, 1922.

"SEC. 21. That so much, not to exceed 2½ per cent, of all moneys hereby or hereafter appropriated for expenditure under the provisions of this act, as the Secretary of Agriculture may deem necessary for administering the provisions of this act and for carrying on necessary highway research and investigational studies independently or in cooperation with the State highway departments and other research agencies, and for publishing the results thereof, shall be deducted for such purposes, available until expended.

"Within 60 days after the close of each fiscal year the Secretary of Agriculture shall determine what part, if any, of the sums theretofore deducted for such purposes will not be needed and apportion such part, if any, for the fiscal year then current in the same manner and on the same basis as are other amounts authorized by this act apportioned among all the States, and shall certify such apportionment to the Secretary of the Treasury and to the State highway departments.

"The Secretary of Agriculture, after making the deduction authorized by this section, shall apportion the remainder of the appropriation made for expenditure under the provision of the act for the fiscal year among the several States in the following manner: One-third in the ratio which the area of each State bears to the total area of all the States; one-third in the ratio which the population of each State bears to the total population of all the States, as shown by the latest available Federal census; one-third in the ratio which the mileage of rural delivery routes and star routes in each State bears to the total mileage of rural delivery and star routes in all the States at the close of the next preceding fiscal year, as shown by certificate of the Postmaster General, which he is directed to make and furnish annually to the Secretary of Agriculture: Provided, That no State shall receive less than one-half of 1 per cent of each year's allotment. All moneys herein or hereafter appropriated for expenditure under the provisions of this act shall be available until the close of the second succeeding fiscal year for which apportionment was made: Provided further, That any sums apportioned to any State under the provisions of the act entitled 'An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes,' approved July 11, 1916, and all acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto, shall be available for expenditure in that State for the purpose set forth in such acts until two years after the close of the respective fiscal years for which any such sums become available, and any amount so apportioned remaining unexpended at the end of the period during which it is available for expenditure under the terms of such acts shall be reapportioned according to the provisions of the act entitled 'An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes," approved July 11, 1916: And provided further, That any amount apportioned under the provisions of this act unexpended at the end of the period during which it is available for expenditure under the terms of this section shall be reapportioned within 60 days thereafter to all the States in the same manner and on the same basis, and certified to the Secretary of the Treasury and the State highway departments in the same way as if it were being apportioned under this act for the first time.

"SEC. 22. That within 60 days after the approval of this act the Secretary of Agriculture shall certify to the Secretary of the Treasury and to each of the State highway departments the sum he has estimated to be deducted for administering the provisions of this act and the sums which he has apportioned to each State for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and on or before January 20 next preceding the commencement of each succeeding fiscal year, and shall make like certificates for each fiscal year.

"SEC. 23. That out of the moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, there is hereby appropriated for the survey, construction, reconstruction, and maintenance of forest roads and trails, the sum of $5,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, available immediately and until expended, and $10,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, available until expended.

"(a) Fifty per cent, but not to exceed $3,000,000 for any one fiscal year, of the appropriation made or that may hereafter be made for expenditure under the provisions of this section shall be expended under the direct supervision of the Secretary of Agriculture in the survey, construction, reconstruction, and maintenance of roads and trails of primary importance for the protection, administration, and utilization of the national forests, or when necessary, for the use and development of resources upon which communities within or adjacent to the national forests are dependent, and shall be apportioned among the several States, Alaska, and Porto Rico by the Secretary of Agriculture, according to the relative needs of the various national forests, taking into consideration the existing transportation facilities, value of timber, or other resources served, relative fire danger, and comparative difficulties of road and trail construction.

"The balance of such appropriations shall be expended by the Secretary of Agriculture in the survey, construction, reconstruction, and maintenance of forest roads of primary importance to the State, counties, or communities within, adjoining, or adjacent to the national forests, and shall be prorated and apportioned by the Secretary of Agriculture for expenditures in the several States, Alaska, and Porto Rico, according to the area and value of the land owned by the Government within the national forests therein as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture from such information, investigation, sources, and departments as the Secretary of Agriculture may deem most accurate.

"(b) Cooperation of Territories, States, and civil subdivisions thereof may be accepted but shall not be required by the Secretary of Agriculture.

"(c) The Secretary of Agriculture may enter into contracts with any Territory, State, or civil subdivision thereof for the construction, reconstruction, or maintenance of any forest road or trail or part thereof.

"(d) Construction work on forest roads or trails estimated to cost $5,000 or more per mile, exclusive of bridges, shall be advertised and let to contract.

"If such estimated cost is less than $5,000 per mile, or if after proper advertising no acceptable bid is received, or the bids are deemed excessive, the work may be done by the Secretary of Agriculture on his own account; and for such purpose the Secretary of Agriculture may purchase, lease, hire, rent, or otherwise obtain all necessary supplies, materials, tools, equipment, and facilities required to perform the work.

"The appropriation made in this section or that may hereafter be made for expenditure under the provisions of this section may be expended for the purpose herein authorized and for the payment of wages, salaries, and other expenses for help employed in connection with such work.

"SEC. 24. That in any State where the existing constitution or laws will not permit the State to provide revenues for the construction, reconstruction, or maintenance of highways, the Secretary of Agriculture shall continue to approve projects for said State until three years after the passage of this act, if he shall find that said State has complied with the provisions of this act in so far as its existing constitution and laws will permit.

"SEC. 25. That if any provision of this act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstances, shall be held invalid, the validity of the remainder of the act and of the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

"SEC. 26. That all acts or parts of acts in any way inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed, and this act shall take effect on its passage."

And the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the amendment of the House to the bill S. 1072 submit the following written statement explaining the effect of the action agreed on. The bill as now submitted in this report for approval of the House is substantially the bill as passed the House, with some exceptions as to appropriations. The principal features of the bill which passed the House were:

1. To have the Federal aid road law administered by the Department of Agriculture under the Bureau of Public Roads instead of by a commission.

2. The initiative in locating roads to receive Federal aid shall remain in the States subject to the approval of the Department of Agriculture instead of a commission at Washington.

3. The several State highway departments, with the approval of the Department of Agriculture, shall lay out a system of roads interstate and intercounty in character and not interstate alone.

4. The funds from the several States put up to match Federal aid, from whatever source derived, shall be subject to the direct control of the highway department of the several States.

5. The several States shall maintain and keep in good repair at all times all highways constructed with Federal aid. A penalty is provided for failure to put in proper repairs after 90 days' notice from the Department of Agriculture.

6. In all States having more than 5 per cent of its area in unappropriated public lands greater participation in Federal aid is allowed in proportion to the amount of such unappropriated public lands.

7. No State shall receive less than one-half of 1 per cent of the funds available for the construction of highways.

8. Special provisions were made to take care of roads and trails within, adjacent to, and serving forest reservations and other reservations under Federal control.

9. The time given each State to match and take up the Federal aid allotted to it has been extended for a period of one year, making the time two years instead of one year.

10. Three years' time from and after the passage of this act is given to those States whose laws or constitution will not permit the State to provide revenues for the construction, reconstruction, or maintenance of highways to change their constitution or laws to meet the requirements of this act.

The foregoing are the essential features of the road bill as it passed the House and are fully incorporated in the bill as it passed the Senate and are now set forth in the conference report.

Some minor changes were made in the Senate amendment, also the appropriations, and now embraced in the conference report, and are as follows:

1. A modification of the definition of the terms "construction" and "maintenance." The term "construction" will not include the expense or work of locating, surveying, mapping, or cost of rights of way.

2. The House bill provided that the amount expended by the Secretary of Agriculture in administering the provisions of this act should not exceed 3 per cent of the amount appropriated to be expended under the provisions of this act. The Senate amendment provides for 2½ per cent, and this was agreed to by the House conferees.

3. The House bill provided that the Secretary of Agriculture should determine the type and width of roads constructed with Federal aid. The conferees agreed that all interstate roads constructed under the provisions of this act should have a wearing surface not less than 18 feet in width unless, in the opinion of the Secretary of Agriculture, it is rendered impracticable by physical conditions, excessive costs, probable traffic requirements, or legal obstacles. The Senate amendment provided for 20 feet instead of 18 feet, but with these exceptions it in effect makes the Secretary of Agriculture the judge of the width of the roads, as provided in the House bill.

4. The Senate amendment agreed to by the conferees provides that the Secretary of Agriculture shall provide an adequate system of accounting for the road department and make itemized and detailed reports of all money expended under the provision of this act to Congress annually.

5. The bill as amended by the Senate provided for an appropriation of $75,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, to aid the States in the construction of highways, $25,000,000 of which should become immediately available and $50,000,000 to be available six months after the passage of this act. The bill which passed the House last February provided $100,000,000 for the present fiscal year. The Senate fixed the sum at $75,000,000 on the recommendation of the Secretary of Agriculture. As many months have elapsed since the passage of the bill in the Senate it was deemed advisable by the conferees and so agreed to that $25,000,000 shall be immediately available and the other $50,000,000 shall be available January 1, 1922. The action was deemed wise on account of the unemployment situation throughout the country and it being a favorable time to secure contracts for the construction of roads at greatly reduced cost.

6. The Senate amendment provides, and agreed to by the conferees, that there be appropriated for the survey, construction, reconstruction, and maintenance of forest roads and trails the sum of $5,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, available immediately and until expended, and $10,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, available until expended. This money is necessary to protect the rich timber forests of the Nation in the reservations under Federal control, and the two-year program is necessary in order that this work may be done more systematically and more cheaply to the Government.

7. Fifty per cent, but not to exceed $3,000,000 for any one fiscal year, of the appropriation made or that may hereafter be made shall be expended under the direct supervision of the Secretary of Agriculture for the construction and maintenance of roads and trails of primary importance to the national forests, and the balance of such appropriation for the survey, construction, and maintenance of forest roads of primary importance to the States, counties, or communities within, adjoining, or adjacent to the national forest.

J. M. ROBSION,
ROY O. WOODRUFF,
R. L. DOUGHTON,
ED. B. ALMON,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order on the conference report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. WALSH. The conferees have exceeded their authority under the rules of the House in that, first, they have reported a provision making an appropriation of $5,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, for forest roads and trails, carried in section 23, and $10,000,000 for the year ending June 30, 1923, to be available until expended.

I make the further point of order that the conferees are not authorized to agree to various appropriations made in this bill, notwithstanding the action of the House last Thursday in passing a resolution, which resolution, if the Chair will permit, is found on page 6897 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, in the left-hand column, which reads:

Resolved, That the managers on the part of the House on the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. 1072) be, and they are hereby, given specific authority, as provided by clause 2 of Rule XX, to agree to an amendment of the Senate providing for an appropriation.

Clause 2 of Rule XX reads as follows:

No amendment of the Senate to a general appropriation bill which would be in violation of the provision of clause 2 of Rule XXI, if said amendment had originated in the House, nor any amendment of the Senate providing an appropriation upon any bill other than a general appropriation bill, shall be agreed to by the managers on the part of the House unless specific authority to agree to such amendment shall be first given by the House by a separate vote on every such amendment.

Now, Mr. Speaker, here is a bill carrying an appropriation of $75,000,000, I believe, for aiding the States in the construction of post roads and rural roads and carrying an appropriation for building roads through forests and the construction of forest roads and trails. That provision, in my opinion, is clearly beyond the scope of this measure, and, being beyond the scope of the measure, notwithstanding it is inserted in the bill by the Senate by way of an amendment, unless specific authority is given to the House to agree to that particular amendment, I submit that they are without authority under the rule, notwithstanding the resolution to agree to it. The purpose of that rule——

The SPEAKER. May the Chair ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. WALSH. Certainly.

The SPEAKER. Does the Chair understand that the gentleman contends that that amendment of the Senate would have been out of order, irrespective of our rules about appropriations, and therefore is not cured by this?

Mr. WALSH. Yes. That is my contention with reference to that particular item.

Mr. MONDELL. Well, Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. I do not quite understand the gentleman's contention or the gentleman's answer to the Speaker.

Mr. WALSH. Well, my answer to the Speaker was "yes," as to that particular item.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will be glad to hear the gentleman.

Mr. MONDELL. It is not clear in my mind. The Speaker's inquiry was, as I understand it, whether or no the action of the conferees was contrary to the rules of the House over and beyond the matter of appropriation.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman not only did not understand my response to the Speaker, but he did not understand the Speaker's inquiry. The Speaker asked if my contention was that that portion of the Senate amendment would have been out of order, notwithstanding the resolution that was passed permitting the conferees to agree to the appropriation. I was making the contention that that particular item is beyond the scope of the committee which reported this bill.

Mr. MONDELL. Well, why?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman on that point.

Mr. WALSH. Well, if the gentleman will refer to Rule XI, paragraph 54a, he will see that it creates a Committee on Roads:

To matters relating to the construction or maintenance of roads, other than appropriations therefor—to the Committee on Roads: Provided, That it shall not be in order for any bill providing general legislation in relation to roads to contain any provision for any specific road, nor for any bill in relation to a specific road to embrace a provision in relation to any other specific road.

Now, forest trails are not within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Roads. The national forests come within the jurisdiction of another committee, and in so far as they are embraced within the jurisdiction of another committee, an appropriation for that purpose in a general road bill is equivalent to making an appropriation for a specific road. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, with reference to section 23 the conferees in my judgment have exceeded their authority.

With reference to the resolution passd by the House, that was an endeavor to permit the conferees to agree to an appropriation. The purpose of that rule, as it was stated here when it was offered, was to permit the House to have a separate vote on appropriations that had been inserted in measures originating in the House and which would have been out of order had they been offered by Members on the floor as amendments to the bill, inserted in the other body and coming back to this House and being sent to conference.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman inform us who made such a statement?

Mr. WALSH. I appreciate the fact that the language I employ is not as choice as that utilized by the gentleman whom I have in mind, but the general import, in much better language, was stated by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. When?

Mr. WALSH. At the time and since the time when we adopted that rule.

Mr. MONDELL. Where?

Mr. WALSH. Not far from the vicinage which is occupied by the distinguished gentleman at the present time.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman from Wyoming does not recall any expression of his on the subject bearing any such interpretation.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman, of course, is familiar with the rules?

Mr. MADDEN. And has a very convenient memory.

Mr. WALSH. And it was, I think, generally agreed and understood by Members at the time of the adoption of that rule that before conferees could agree to a Senate amendment carrying appropriations, specific authority for each appropriation must be given by the House before it could be agreed to, and we have operated under that rule, and we have had separate votes upon various appropriation amendments here in the House, and many a measure has been sent back to conference, and the conferees have agreed to them.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I was wondering if the gentleman's point in regard to the conferees exceeding their authority is well taken, because of the fact that the original bill simply exceeded the authority of the committee. As I understand it, the conferees exceed their authority when they go beyond the four corners of Senate or House bills. Now, if this bill as originally brought in and considered in the House was in violation of the rules of the House at that time, and yet it was considered and went to conference, did the conferees exceed their authority because of the fact that the provision might originally have been subject to a point of order?

Mr. WALSH. Well, that is not involved in the contention I am making, if the gentleman please.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Possibly I did not understand the gentleman. I doubt if that would follow. Take, for instance, these trails which the gentleman refers to. That provision was in the bill that passed the House, or in the bill that passed the Senate, so that it came within the jurisdiction of the conferees.

Mr. WALSH. That was a part of the Senate amendment.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. So that it came within the grasp of the conferees.

Mr. WALSH. It was a part of the bill that was sent to conference. It was an item in the Senate amendment. As I was saying, we have had votes upon items inserted in the coordinate branch by way of amendment, making appropriations which would not have been in order when the measure was under discussion in the House. We have had separate votes on those amendments, and the measure has then returned to conference and has been reported to the House and agreed to.

Now, the resolution passed last Thursday, I think, was to the effect that the conferees upon this road bill were given authority to agree to an amendment of the Senate carrying an appropriation.

Mr. STAFFORD. "An appropriation."

Mr. WALSH. An appropriation. Now, there are several appropriations carried in the bill. The resolution clearly, in my judgment, would not authorize the conferees to agree to each appropriation in the Senate amendment, because although the resolution says that specific authority is given to the conferees to agree to an amendment, the rule provides that there shall be a separate vote on every amendment. Now, can the conferees, under a resolution such as that, specifying its plain intent and purpose from a careful or a cursory reading of the language, agree to several amendments carrying appropriations when the resolution agreed to says they are given authority to agree to an amendment carrying an appropriation?

The SPEAKER. Is there more than one amendment?

Mr. WALSH. There is more than one appropriation.

The SPEAKER. Is there more than one amendment?

Mr. WALSH. The Senate struck out all after the enacting clause of the bill and inserted a new bill, which, of course, makes one amendment. The conferees have practically rewritten the measure.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. DOWELL. Is it not true that this was one appropriation referred to specifically in the rule which was adopted? It is all included in one amendment, and is covered specifically in the rule, and does not come within the general rule which provides for a vote upon each individual appropriation, because in this instance it is all included within one appropriation, although it is itemized in two or three items.

Mr. WALSH. Has the gentleman read secton 23 of the conference report?

Mr. DOWELL. Yes; I have just finished reading it.

Mr. WALSH. It says:

That out of the moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, there is hereby appropriated for the survey, construction, reconstruction, and maintenance of forest roads and trails the sum of $5,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, available immediately and until expended, and $10,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, available until expended.

Mr. DOWELL. Yes; but the specific rule that was adopted the other day authorized the conferees to agree to this entire amendment, and my contention is that it covers every item in this amendment.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman stated that there was only one appropriation. There is more than one appropriation.

Mr. DOWELL. They are divided into separate items.

Mr. WALSH. Nevertheless they are separate appropriations out of the Treasury.

Mr. DOWELL. It all comes within one amendment and could have been referred to in no other manner than was referred to in the rule adopted.

Mr. WALSH. Well, Mr. Speaker, the rule provides that specific authority to agree to such amendments shall first be given by a separate vote on every such amendment. The House has not voted on this amendment. The amendment is not set forth in the resolution. They say in an indefinite way that there is an amendment of the Senate carrying an appropriation, and confers authority to agree to it. The House has not voted the appropriation. There is no specific vote on that amendment as required by the rule. There is no identification in the resolution passed last Thursday of what the amendment was, what the appropriation was, or in what respect it was in violation of the rule.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. DOWELL. The gentleman, as I take it, contends that the rule applies specifically to a $75,000,000 appropriation.

Mr. WALSH. Nobody knows what it applies to.

Mr. DOWELL. It applies to one amendment; that is contended for by the gentleman?

Mr. WALSH. To one appropriation.

Mr. DOWELL. Assuming that it applies to $75,000,000, does the gentleman contend that the conferees, if they agree to that, when they bring in their report there must be a specific vote on the amendment that the conferees have agreed to?

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman contends what the rule says; that is, the language "by a separate vote on every such amendment."

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule. In this case there is only one amendment. Rule XX, clause 2, provides that there shall be a specific vote on each Senate amendment introducing a new appropriation. The House last week passed a special resolution providing that the managers on the part of the House "are hereby given specific authority, as provided in clause 2, Rule XX, to agree to an amendment of the Senate providing for an appropriation."

It seems to the Chair very clear that that was intended to authorize the conferees to do exactly what they have done, to agree to an amendment containing an appropriation. It is asserted that it contains more than one appropriation. But it was one amendment, and obviously the purpose of this special resolution was to prevent the application in this case of Rule XX, clause 2, and to preclude the necessity which would otherwise exist of reporting a disagreement, getting specific authority on each amendment, and then go back to conference. It was a short cut, it seems to the Chair. The intention is perfectly clear, and it seems to the Chair that the amendment is legal and orderly, and the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. WALSH. Will the Chair permit a parliamentary inquiry?

The SPEAKER. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH. Is it the ruling of the Chair that if a resolution such as was passed last Thursday authorizing the conferees to agree to any amendment or amendments, the House need not vote on the particular amendment?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will meet that question when it arises.

Mr. WALSH. It has arisen here.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it has not arisen.

Mr. WALSH. The House has not had a chance to vote on the Senate amendments.

Mr. MONDELL. It will when it votes the conference report up or down.

Mr. WALSH. That does not pass specifically on the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's query is whether it would be in order if there are several amendments to allow the conferees to agree to them in gross by a rule in advance. The Chair is in doubt about that and prefers not to express an opinion now. But the Chair thinks that a rule could easily be drawn which would provide for that, but the Chair is not sure that this rule would provide that.

Mr. WALSH. I am not concerned about it except for the fact that while the conferees were authorized to agree to an amendment carrying an appropriation, the conferees have written another bill. They have not agreed to the Senate amendment as they were authorized to do. They may have agreed to that part carrying an appropriation but they have put in other appropriations not in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, there seems to be a considerable demand for time in the discussion of the conference report, and I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION] may be extended half an hour.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Kentucky may be extended half an hour. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Reserving the right to object, I think there are some gentlemen on this side of the Chamber who would like to have a little more than half an hour. There are some gentlemen on this side who are opposed to the bill. Would it be agreeable to let the gentleman from Kentucky control one hour and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HUDSPETH] control an hour?

Mr. MONDELL. I think, Mr. Speaker, that is hardly in harmony with our general policy and action on conference reports. I think the gentleman from Kentucky will be entirely fair in the division of time. If the gentleman from Tennessee thinks an additional 30 minutes will not be sufficient, I will consider it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Let us make it two hours.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Kentucky may be extended to two hours.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Kentucky be extended to two hours instead of one hour. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROBSION. Mr. Speaker, we have before us now for consideration and adoption the report of the conferees on the good roads bill. The conferees of the House and Senate reached a unanimous agreement, and we are now asking our respective bodies to adopt our report. No doubt the Members of the House are familiar with the road bill that passed the House. While the Senate amended the bill in many respects, yet as a result of the conference and by agreement of the conferees we bring to you substantially the same bill that passed the House. All of the principal legislative features of the House bill are included in the conference report now up for adoption. The House passed a bill several months ago authorizing $100,000,000 for roads for the present fiscal year. The amendment offered in the Senate to our House bill provides an appropriation of $75,000,000 for the States and $5,000,000 to aid the roads and trails in the national forests. This appropriation is for the remainder of the present fiscal year. Of this $80,000,000, $30,000,000 is available upon the passage of this bill and the other $50,000,000 is available January 1, 1922.

The bill as now presented to you provides that this law shall be administered by the Department of Agriculture, through its Bureau of Public Roads, and not a commission; that the initiative in locating roads to receive Federal aid shall remain in the States, subject to the approval of the Secretary of Agriculture; that the State shall be the unit in dealing with the Federal Government in matching Federal aid; that the State shall maintain and keep in repair the roads constructed with Federal aid. This bill provides for a system of interstate and intercounty roads. If the provisions of the bill are carried out, when the system is completed it will bring a good road—a good pike road—within 2 miles of at least 85 per cent of the people of the United States; that is, 85 per cent of the people of the United States will not be more than 2 miles from a good pike road, and, of course, many of them will be on a good pike road. This will bring a good pike road to every county seat in America.

President Harding, in his message to Congress, stated that Federal aid for good roads had perhaps become the settled policy of the people of the United States, never to be abandoned, but he insisted that the Federal aid road law should be so amended or changed as to provide a connected system of highways in this country. This bill provides for a connected system of interstate and intercounty highways. The President also urged that provision in the law should be made to insure the maintenance and upkeep of these roads when once constructed. This bill provides that the State must keep these roads in good repair at all times throughout the year when once built with Federal aid. It means that when we once get a good road we will always have a good road.

This bill as embodied in the conference report has the approval of the Federal road department, the road departments of practically every State in the Union, the American Federation of Farm Bureaus, other farm organizations, and thousands of commercial bodies and automobile associations. The unemployment conference appointed by President Harding has been urging the passage of this bill. No measure before Congress has met with more hearty approval and indorsement from the American people. It will put on foot road construction and other business operations that will furnish employment to something like one-half million of men, and there will be spent for road construction, perhaps, a quarter of a billion dollars before June 30, 1922. This bill brings relief in a substantial way to those Western States having large areas of unappropriated public land. It provides five millions this year and ten millions for the next year to build roads and trails through our national forest reservations in all of the States having such reservations and in Alaska and Porto Rico. The Government owns more than 150,000,000 acres of well-timbered land. It is necessary to build these roads and trails into these vast timbered areas so that protection may be given to our national forests from fire, and so that the Federal Government can make use of its forest lands for grazing purposes and to dispose of dead timber. At this time the Government secures a revenue of $5,000,000 per year for rents of pasture land and from the sale of dead timber. With these roads and trails this revenue will be greatly increased and protection will be afforded to our great national forest reserve. The Government has been losing millions every year because of forest fires and lack of ingress and egress and regress to these forest lands.

This bill declares the road policy of the United States. Future appropriations will be expended under the provisions of this law. There should be a bill introduced and passed authorizing the Committee on Appropriations to appropriate as much as $100,000,000 per year for Federal aid for the next five or ten years, and it is my purpose to introduce such bill when the present bill becomes a law, so that we may arrange a great road-building program for the next 5 to 10 years and not have to wrangle over an appropriation each year. I think such a plan would meet the general approval of the country.

A great interstate and intercounty system of highways will go far toward settling the transportation problem and will be a great impetus to commerce. It will bring the producers and consumers of America together and be most helpful to both the producers and consumers. Money spent in building up this great system of highway will mean more for preparedness and national defense than money put into a large Army or Navy. Guns and battleships, as well as aircraft, become obsolete and out of date soon after they are constructed. A single great battleship now costs something like $30,000,000. Good roads will never go out of date. They will always be a mighty factor in time of war in mobilizing both our men and our material. At the same time they mean so much for the wealth and prosperity of the Nation in times of peace. They promote agriculture, high-class farm life, good schools, good churches, and a better citizenship.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBSION. Yes.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The gentleman does not mean to say that the present law does not provide for maintenance of projects upon which Federal aid has been spent?

Mr. ROBSION. It does provide; but this goes further. So far the present law has meant very little toward maintenance.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Does not the gentleman recall that the law provides that the Federal Government has the right to withhold funds until the road has been maintained in accordance with the law?

Mr. ROBSION. Yes.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Then, of course, it is a fault of administration and not of law.

Mr. ROBSION. We are going further. There are two road thoughts in the country. A great many friends of Federal aid had it in their mind that the Federal Government should only contribute to those highways that were interstate in character, transcontinental lines.

The other thought was that these roads that receive Federal aid should be interstate and intercounty in character, bringing the benefits to every county in America. The bill as finally written which comes to you for your approval provides for a system of highways that is both interstate and intercounty in character. It provides for a connected system of highways, and further provides that when a road is once built with Federal aid the State as a unit must see to it that that highway is maintained and equipped in good condition every day in the year and all of the time.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBSION. Yes.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. What methods are prescribed to enforce that provision?

Mr. ROBSION. If a road once built with Federal aid gets out of repair, the Secretary of Agriculture notifies the State that the road is out of repair and must be put in order. If the State should neglect for more than 90 days to put it in repair, then the Secretary of Agriculture may let contracts on the part of the Federal Government to put the road in repair and withhold further Federal aid until the State refunded this amount.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBSION. Yes.

Mr. LAYTON. And invade the State if the State does not want to continue the burden of that highway?

Mr. ROBSION. When the State accepts the Federal money to help build its highway, then the Federal Government is concerned that that money should not go to waste, and that a good highway shall be maintained.

Mr. LAYTON. I am very much in favor of good highways, but at the same time I want to understand just exactly where this thing is going to end. What I want to have kept in the mind of everyone is that the Government has no money at all. There has been very much talk about the Government going to do this and going to do that, with Government money, but everything that is paid out by the Government is taken out of the pockets of the people. It is not the Government's money at all, but the money that belongs to the people. In view of that I want to repeat my question. Suppose, for instance, in the gentleman's State or in my State for reasons that were acceptable to the people of his State or my State, they did not want to longer bear the burden of maintaining a particular highway. Does the gentleman say that the Federal Government can then invade the State and penalize the State and its citizens?

Mr. ROBSION. Of course, the gentleman is assuming that his State highway department and the Federal Government are going to build a road foolishly at a place where a road is not required. I would say that when you construct a road in a proper place there will be no time as long as this country lasts when that road ought not to be maintained and kept in order, and the investment of the State and of the Federal Government protected and cared for.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield for a brief question?

Mr. ROBSION. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. In section 5 of the conference report there is this provision:

> Before any projects are approved in any State, such State, through its State highway department, shall select or designate a system of highways not to exceed 7 per cent of the total highway mileage of such State as shown by the record of the State highway department at the time of the passage of this act.
> Upon this system—

I presume it is upon the system of the 7 per cent—

> upon this system all Federal-aid apportionments shall be expended.

Upon what basis did the conferees select that arbitrary 7 per cent of roads?

Mr. ROBSION. That means 7 per cent of all rural and star-route roads of each State. The truth about it is, very few of the States will lay out a system of as much as 7 per cent. Some States might think they ought to have a system of 10 per cent; some might think that there should be only a half per cent. I think the great State of Illinois has laid out a system for the improvement of highways by the use of Federal aid that perhaps is less than 1 per cent or 1½ per cent; I may be mistaken. This 7 per cent meets the requirements of all the States, and when the 7 per cent is completed more can be added.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I judge from that that the amount of 7 per cent was allowed from the experience and observation heretofore in the different States?

Mr. ROBSION. Yes.

Mr. LARSEN of Georgia. If the gentleman will permit me to make this suggestion, Is it not a fact that the hearings before the Roads Committee showed that 7 per cent could build a road system that would serve about 85 per cent of the people of the various States?

Mr. ROBSION. Yes; it is shown that if all the States would build a system of 7 per cent of its road mileage it would bring improved highways within at least 2 miles of at least 85 per cent of the people of America—that is, 85 per cent of the people of America would live not more than 2 miles from a good road, and of course most of them would live on or much nearer a good road.

Mr. GENSMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBSION. I will.

Mr. GENSMAN. In the event the National Government discovers the road is not being properly prepared and taken care of, and they see that it is going down rapidly, from what fund is such road restored? Is it taken out of the next year's appropriation?

Mr. ROBSION. It is taken out of the fund allotted to that State.

Mr. GENSMAN. Regardless of whether or not they have asked that appropriation or asked that allotment?

Mr. ROBSION. Well, these funds are allotted to the State, not upon the asking of the State.

Mr. GENSMAN. I understand that.

Mr. ROBSION. Upon certain certifications made by the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of the Treasury allots it to the States.

Mr. GENSMAN. And is taken out of that year or taken out of any year?

Mr. ROBSION. It is taken out of the fund available to that State, and that State can secure no more Federal aid until it pays that sum back into the Federal Treasury, and as a penalty the State loses this amount so required by the Federal Government to repair the State's road.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield——

Mr. ROBSION. I will.

Mr. CANNON. Because I want to know. I was under the impression that the Government contributed one-half of the money and the State one-half to construct these roads in their respective States. Am I correct in that assumption?

Mr. ROBSION. The gentleman is correct, with the exception——

Mr. CANNON. Very well.

Mr. ROBSION. That certain of the Western States that have unappropriated public lands, some consideration is given to them.

Mr. CANNON. That is when the Government owns the land and they make an exception there?

Mr. ROBSION. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. Now, then, imagine the whole system completed, the Government contributing one-half and the State one-half, suppose the State sits quietly down, folds it hands, and says: "We will not provide one-half for maintenance." What then?

Mr. ROBSION. Well, I should say this in reply to that question: That there has no greater thought come to the country than the improvement of highways, and there never will be a time when the American citizenship would be willing to take a backward step and sit down as is supposed by the question of the gentleman.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman allow me one other statement?

Mr. ROBSION. I will.

Mr. CANNON. Under the leadership of Clay the national road was built, if I recollect, from Cumberland out to Columbus, and it was to go to St. Louis. It was completed by the Government, but when the question of maintenance came Congress refused to make the appropriation to maintain, and then gave the road by act to the States and the States gave to the counties, and instead of being an improvement upon Mother Earth for transportation, they were in the way.

Mr. ROBSION. If the distinguished gentleman from Illinois will permit, we are providing by this law that such mistakes shall not be repeated.

Mr. CANNON. How?

Mr. ROBSION. By provisions of law. In the first place, it was thought in this country that we should build a system of transcontinental lines solely with Federal money, but with an interstate and intercounty system hooked up with 85 per cent of the citizenship of America, we have secured the interest of all the people of America, and they are going to back this program and maintain this program.

Mr. CANNON. Well, the gentleman is more optimistic than I am.

Mr. SNELL. In section 23 there is a slight appropriation of $15,000,000 to take care of roads, trails, surveys, construction and reconstruction work on trails, and roads on forest improved lands. That is a direct appropriation for a specific purpose to take care of the Government land?

Mr. ROBSION. Not necessarily of public lands. They are public lands unappropriated, and they are forest lands in the forest reservations.

Mr. SNELL. Do we not make appropriations to take care of roads and trails in all the public lands specifically?

Mr. ROBSION. No.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman is mistaken about that. In every current appropriation we provide——

Mr. SNELL. Do not we build all the roads on the public lands out of Federal aid, regardless of specific State aid?

Mr. ROBSION. Doubtless all that are being built; but I do not recall any being built. They are pike roads, and things like that.

Mr. SNELL. You do not take into consideration State aid in this bill?

Mr. ROBSION. I do not know as I understand your question.

Mr. SNELL. There is no individual State money put into Government hands as to individual States for forest roads and trails?

Mr. ROBSION. You mean the State revenues are not used to help build a road on public lands?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. ROBSION. Every State in the Union, I think, does aid.

Mr. SNELL. As I understand it, if you take the money appropriated in this bill, is any of the money used to build roads on public lands?

Mr. ROBSION. That $15,000,000?

Mr. SNELL. Outside of that. That is a specific appropriation. But if the State of Colorado had allotted to it $5,000,000 outside of that and they put up $5,000,000, would that money be used to build roads on public lands?

Mr. ROBSION. Partly. They have to go through the public lands.

Mr. SNELL. I want to know definitely whether that is so or not. That is as I understand it. But you say it is so?

Mr. ROBSION. It is true; yes; and because it is true is the reason we make some exceptions.

Mr. SNELL. I can not find anything in the bill that says that.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman point out where there is any authorization or direction for the State to use their money on public lands? Will the gentleman state any instance in the public road act where they have used any money on the public lands?

Mr. ROBSION. Many of the States have not only used State revenues to aid in the building of public roads in the States on public lands, but they have gone further, namely, through Indian reservations.

Mr. STAFFORD. They are not permitted to go onto the publice lands or onto Indian reservations and use the public lands.

Mr. ROBSION. You can not stop when you come to the public lands.

Mr. TILSON. Is there not this confusion in the mind of some gentlemen between public lands and public forests? In the case of public lands which can be taken up by homestead or are sold that is one thing; in the case of a Government forest or reservation that is another thing.

Mr. SNELL. They are all public lands.

Mr. TILSON. While the Government puts up money to build roads through forest and Government reservations, I understand if roads are built through what are known as public lands it may well be part Federal and part State, or the State may build the roads of its own accord?

Mr. SNELL. One section provides for building through public lands.

Mr. ROBSION. Subsection (b) provides:

> Cooperation of Territories, States, and civil subdivisions thereof may be accepted but shall not be required by the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. SNELL. May be accepted but not required?

Mr. ROBSION. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. I can not see anything in the bill that requires their building roads on public lands.

Mr. OSBORNE. For the information of the gentleman I will state that in the State of California we have expended somewhere near $50,000,000 on public roads. Many of those roads pass through public lands; they pass through forest reservations, and they pass through deserts, which are public lands. And that is the answer to the gentleman's question.

Mr. SNELL. Any of it out of this fund?

Mr. OSBORNE. Not a cent.

Mr. ROBSION. You will find that is true, as I recall now, of every western State.

Mr. OSBORNE. I think Arizona is the same way.

Mr. LAZARO. As I understand, during the hearings on this bill there were a good many people here in favor of a commission instead of a bureau to administer this law. Will the gentleman tell us what led the committee to adopt the bureau system instead of a commission? I am asking for information, because in my State they are framing a good road law, and there is quite a difference of opinion as to whether this law should be administered by a commission or a bureau.

Mr. ROBSION. Well, it was the sense of our committee that the administration of this law in the Department of Agriculture had been a success and much time had been consumed and millions of dollars expended in building up an organization, and it would not be economy now to substitute something else.

Mr. LAZARO. But if there had been no organization existing would your committee have listened to those who were heard in advocacy of the commission?

Mr. ROBSION. I was very much opposed to having a commission located here in Washington employed in locating and laying out the roads in the States. I want the initiative in locating roads to be in the States, subject to approval of the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. SNELL. I would like to have the gentleman explain what is meant by section 6 of the statement, as follows:

> In all States having more than 5 per cent of its area in unappropriated public lands greater participation in Federal aid is allowed in proportion to the amount of such unappropriated public lands.

Mr. ROBSION. Just briefly now. I must hurry along. For instance, in some States 10 per cent of its area is unappropriated public land. Now, apart from that the State contributes half and the Government contributes half in the construction of roads, but in a State with 10 per cent unappropriated lands that State would be permitted to use 55 cents of every dollar from Federal aid to 45 cents contributed by itself in building the Federal-aid road. That is all it means. That is, one-half of the percentage of the public land is added to the 50 per cent.

Mr. LAYTON. The idea being that the State is poorer by reason of that percentage of public lands?

Mr. ROBSION. Oh, yes; and the road must be built through the public lands, and it is owned by the Government, and it is improving Government land.

Mr. OSBORNE. And no taxes paid?

Mr. ROBSION. And no taxes paid.

Now, the time is running. Let me make a connected statement. Congress has heard quite a good deal about the money not being expended and so on. I wish to say that there now remains only $68,500,000, or something like that, of the nearly $300,000,000 appropriated that has not been put under final contract, and this is due to some seven or eight States, and those States are Alabama, California, Indiana, Missouri, New York, Ohio, Texas, and Nevada. The reason why Alabama has not used her fund is because of troubles in her constitution, which they are ironing out and getting into shape, and so on. Of this $68,500,000 alone now that is available about half is absorbed by these eight States. There are something like 13 States that have consumed all of their funds, and their road work is now stopped. The Federal projects are now held up because of lack of funds. There only remains about $14,911,000 that has not been taken up by contracts or for which advertisements have not been made for contracts.

Mr. REED of New York. What is the reason why New York State has not used up its funds?

Mr. ROBSION. Perhaps the gentleman from New York knows more about that than I. But I understand they have been delaying for new construction rather than use their money for reconstruction.

Now, the bill as passed the House provided that not more than 3 per cent should be used for the administration of this fund. We felt that it could be cut down to 2½ per cent, and it has been fixed at 2½ per cent.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBSION. Yes.

Mr. LAYTON. In case a State had practically completed its interstate highways before it received any benefit from the Federal Government, is there any provision to be made for a rebate or anything of that kind to those States?

Mr. ROBSION. Each State will get its share, and the gentleman's State is favored above many of the other States.

Mr. LAYTON. Oh, no; it is not favored. Our State is the second smallest State in the Union, and yet we pay more money into the Federal Treasury than nine of the States south of Mason and Dixon's line together, and more than nine of the States north of Mason and Dixon's line together.

Mr. ROBSION. It is very fine for the gentleman to feel that way about it, but he is in error.

Mr. LAYTON. Is not that the case? What is the basis?

Mr. ROBSION. It is also based on your population and your road mileage, which were the things of which you boasted. But your State is allowed one-half of 1 per cent.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Is there any change from the Senate plan? The States are required to put up the same percentage?

Mr. ROBSION. Yes. The States must put up the same fifty-fifty.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Speaker, how much time does the gentleman wish to yield? Several on this side desire a little time.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman is not authorized to yield time to be parceled out.

Mr. HUDSPETH. That was what I was trying to ascertain.

Mr. ROBSION. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HUDSPETH].

Mr. HUDSPETH. I understand, then, that that is just for myself, that I have no right to yield a portion of my time?

Mr. ROBSION. The gentleman can yield a portion of that time.

Mr. HUDSPETH. How much time does the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBSION. Fifteen minutes. We are going to try to divide it equitably.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to my colleague from Texas [Mr. BLACK].

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MCARTHUR). The gentleman from Texas is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I do not oppose an appropriation at this time for the purpose of providing funds to be used by the Federal Government to aid the States in the building of public highways, but there are some provisions in this bill which bring about such a fundamental change in the existing law, and especially with reference to the present method of building highways in the State which I have the honor to represent in part, that I do not feel that I can support this conference report, and I expect to vote against it. The acceptance of some of the provisions contained in this conference report is entirely too high a price to pay for the appropriation which the bill carries. What are some of these objectionable features? In section 7, on page 21, it is provided that "before any project shall be approved by the Secretary of Agriculture for any State such State shall make provisions for State funds required each year of such States by this act for construction, reconstruction, and maintenance of all Federal-aid highways within the State, which funds shall be under direct control of the State highway department."

I want to call the House's particular attention to the last sentence of the section which I have just read. It is an entirely new requirement from that of existing law. The bill also, in defining what are State funds, on pages 16 and 17 of the bill, defines such funds to be those "funds raised under the authority of the State or any political or other subdivision thereof." That definition in itself would be broad enough to cover the situation in our State so far as the raising of the necessary funds for road building is concerned and would be all right if it were not for the additional language that is added at the end of the paragraph, which says that these funds shall be "made available for expenditure under the direct control of the State highway department." In our State the State as a political unit does not have the authority to issue bonds to construct or maintain public roads. That authority is vested in the counties and the subdivisions of counties. The system has worked admirably and I know of no considerable sentiment among our people to change it—and I may say that very few States, in recent years at least, have led Texas in the construction of permanent highways. As the best evidence of that fact let me read from a statement recently made by the Bureau of Public Roads of the United States Department of Agriculture, and which was published in the Texas Highway Bulletin for the month of October, 1921. The statement is as follows:

TEXAS LEADS IN ROAD WORK.

At the close of the fifth fiscal year since the passage of the Federal aid road act, which was signed by the President July 11, 1916, the States and Federal Government had completed 7,469 miles of road and 17,977 miles additional were under construction and half completed.

Texas ranked first in the number of miles completed with 682.92 miles out of 7,469, the total for all States. The total estimated cost of the 682.92 miles was $5,812,851.01, of which $2,446,065.81 was Federal aid. Texas also comes to the front with 1,631.97 miles under construction, leading Iowa, second to Texas, by almost 500 miles. The total estimated cost of the 1,631.97 miles under construction is $23,405,280.13, of which $8,947.19 is Federal aid, being over $2,000,000 more than her closest second. Illinois leads all States in the amount of Federal aid on projects completed and under construction with $11,807,906. Texas is a close second with $11,393,425.

The highway department, working in cooperation with the counties and the Federal Government, has made great strides in road work within the last year. Many miles of roads have been completed and many more will be completed within the next year. The hearty cooperation given the department by the county officials has been largely responsible for the wonderful progress made in good roads development in this State.

Now, this bill would change the existing law, under which these highly desirable results have been obtained, and would make it necessary for a county which had voted bonds to aid in the construction of a Federal-aid project to turn over the proceeds of such bond issue to be expended under the direct control of the State highway commission.

The words "direct control" constitute a very broad term, and it occurs to me that it would be better to leave the method prescribed in section 3 of the existing law unamended. From information which I have gathered both from observation and reading of highway construction in Texas I am led to believe that the method of existing law would be much preferable to the change which is proposed in this conference report. Our present national highway law takes care of States situated like Texas in the following language, contained as a proviso to section 3 of the act of July 11, 1916:

Provided, That in States where the constitution prohibits the State from engaging in any work of internal improvements, then the amount of the appropriations under this act apportioned to any such State shall be turned over to the highway department of the State or to the governor of said State to be expended under the provisions of this act and under the rules and regulations of the Department of Agriculture, when any number of counties in any such State shall appropriate or provide the proportion or share needed to be raised in order to entitle such State to its part of the appropriation apportioned under this act.

I have just cited figures to show that under the method provided by the above law, Texas is leading all States in the Union in good road building. Why change it?

Under our present law when Dallas County, for example—one of the large counties of our State, where there has been a great deal of road building—votes a $1,000,000 or $2,000,000 bond issue, it elects commissioners to control and direct the expenditure of the money unless it indeed has already provided road commissioners who are holding office. These officials have the direction and control of this fund, both as to general road building and Federal-aid projects, subject, of course, in the latter case, to a measure of supervision and control by the State highway commission and Federal officials.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MCARTHUR). The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I yield to my colleague two minutes more.

Mr. BLACK. While it is true that the State highway commission and the Federal Government do exercise a certain degree of supervision and control under the present law on Federal-aid projects—and I think wisely so—still the real control of these expenditures, the directing authority is the county officials, and I certainly would not want to go too far in taking power out of the hands of these local authorities and vesting it in the State highway commissions.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. May I ask my friend a question?

Mr. BLACK. Certainly.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. In legal effect, however, inasmuch as the county is a subdivision of the State, would not the control be exercised by the State? Would not that be a fair construction to place upon the existing laws of the gentleman's State, as he has indicated what they are?

Mr. BLACK. No; I think not. These commissioners are elected by the people of the county. They enter into a bond, the covenant being, of course, the correct and honest expenditure of this money. And, while I realize it is perfectly proper for the Federal Government and the State highway commissions to have some "say so" in the expenditure of money on these Federal-aid projects, I am not willing to go so far as to embrace the doctrine of "direct control."

Mr. JONES of Texas. Would the county officials have the authority to turn over this money raised by a county bond issue, to be expended under the "direct control" of the State highway commission?

Mr. BLACK. My colleague makes an interesting suggestion, which has also bothered my mind somewhat and which I confess I have not had the time to investigate. My colleague makes the suggestion that these county commissioners, who are responsible for the expenditure of this fund, would not have the authority to turn it over to the direct control of the State highway commission. I think there is a great deal of force in that suggestion. It is another reason which points out that in the enactment of a national highway law we should use general terms, such as was used in the old law. When we go into the practice of writing so many details in the law, such as is done in this conference report, we are sure to get in provisions which conflict with some of the laws or constitutions of certain of the States. Then in case of such conflict the State is either forced to amend its constitution or laws, as the case may be, or else lose the benefits of Federal aid. It is for the very reason that this bill goes entirely too much into the realm of such detail, and is certain to conflict with the laws and constitutions of some of the States that I am opposed to it and shall vote against this conference report.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO].

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I confess that it is with a great deal of reluctance that I take the position that I shall oppose the conference report and insist that this bill be sent back for further conference.

The statement has been sent from Washington to one of the large papers in my State recently that the objections of the Arkansas delegation to this bill had been removed. I did not authorize that statement. I do not know who authorized it, and as far as I am concerned I repudiate it. The report contains all the vicious provisions that were contained in the proposals to which we objected once before. I refer to the last paragraph of section 2, which says:

> The term "State funds" includes for the purposes of this act funds raised under the authority of the State, or any political or other subdivision thereof, and made available for expenditure under the direct control of the State highway department.

Also section 6—

> That in approving projects to receive Federal aid under the provisions of this act the Secretary of Agriculture shall give preference to such projects as will expedite the completion of an adequate and connected system of highways, interstate in character.
> Before any projects are approved in any State, such State, through its State highway department, shall select or designate a system of highways not to exceed 7 per cent of the total highway mileage of such State as shown by the records of the State highway department at the time of the passage of this act.
>
> Upon this system all Federal-aid apportionments shall be expended.
> Highways which may receive Federal aid shall be divided into two classes, one of which shall be known as primary or interstate highways, and shall not exceed three-sevenths of the total mileage which may receive Federal aid, and the other which shall connect or correlate therewith and be known as secondary or intercounty highways, and shall consist of the remainder of the mileage which may receive Federal aid.
> The Secretary of Agriculture shall have authority to approve in whole or in part the systems as designated or to require modifications or revisions thereof: Provided, That the States shall submit to the Secretary of Agriculture for his approval any proposed revisions of the designated systems of highways above provided for.
> Not more than 60 per cent of all Federal aid allotted to any State shall be expended upon the primary or interstate highways until provision has been made for the improvement of the entire system of such highways: Provided, That with the approval of any State highway department the Secretary of Agriculture may approve the expenditure of more than 60 per cent of the Federal aid apportioned to such State upon the primary or interstate highways in such State.
> The Secretary of Agriculture may approve projects submitted by the State highway departments prior to the selection, designation, and approval of the system of Federal-aid highways herein provided for if he may reasonably anticipate that such projects will become a part of such system.
> Whenever provision has been made by any State for the completion and maintenance of a system of primary or interstate and secondary or intercounty highways equal to 7 per cent of the total mileage of such State, as required by this act, said State, through its State highway department, by and with the approval of the Secretary of Agriculture, is hereby authorized to add to the mileage of primary or interstate and secondary or intercounty systems as funds become available for the construction and maintenance of such additional mileage.

Then section 7—

> That before any project shall be approved by the Secretary of Agriculture for any State such State shall make provisions for State funds required each year of such States by this act for construction, reconstruction, and maintenance of all Federal-aid highways within the State, which funds shall be under the direct control of the State highway department.

I further cite section 24—

> SEC. 24. That in any State where the existing constitution or laws will not permit the State to provide revenues for the construction, reconstruction, or maintenance of highways, the Secretary of Agriculture shall continue to approve projects for said State until three years after the passage of this act, if he shall find that said State has complied with the provisions of this act in so far as its existing constitution and laws will permit.

Mr. Speaker, my State is in even a more difficult situation than the State of Texas, which has just been referred to. Under the constitution of the State of Arkansas neither a city nor a county can issue bonds. They can not issue bonds for these public improvements, but we have what is called the betterment system. In other words, under our constitution we are compelled to form the landowners into an improvement district, and they become a legal entity. They elect their commissioners, and that district is created by the consent of a majority in value of the property holders. They ascertain and assess the benefits that come to the land through which a highway passes, in the way of betterments and improvements, and it is from that source that they get the funds. Now, under the constitution of my State these commissioners could not delegate either to the county or to the State highway department the control of their funds, or any direction of their affairs, because they are the legal directors and are the trustees of that fund for the stockholders, the taxpayers in that road district.

So far as giving us three years to amend the constitution, if my State were so unwise as to submit to the electors of that State a constitutional amendment proposing to take the control of those funds out of the hands of the commissioners representing the people who are taxed and place that control in the hands of a political bureau, regardless of who might head it, I would oppose it, because it would be contrary to every theory upon which our Government is founded.

Can you not give Federal aid to the roads without taking away from the taxpayers the right to control their own affairs? You can fix the standard of the roads if you want to. You can fix the plans if you want to. You may say that unless they spend the money along certain lines you will withhold aid. But why should the Federal Government say to the people of these communities that they must surrender the control of their tax money? In that outlying territory where Federal aid is needed there are some poor farmers, there are undeveloped lands of low market value. Why should you take away from those people the right to control the expenditure of their own tax money? You can Federalize the plans if you want to. You can standardize improvements if you want to, but still you should leave the direction of business affairs and the expenditure of their funds within their own control. I will not vote for any bill that seeks to coerce the State into consenting to anything of that kind. Under the proposal embodied in this report you will have local and State aid to the Federal Government instead of Federal aid to the States and communities. In addition, it forces the taxpayer to surrender the control of his own funds.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. HUDSPETH] has three minutes remaining.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS].

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, there is no question under section 7 of this conference report all highway building in Texas would cease. I want to say to the gentleman from Kentucky, who stated that the reason for this measure was because the Federal Government was having trouble with the subdivisions of the States, that that has not been the condition in the State that I in part represent. I believe to-day Texas stands third in road development. I want to show you what the trouble is, and I expect it pertains to a number of other States. Under our law and constitution the county is the unit. The county votes the bond issue. Heretofore the Federal Government has been contracting with the county, and it has been harmonious, it has been satisfactory in Texas. As I have said, Texas stands third in road development under the act of 1916. But under this section 7 you place the road funds in the hands of the highway commissioners. Not a dollar of county money under the bond issue could be used under this bill. Why? Because there is no authority under the constitution of Texas or State statute for placing county funds in the hands of a highway commissioner, and if you attempted to do it any taxpayer would have the right to enjoin the payment of the taxes under said bond issue. For that reason, in Texas, and probably in Arkansas and a number of other States that have a similar constitution, not one dollar can be matched from the State funds by the issue of county bonds. That is where we get the chief source of funds for roads. I will tell you what the trouble is. You want to centralize everything in the Federal Government and take it away from the counties. There was no need of this measure except to make the appropriation of $75,000,000. That is all that ought to have been embraced in this measure. But in view of the fact that some of the Western States were not getting what they thought they ought to have under the present law for building roads in the forest reserves, they have gone thus far.

I am strongly for the building of public highways, and helped to create the State highway commission of my State; but, sirs, I will never sanction a move to deny the citizens and the local authorities in a county in my State the right to say where a local highway in that county should be located. Onward, onward we march to centralize everything that has formerly been done by the local people in the Federal Government. If this Federal centralization continues, only a few years and States will be reduced to mere provinces and county lines wiped out altogether. With section 7 eliminated and the rights of the counties restored, I would cheerfully support the bill.

Mr. ROBSION. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes more to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HUDSPETH].

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES].

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I am going to vote for the conference report, but I want to reiterate the opinion expressed by the gentleman from Texas, that there was absolutely no necessity for any legislation other than an appropriation. The gentleman from Kentucky in his statement said that it was necessary to legislate in order to provide for maintenance. Inasmuch as such statements have been made on more than one occasion, I want to set the record straight. I was a member of the Road Committee at the time the original legislation was passed, and therefore I heard with some surprise the statement made by the President when he addressed the Congress at the opening session urging that legislation be enacted to provide for maintenance. The President said:

> I know of nothing more shocking than the millions of public funds wasted in improved highways, wasted because there is no policy of maintenance. The neglect is not universal, but it is very near it. There is nothing the Congress can do more effectively to end this shocking waste than condition all Federal aid on provisions for maintenance. [Applause.] Highways, no matter how generous the outlay for construction, can not be maintained without patrol and constant repair. Such conditions insisted upon in the grant of Federal aid will safeguard the public which pays and guard the Federal Government against political abuses which tend to defeat the very purposes for which we authorize Federal expenditure.

The gentleman from Kentucky says that in order to comply with that request of the President that this act provides that the roads be maintained, otherwise the State will be penalized. Both the gentleman from Kentucky and the President seem to overlook the provision of the existing law, because the law as it stands to-day is in my opinion—and when I read it to you will be in your opinion—stronger and saner than the language in this bill. The existing law reads as follows:

> SEC. 7. To maintain the roads constructed under the provisions of this act shall be the duty of the States, or their civil subdivisions, according to the laws of the several States. If at any time the Secretary of Agriculture shall find that any road in any State constructed under the provisions of this act is not being properly maintained, he shall give notice of such fact to the highway department of such State, and if within four months from the receipt of said notice said road has not been put in a proper condition of maintenance, then the Secretary of Agriculture shall thereafter refuse to approve any project for road construction in said State, or the civil subdivisions thereof, as the fact may be, whose duty it is to maintain said road, until it has been put in a condition of proper maintenance.

So the law to-day provides that if any State shall not maintain the roads upon which Federal funds have been used, immediately all appropriations are suspended and none can be made until the State shall put the roads in proper shape. By this bill we are going to change that law and provide that if a State shall fail to maintain a road the Secretary of Agriculture shall go into the State and repair the road. How is he going to arrange in the State of Nevada to repair and patch the road not being maintained? Through what organization will he do the work?

How much more effective is the existing law, which says to the State of Maine or to the State of South Carolina, "If you fail to maintain a road upon which we have given Federal aid, every dollar of your Federal funds will be cut off and until the road is repaired no project will be approved." Why not have let that law stand? Why say as a reason for this legislation that it is necessary to provide for maintenance when the law as it stands is stronger and certainly is saner than that proposed? Every gentleman knows that the Secretary of Agriculture has no means, no instrumentality, no agency by which he can provide for the repair of a road in Minnesota, in Texas, in South Carolina, or in Maine. If he attempts to send a man out there, what expense will be incurred? Why not let the law stand as it is, demanding that the State repair its own roads or else forfeit all claim to Federal aid for all time. I want to set the record straight as to the provisions of the existing law.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. ROBSION. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOWELL].

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, the bill as now reported contains all of the essential features and provisions of the bill as it passed the House.

First. The Federal aid road law is to be administered by the Department of Agriculture under the Bureau of Public Roads.

Second. The location of the roads to receive Federal aid shall be made by the State highway commission, to be approved by the Secretary of Agriculture.

Third. The various State highway commissions, with the approval of the Secretary of Agriculture, shall lay out a system of roads, interstate and intercounty in character, which shall be known as primary and secondary roads.

Fourth. The various States shall maintain and keep in good repair the roads receiving Federal aid, and provision is made in this bill by which the Secretary of Agriculture can enforce the maintenance of these roads. This section of the bill provides:

> That should any State fail to maintain any highway within its boundaries after construction or reconstruction under the provisions of this act, the Secretary of Agriculture shall then serve notice upon the State highway department of that fact, and if within 90 days after receipt of such notice said highway has not been placed in proper condition of maintenance, the Secretary of Agriculture shall proceed immediately to have such highway placed in a proper condition of maintenance and charge the cost thereof against the Federal funds allotted to such State and shall refuse to approve any other project in such State except as hereinafter provided. Upon the reimbursement by the State of the amount expended by the Federal Government for such maintenance, said amount shall be paid in the Federal highway fund for reapportionment among all the States for the construction of roads under this act, and the Secretary of Agriculture shall then approve further projects submitted by the State as in this act provided.

President Harding, in his message to Congress at the opening of the present session, strongly urged a maintenance provision in the law providing for Federal aid for good roads.

Under the provisions of this bill highways which may receive Federal aid are divided into two classes—primary or interstate highways—which shall not exceed three-sevenths of the total mileage which may receive Federal aid, and secondary or intercounty roads, which shall receive the remainder of the Federal aid.

The real controversy in road legislation has been between the advocates of a system providing for a Federal highway commission in Washington, this commission to determine the roads to receive Federal aid in each State, and Federal aid only to be granted to primary or interstate roads, and, on the other hand, the advocates of the system provided in this bill, that the Federal road law be administered by the Department of Agriculture under the Bureau of Public Roads, and the initiative in locating the roads to receive Federal aid to remain in the various State highway commissions.

The system provided in this bill is indorsed not only by the State highway commission in the various States but is also indorsed by the farm bureaus, who have vigorously stood for and insisted upon a system of "farm-to-market" roads.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOWELL. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, have we not reason to believe from what occurred in the hearings on this bill and otherwise, that this maintenance provision incorporated in the bill is considered by the State authorities one of great importance and one which they approved?

Mr. DOWELL. It is one which is approved by all of the State highway commissions, or nearly all, as one of the essential things necessary in good-roads legislation.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. DOWELL. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. In a very great many of the States are not the funds derived from the license taxes on automobiles sufficient to enable the States to match the Federal-aid appropriations?

Mr. DOWELL. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. And is it not true that there should be enough of that money in every State to enable that State—that fund being under the control of the State—to match the Federal appropriation?

Mr. DOWELL. There should be.

Mr. SNELL. Does the gentleman remember how many miles have already been constructed throughout the United States with Federal aid?

Mr. DOWELL. This is in the record.

Mr. SNELL. How much of the money of the previous appropriations still remains unexpended?

Mr. ROBSION. I stated that.

Mr. SNELL. Does the gentleman remember how much remains?

Mr. ROBSION. Sixty-eight million dollars.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend and revise my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROBSION. Mr. Speaker, at this time I desire to prefer a request for unanimous consent that all Members of the House have five legislative days in which to extend their remarks in the RECORD on this report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that all Members of the House have five legislative days in which to extend their remarks upon this bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROBSION. Mr. Speaker, I yield six minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG].

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Speaker, this bill, making appropriations of nearly a hundred million dollars, was passed through the House with a debate of 40 minutes—20 minutes for the bill and 20 minutes against. It was passed under a suspension of the rules, which, of course, as you all know, prohibits the offering of an amendment. Regardless of the position any Member might take on the bill as a whole or in any of its particular features, he was face to face with the proposition of voting for something he did not like, even though it might be a matter of principle, or else voting against the whole thing in its entirety. It was then sent over to the Senate. The Senate struck out everything after the enacting clause and wrote a new bill. It was then referred to the conference committee of the Senate and House, which took the Senate bill and the House bill and practically wrote another new bill. Then it is brought back to the House with no opportunity of offering an amendment, making any corrections, perfecting it from any angle, and it is put up to each individual member to swallow it whole or vote against it. In view of the wholly obnoxious provisions in some parts of this bill, I find myself compelled to vote against the entire measure.

There is more at stake than the mere apportionment of $100,000,000; there is a vital principle of government at stake. Said principle is the federalization of all activities of the American people, thereby depriving States not only of deciding what they want in the way of roads but of the responsibility as well of providing their own methods of transportation.

This bill specifically takes from the States the right to decide where her highways shall be, of what kind of material they shall be built, how wide they shall be, and whether or not they shall build them. The State has no say as to whether or not it shall be taxed for Federal roads. This is due to the fact that this Congress by appropriating $100,000,000 or any sum thereby levies a tax against all taxable property in my State. The principle on which taxation was founded in the United States was on the consent of those taxed. In my State before a road is paved it is put up to the people in the shape of a bond issue to either approve or reject, and that is rightly so, particularly when such assessments are made against farm property as are made against it by the building of brick or macadam highways, but in this bill we say to the people in Ohio, as in every other State, we will collect this money by taxation and it is up to you whether you use it or not. If you use it, you must tax yourself an equal amount in addition and then we will let you have it, but if you do not use it we will spend it in some other State. Such a tendency of legislation has been one of the reasons why to-day the people in the United States are almost bent double with the burden of taxation.

In my judgment it only requires that the American people come to a full realization that the money received from Federal appropriations for road purposes cost two dollars for every one received in the greatest taxpaying districts to have them arise in their wrath and insist that it stop. If there is any question as to the surrender of the States' right to decide on the type of a highway built, read section 8, which says:

> The Secretary of Agriculture shall approve the types and width of construction and reconstruction and the character of improvement, repair, and maintenance in each case, consideration being given to the type and character which shall be best suited for each locality and to the probable character and extent of future traffic.

Also read section 11 of the bill, which says:

> SEC. 11. That any State having complied with the provisions of this act, and desiring to avail itself of the benefits thereof, shall by its State highway department submit to the Secretary of Agriculture project statements setting forth proposed construction or reconstruction of any primary or interstate, or secondary or intercounty highway therein. If the Secretary of Agriculture approve the project, the State highway department shall furnish to him such surveys, plans, specifications, and estimates therefor as he may require; items included for engineering, inspection, and unforeseen contingencies shall not exceed 10 per cent of the total estimated cost of its construction. That when the Secretary of Agriculture approves such surveys, plans, specifications, and estimates, he shall notify the State highway department and immediately certify the fact to the Secretary of the Treasury.

Now, the query that I should like to put is this: How will the Secretary of Agriculture ascertain whether the people in the thirteenth Ohio district need brick, concrete, asphalt, or plain pike? How is he going to ascertain what they want? How will he ascertain that they get what he stipulates? Oh, you will say, "He will send a Federal supervisor"——

Mr. LARSEN of Georgia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEGG. I can not yield in just six minutes. If the gentleman will give me more time I will yield.

Mr. LARSEN of Georgia. I know the gentleman does not want to make a misstatement.

Mr. BEGG. I can not yield to the gentleman.

Mr. ROBSION. I will yield the gentleman one more minute.

Mr. BEGG. One minute is a long time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEGG. I will yield if you give me more time.

Mr. ROBSION. I understand the gentleman said that 10 per cent is allowed for supervision. This bill provides for supervision together with the investigation work the department can not exceed 2½ per cent.

Mr. BEGG. All right 2½ per cent will build 500 miles of macadam road with an asphalt top, 2½ per cent of the money raised for Federal highways in the past out of the States that pay taxes, and every State in the Union must maintain its supervising force, and the Federal Government must maintain its own supervising force. How is the Federal supervisor going to get to Montana, Illinois, Ohio, and back without paying railroad fare? The Eastern and Central States, the States that are the older States, have already paved their highways, have already backed their roads, and undoubtedly they will continue to pay taxes to pave their roads——

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEGG. I can not yield now. To get back to the Secretary of Agriculture, you will say, "He will send a Federal supervisor out there, or a Federal engineer or inspector, to see that the people in the thirteenth district of Ohio are not robbed." At the same time the State highway department will have its inspector and its engineer on the job seeing that the people will not be robbed. This bill can not function without a duplication of the overhead cost of road building; in fact, the National Government can not perform any service for the State without its costing the State from two to three times as much as the same service could be performed for by the State itself. Look at the mileage alone which has to be paid for the Federal inspectors to travel throughout the United States inspecting the highways, and for the Federal engineers to travel the same route to lay out the proposition, and for the original investigators who are to ascertain the need for the highway.

That item alone if put into highway construction would build a thousand miles of brick pavement in the United States if it were done under State supervision.

The bill also provides in section 18 that the Secretary of Agriculture shall make the rules governing the road building in Ohio. Another query: Is the Secretary of Agriculture in a better position to decide the kind and type of road needed for the farmers in Green Springs Township, Sandusky County, Ohio, than the local farmers themselves? This will surrender every vestige of control ever held by the county and State officers to the National Secretary of Agriculture. And who is the Secretary of Agriculture? He is a political appointee of whomsoever happens to be President of the United States. He may not know any more about road building than I know about watchmaking. Yet he is given absolute control over the construction of the highways in every county and township in the United States.

The more centralization of authority in Washington the more tyrannical the Government and the more expensive. With those people who believe in the centralization of all authority in the Federal Government I have no quarrel, but I firmly believe that this country, having started out on the basic principles that it did and having made the progress we have made from the crude method of living to the present state, from the stage coach in travel to the automobile, Pullman car, and the airplane, and from the blacksmith shop and the spinning wheel as instruments of production to our great giant factories—in fact, nearly all the progress made by the human family since the dawn of history having been accomplished through the placing of responsibility on the individual units of Government, the States, and they in turn on the citizenship, I am loath to depart therefrom to the paternalistic idea which says let the Federal Government at Washington collect the funds and then do for the people that which they should do for themselves.

Another serious objection to my mind in this bill is the method of distributing funds. Section 21 describes that, which says:

The Secretary of Agriculture, after making the deduction authorized by this section, shall apportion the remainder of the appropriation made for expenditure under the provision of the act for the fiscal year among the several States in the following manner: One-third in the ratio which the area of each State bears to the total area of all the States; one-third in the ratio which the population of each State bears to the total population of all the States, as shown by the latest available Federal census; one-third in the ratio which the mileage of rural delivery routes and star routes in each State bears to the total mileage of rural delivery and star routes in all the States at the close of the next preceding fiscal year, as shown by certificate of the Postmaster General, which he is directed to make and furnish annually to the Secretary of Agriculture: Provided, That no State shall receive less than one-half of 1 per cent of each year's allotment. All moneys herein or hereafter appropriated for expenditure under the provisions of this act shall be available until the close of the second succeeding fiscal year for which apportionment was made: Provided further, That any sums apportioned to any State under the provisions of the act entitled "An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes," approved July 11, 1916, and all acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto, shall be available for expenditure in that State for the purpose set forth in such acts until two years after the close of the respective fiscal years for which any such sums become available, and any amount so apportioned remaining unexpended at the end of the period during which it is available for expenditure under the terms of such acts shall be reapportioned according to the provisions of the act entitled "An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes," approved July 11, 1916: And provided further, That any amount apportioned under the provisions of this act unexpended at the end of the period during which it is available for expenditure under the terms of this section shall be reapportioned within 60 days thereafter to all the States in the same manner and on the same basis, and certified to the Secretary of the Treasury and the State highway departments in the same way as if it were being apportioned under this act for the first time.

Now, Mr. Speaker, part of the section providing for the apportionment of the fund distributes two-thirds on area. There are millions of acres of land in certain sections of the United States unproductive, without any appreciable value, and up to date no necessity for developing same for production purposes. Were it a fact that the population was crowded and we needed farming communities there might be some argument for putting a paved highway through the public lands in the West and Northwest, but when one considers that according to the agricultural report of the last year there are approximately 10,000 empty farm homes in the State of Michigan alone and five or six thousand in Ohio, and other States in proportion, it does not look as if the fertility of the soil had already been utilized in the already developed part of the country, and until such time as the population needs new productive territory I believe it an economic fallacy and mistake to burden with taxation your already productive territory to such a degree as to handicap its further development in order to pave roads in unused and out of the way territory.

One argument that I can conceive of for having transcontinental highways is for the man who wants to tour the United States in his auto, from State to State and from coast to coast, but I believe it to be of more economic value to pike the road from the farmer's home to his market place so that all times of the year he can market his produce in the most advantageous manner. I believe the people would prefer to have 4 or 5 miles of pike to keep them out of the mud rather than to have 1 mile of brick so that they might tour from New York to San Francisco.

Some interesting statistics can be gleaned from the Treasury report for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920. If you will examine pages 13 and 14 you will discover who pays the taxes and by an examination of the road distribution you will find where the taxes have gone. Nine States—Arizona, Idaho, Mississippi, Montana, Nevada, New Mexico, North Dakota, South Dakota, and Wyoming—paid a total of $46,000,000 into the United States Treasury. These are round figures. They were allowed in the good roads fund alone according to the report No. 1268, House of Representatives, Sixty-sixth Congress, third session, $38,000,000 or within $8,000,000 of the total revenue paid in by those States during that year.

Now, if taxes were not burdensome, and if the whole country were not crying out for relief from taxation, and rightly so, and if business were not being stifled because of unreasonable taxes, and if the laboring man were not being compelled to accept a lower wage because the Government needs so much money, I would not be averse to paving the roads in these nine States and having the more wealthy States stand the entire burden of cost; but when we are confronted with the astounding figures showing that the standard cost of our Government for years to come will probably be around $4,000,000,000, with an interest charge of approximately $1,000,000,000 a year, a soldier charge of a billion and a quarter, and that increasing, and with the cost of running the Government increasing at least 50 per cent, making another billion and a half or three-quarters, I would like to know what solace the Republican Party can give to the American people on its pledge to reduce taxes if they continue to federalize all activities and then pay the bill out of the Federal Treasury. Ohio, Pennsylvania, New York, Massachusetts, and Illinois, five States, pay 60 per cent of the total cost of running the Government. They will pay 60 per cent of the total debt of the United States. Yet these States receive only 20 per cent of the money paid out for Federal aid to good roads. If these same States had raised the same amount of money that they have raised for Federal highways, and then would have used all of it in building roads in their own territory, they would have had more than 2,000 miles of brick, 2,300 miles of concrete, 5,000 miles of asphalt macadam, or 10,000 miles of water-bound pike.

Now, I am not contending that any State should be so selfish as to say that it should not contribute anything toward the other States less fortunate in wealth for their road building, but what I am contending is this: That we are going entirely too far in the direction of allowing the National Government decide which States shall improve its roads.

The following table shows the amount of taxes in even millions paid by each State in the Union and the amount of the apportionment in millions for Federal aid to good roads:

Taxes apportioned to States for road funds.

A glance will convince anyone that the division is in no way equitable as compared with the taxes collected. Federal aid is a misnomer. There are only a very few States in the Union that profit by Federal aid. Every State in the Union loses by virtue of the duplicated overhead in construction. To make the illustration a little more simple and more forcible, let us compare Ohio with Alabama, and if it were true that there were only two States in the Union and the taxes paid and the road-fund apportionment levied as they have been every dollar of Federal aid received in Ohio would require that Ohio levy $10 extra and send it to Alabama to build her roads. If Ohio and Arizona were compared, for every dollar of Federal aid that went into Ohio roads there would have to be levied $40 in taxes and sent to Arizona. If the comparison were between Ohio and Mississippi, Ohio would have to send $17 to Mississippi. If the comparison were between Ohio and Montana, Ohio would have to send $31 to Montana. If we compare North Dakota with Ohio, the latter State would have to send $49.60 to North Dakota. Take Wyoming and Ohio; we in Ohio would have to send $30.30 to Wyoming.

Now compare New York with Iowa, as if they were the only two States in the Union. For every dollar that New York put into its Federal highways she would be compelled to send $20.50 to Iowa; but compare New York with Wyoming, and she would be compelled to send $102.90 to Wyoming; and in comparing New York and North Dakota, the former would have to send $116.50. Making the comparison now between Pennsylvania and Iowa as if they were the only two States in the Union, for every dollar that Pennsylvania put into her Federal highways she would have to tax her people enough to send $9.27 to Iowa. If we compare Pennsylvania with Wyoming, for every dollar Pennsylvania puts into her highways she would have to tax her people enough to send $38.60 to Wyoming; and comparing Pennsylvania and North Dakota, she would have to send $46.50 to North Dakota. Now let us make a comparison between Massachusetts and Iowa as if they were the only two States in the Union. We find there that for every dollar of Federal aid that Massachusetts put into her highways she would be compelled to tax her people $17.60 and send it to Iowa. Comparing Massachusetts with Wyoming, we find that for every dollar Massachusetts received of Federal aid she would be taxed $88 to send to Wyoming. Comparing Massachusetts with North Dakota, she would have to send to the latter State $90.

Such comparison could be made for any State in the Union. Some States you would find would just about split even. Less than half the States gain by this plan of road building—nearer one-third—and, as I said before in my remarks, if the people of Ohio, Pennsylvania, New York, Illinois, and Massachusetts, and, in fact, all over the country, were not burdened by heavy taxation to the point of retardation of development in business, there would be no force to my argument, but since it is true that the whole country is crying for relief and that business is practically at a standstill because of the terrible tax assessment against their production, it does seem to me that it would be wise to at least postpone the time when we would have the more prosperous States assume the financial responsibility for paving the long stretches of road in some of the States whose wealth is not yet developed. By actual count it has been discovered that the travel on the interstate highways is not interstate travel, but local. True, there is some interstate travel, but I speak of the major portion. Seventy-five per cent of the travel on interstate roads is local travel, and I maintain that it is an injustice and is inequitable and unfair to tax the whole people to put a brick pavement through a particular locality before you have improved the roads to a passable condition in all localities. Such a policy as we are following will bankrupt the country if persisted in to any length.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BEGG. Can not the gentleman from Kentucky give me a little more time? I know he does not like to hear these facts, I appreciate that.

Mr. ROBSION. With such misstatements really I can not think that——

Mr. BEGG. I defy the gentleman to contradict a single statement I have made.

Mr. ROBSION. However, I will yield the gentleman another minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is recognized for one additional minute.

Mr. BEGG. I appreciate the gentleman's generosity. In conclusion let me say to those who believe in this present tendency of making the Government responsible for all conditions, roads, health, schools, and everything else in the United States, with you I have no quarrel. You are one school and I am another. I believe that in the main, in the physical things of life to say the least, the United States Government will continue to be great so long as she believes in the sacredness of the independence of the States. They in turn build up the greatness and the independence of the individual citizens within the States. In other words, so long as they teach the citizen to help himself I believe the greatness of the United States will continue to increase, but the moment that the tables are turned and the eyes of the whole people begin to turn to Washington to look for aid and help and assistance I believe that minute we have taken a backward step. We have made of the individual a leaner on his Government rather than a supporter of it. We teach him to accept something for which he has not paid the price, and every one of you know that any living man who expects something for nothing usually gets nothing. I firmly believe that what is true of the individual is true of the State, and, personally, I deplore the present tendency toward federalization of all activities of government and shall vote against this bill.

Mr. ROBSION. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CABLE].

Mr. CABLE. Mr. Speaker, we have for consideration the conference report on one of the most important legislative measures coming before Congress this session. I refer to the bill providing for additional Federal aid in the construction of good roads. The conference report is substantially the same as the bill we passed in the House. An attempt was made in the Senate to create a Federal highway commission of three members, each at an annual salary of $10,000, with all the necessary overhead that goes with such a commission, to supervise the construction of Federal aid roads in your State and mine. Through the determined stand of our conferees and the Members of this House this commission plan was not agreed to.

Under this bill the State lays out a system of roads approved by the Secretary of Agriculture, consisting of not more than 7 per cent of the road mileage of the State. Three-sevenths of this 7 per cent that receives Federal aid is known as the primary road system, and four-sevenths, or the roads connecting these primary roads, are what I designate "farm-to-market" highways.

The matter of selecting the systems of highways which they desire first improved is left to the States. The State highway commissioner in turn often acts upon the request of the county commissioners. After the selection and approval the county prepares the plans and specifications of the proposed Federal aid roads to be improved. They are then approved by the State and by the Secretary of Agriculture. Federal aid stimulates the construction of these roads. The selection of the type of construction in Ohio begins with the people, through the county commissioners.

The apportionment of the Federal funds to the States is to be made as follows: One-third in the ratio which the area of the State bears to the total area of all the States of the Union; one-third in the ratio which the population of the State bears to the total population of all the States; and one-third in the ratio which the mileage of rural delivery routes and star routes in each State bears to the total mileage of rural delivery and star routes in all the States.

This plan has been considered by many to be fair. Ohio will receive more than $2,823,000 of the amount appropriated in this bill, or 3.86 per cent. Only the States of New York, Pennsylvania, Illinois, and Texas exceed her in the amount of money that will be received.

The Chief of the Bureau of Public Roads has prepared a tabulation showing for each State its relative position as a producer of basic products compared with its relative position as determined by the amount of Federal aid received. Massachusetts stands forty-second in production, but stands thirtieth in the amount of money it receives.

Mr. HUSTED. Will the gentleman yield? Does the gentleman mean agricultural alone?

Mr. CABLE. Basic products of this country, based on agriculture, mineral, forest, dairy, dairy products, domestic animals, and agricultural crops. For example, on the Federal aid heretofore distributed Ohio produces 3.83 per cent of the basic products and as compared to this receives 3.82 per cent of Federal aid.

Development of highways aids industry and commerce; it reduces the cost of transportation in many cases. Lower transportation costs aid directly prosperity and the people. Good highways make farms more accessible and valuable. The State of New York profits locally by having the greatest port of this country. Its imports and exports, according to the last report I could obtain, amounted to more than $6,000,000,000 annually. This commerce originates or terminates in all the States of the Union, from or to the farm or factory, and travels over the very highways which we hope to see improved. These highways are the arteries of our commerce, and all the people of the Nation profit by their proper construction. We represent here the entire people of the Nation. We should legislate accordingly. The gentleman who preceded me is opposed to the bill, claiming taxation for road legislation should be local in character. Almost one and one-half millions of dollars taken from the Nation's Treasury have been expended in his very district to improve rivers and harbors. It is estimated that the sum of $370,000 is still needed to complete these improvements. If the theory of the gentleman who preceded me is correct, then all improvements, highways, or harbors are local in their character; they should not be stimulated by Federal aid; and the people in his district should raise by taxation the approximate sum of $370,000 to complete the improvement of these rivers and harbors.

Federal aid for construction of roads is not a new proposition. So far as I can ascertain, the first road constructed by Federal aid was located and is still used in Ohio. On May 17, 1796, Congress passed an act granting to Col. Ebenezer Zane three tracts of land, not exceeding 1 mile square each, one on the Muskingum River, one on the Hockhocking River, and one other on the north bank of the Scioto River, and in such situations as would best promote the utility of a road to be opened by him on the most eligible route between Wheeling and Limestone, said road to be approved by the President of the United States. The act further provided that on proof the road was opened, the President was empowered to issue letters patent conveying to Zane and his heirs the said tracts of land. This road was in use 25 years before the Cumberland Road, the national highway, was extended across the Ohio River.

The very act of Congress of 1802 which enabled the State of Ohio to enter the Union also provided for the building of the great highway commonly called "Old National Road." It was provided in that act that the money received from the sale of one-twentieth of the Government public lands in Ohio should be applied to building roads from the navigable waters emptying into the Atlantic to and through the State of Ohio. To-day 300 miles of this road lie in Ohio—more than all other States combined. It winds its way through Maryland, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois to Missouri, and the early development of these States, to a great extent, resulted from the building of this first great national highway.

This conference report and bill safeguard the roads constructed by Federal aid by making proper maintenance provision. If the State fails to maintain the roads, the Secretary is authorized to serve notice upon the State highway department that the roads must be repaired, and if such repairs are not made in 90 days, then he is authorized to go ahead and make the repairs and charge the same against the Federal allotment of the funds made to the State.

Mr. ROBSION. Mr. Speaker, I yield eight minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, if this bill was confined to the fundamental question of road building and the appropriations in the bill were made generally, I would have no complaint to make, or even if the bill providing for specific roads was given serious consideration by the House, I would have no complaint to make. The bill carries $90,000,000, $75,000,000 of which is to be apportioned among the States according to the fundamental plan laid down in the original act, and $15,000,000 to be applied to specific roads, to States that make no contribution whatever to the expenditure, all of which comes out of the Federal Treasury. The theory of the road act was that the legislation or every appropriation would be general in its nature and not specific as to localities. But what do we find in this bill? We find that one-fifth as much has been set apart to build roads specifically designated as has been allotted to the rest of the Union, to all of the States, and that this one-fifth comes entirely out of the Treasury of the United States and needs no contribution whatever on the part of the States through which the roads are to be constructed.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. MADDEN. Certainly.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Just to say that from the sale of mature timber there is derived annually $2,000,000, and from grazing permits that come out of these same lands $2,500,000, which makes a total of $4,500,000 that goes into the Federal Treasury, which would go back to building roads.

Mr. MADDEN. Of course, if every dollar that comes from any source into the Treasury of the United States goes back to that source, then there is no equity in the law that is before us. If all the revenue that goes into the Treasury of the United States from the State of Illinois is to be spent in Illinois, then I submit that no part of this $15,000,000 would be permitted to be spent on the construction of roads that are specifically designated in this bill. Now, I want——

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Will the gentleman yield for a further question on that?

Mr. MADDEN. No. I would like to, but I want to say just one thing more about this subject.

We are complaining every day about extravagance. We all say that we want economy. Every individual Member of this House, if you talk to him, will say that we must economize. But we are allowing the Senate to say that we must be extravagant. Now, the people of the United States demand relief from the burden of taxation, and to the extent that I can enable them to get that relief I have permitted myself to protest. I can do nothing, and neither can any other member of the Appropriations Committee or any of the Members of the House, unless they are sustained by the House. I merely want to say that if economy is not finally brought about in Government expenditures, do not hold us responsible when you continue to run wild in expenditures of this sort. I want further to say that while all the States in the Union are allotted money out of this fund in like proportions under the fundamental act, except that in certain Western States they are given a greater percentage of the allotment, and on top of that you add $15,000,000 to be specifically provided from the Public Treasury without any allotment whatever on the part of the State as to the roads that may be constructed, you can not economize if that is to be the policy, and if you do not economize there will be a day of reckoning. For the American people have made up their minds—we may as well understand that—that no extravagance is to be permitted in the conduct of this Government from this day on. And while it may be popular in your district to vote extravagant appropriations for highways, in the long run those who pay the bill will not differentiate, and you will not gain by saying, "Ah, we are giving you good roads." No man will live to see the result of such expenditure. You will not gain by saying that we spent this money because we believed in highways, or that they believe in them. I believe in them myself. But we should use sanity. Sanity will be demanded not only of you as individuals but of the Congress in the aggregate. And we shall not find that complacent attitude on the part of the American taxpayer that will enable you by your sophistry to say, "We gave you something for the money we have spent." This Government is terribly obligated; the people are terribly oppressed. They are looking for relief, and to the extent that that relief can properly be granted, it must be granted by the exercise of proper economy. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. ROBSION. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. SUMMERS].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, this is the one appropriation that is approved by practically every taxpayer in every district in the United States. This is the expenditure of money that builds the good roads right down to the old farm gate.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], chairman of the Appropriations Committee, has made special criticism of the provision in this bill for the construction of national forest roads. I invite your particular attention to this subject in order that you may understand why there should be national forest roads. There are 156,032,000 acres of Government-owned lands within the national forests. The timber standing there, mature and overripe and ready to be marketed, is estimated at 699,000,000,000 feet, the present value of which on the stump is $575,000,000.

Is it worth while to build roads in order that firefighters may get in to protect $575,000,000 worth of Government-owned timber? Is it worth while to build roads in order that we may market the mature, the ripe, and the overripe timber that is now going to fall?

In 1919 there were 37,500 grazing permits granted for use in these national forests, and from those permits we derived a revenue of $2,500,000. From the mature timber that was sold last year we derived a revenue of more than $2,000,000. So I say that instead of this money coming from Illinois, New York, or Massachusetts, or some other place, it comes out of the national forests, and it should go back into the national forests, in view of the fact that we have $575,000,000 worth of timber there to protect.

There are places in the national forests where it takes five days for a firefighter to get in, because there are no roads or trails, no way of getting in. There are 268 townships in 4 States in the West that have no public roads, no trails, no way of getting in to protect the timber.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question there?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. For a short question.

Mr. SNELL. Is it necessary to build $5,000 trails to get in?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. It is not proposed to do that. They often only cut trails through the brush. Some are very insignificant.

Mr. SNELL. One would think from reading this bill that you were to build $5,000 roads there.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. That is not the case at all. There are millions of dollars' worth of timber in these townships that have not a single road or trail for a firefighter to get in.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Yes.

Mr. HAUGEN. Is it not a fact that a percentage of the receipts from the sale of timber is set aside for the building of roads, and is it not a fact that the expenditures exceed the receipts?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. They should exceed them. When developing property of any kind we often spend more than the receipts.

Mr. HAUGEN. And the receipts of the Forest Service from the sale of the timber are only about $2,000,000.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. There is every reason why we should build roads and trails in and about the national forests.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. No; I can not. My time is so limited. But I want to speak of other provisions of the bill.

The allocation of Federal aid road funds, as in the past, is made in the following manner:

1. One-third in the ratio which the area of each State bears to the total area of all the States; one-third in the ratio which the population of each State bears to the total population of all the States, as shown by the latest available Federal census; one-third in the ratio which the mileage of rural delivery routes and star routes in each State bears to the total mileage of rural delivery and star routes in all the States at the close of the next preceding fiscal year.

This bill goes further and does that which previous legislation has not done. It establishes a Federal aid road policy, the chief provisions of which are:

2. The Federal aid road law shall be administered by the Department of Agriculture under the Bureau of Public Roads instead of by a commission.

3. The initiative in locating roads to receive Federal aid shall remain in the States, subject to the approval of the Department of Agriculture instead of a commission at Washington.

4. The several State highway departments, with the approval of the Department of Agriculture, shall lay out a system of roads interstate and intercounty in character and not interstate alone.

5. The funds from the several States put up to match Federal aid, from whatever source derived, shall be subject to the direct control of the highway department of the several States.

6. The several States shall maintain and keep in good repair at all times all highways constructed with Federal aid. A penalty is provided for failure to put in proper repair after 90 days' notice from the Department of Agriculture.

7. In any State having more than 5 per cent of its area in unappropriated public lands greater participation in Federal aid is allowed in proportion to the amount of such unappropriated public lands. The exact language of the measure is as follows:

In case of any State containing unappropriated public lands exceeding 5 per cent of the total area of all lands in the State the share of the United States payable under this act on account of such projects shall not exceed 50 per cent of the total estimated cost thereof, plus a percentage of such estimated cost equal to one-half of the percentage which the area of the unappropriated public lands in such State bears to the total area of such State: Provided, That the limitation of payments, not to exceed $20,000 per mile under existing law, which the Secretary of Agriculture may make be, and the same is hereby, increased in proportion to the increased percentage of Federal aid authorized by this section: Provided further, That these provisions relative to the public-land States shall apply to all unobligated or unmatched funds appropriated by the Federal aid act and payment for approved projects upon which actual building construction work had not begun on the 30th day of June, 1921.

The extent of these lands and their distribution is as follows:

Unappropriated and unreserved lands (national forests not included), July 1, 1921.

	Acres.
Alabama	36,100
Arizona	16,209,426
Arkansas	264,157
California	14,942,192
Colorado	8,150,263
Florida	108,194
Idaho	8,606,301
Kansas	3,213
Louisiana	7,585
Michigan	72,246
Minnesota	255,006
Mississippi	32,031
Missouri	48
Montana	5,720,125
Nebraska	19,232
Nevada	52,742,711
New Mexico	18,064,006
North Dakota	91,297
Oklahoma	19,288
Oregon	13,784,451
South Dakota	212,942
Utah	27,038,183
Washington	1,038,410
Wisconsin	4,920
Wyoming	18,365,375
Total	189,729,492

In view of the fact that these public lands are not taxed, this very just provision is of the greatest possible importance to all public-land States.

8. No State shall receive less than one-half of 1 per cent of the fund available for the construction of highways.

9. Special provision is made to take care of roads and trails within, adjacent to, and serving forest reservations and other reservations under Federal control.

10. The time given each State to match and take up the Federal aid allotted to it has been extended for a period of one year, making the time two years instead of one year.

11. Three years' time from and after the passage of this act is given to those States whose laws or constitution will not permit the State to provide revenues for the construction, reconstruction, or maintenance of highways to change their constitution or laws to meet the requirements of this act.

12. A modification of the definition of the terms "construction" and "maintenance." The term "construction" will not include the expense or work of locating, surveying, mapping, or cost of rights of way.

13. The amount expended by the Secretary of Agriculture in administering the provisions of this act shall not exceed 2½ per cent of the amount appropriated to be expended under the provisions of this act.

14. The Secretary of Agriculture shall determine the type and width of roads constructed with Federal aid. All interstate roads constructed under the provisions of this act shall have a wearing surface of not less than 18 feet in width unless, in the opinion of the Secretary of Agriculture, it is rendered impracticable by physical conditions, excessive costs, probable traffic requirements, or legal obstacles.

15. The Secretary of Agriculture shall provide an adequate system of accounting for the road department and make itemized and detailed reports of all money expended under the provisions of this act to Congress annually.

16. The bill as amended by the Senate provides for an appropriation of $75,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, to aid the States in the construction of highways, $25,000,000 of which should become immediately available and $50,000,000 to be available six months after the passage of this act. The bill as it passed the House last February provided $100,000,000 for the present fiscal year. The Senate fixed the sum at $75,000,000 on the recommendation of the Secretary of Agriculture. As many months have elapsed since the passage of the bill in the House, it was deemed advisable by the conferees, and so agreed to, that $25,000,000 shall be immediately available and the other $50,000,000 shall be available January 1, 1922. This action was deemed wise on account of the unemployment situation throughout the country and it being a favorable time to secure contracts for the construction of roads at greatly reduced cost.

17. That there be appropriated for the survey, construction, reconstruction, and maintenance of forest roads and trails the sum of $5,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, available immediately and until expended, and $10,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, available until expended. This money is necessary to protect the rich forests of the Nation in the reservations under Federal control, and the two-year program is necessary in order that this work may be done more systematically and more cheaply to the Government.

These forest reserves are largely confined to 11 of the Western States and Alaska, as shown by the following table:

State.	Total area.	Area in national forests.	Percentage in forest reserve.
	Acres.	Acres.
Alaska	378,165,760	20,713,204	5.5
Arizona	72,838,400	12,282,558	16.9
California	99,617,280	24,003,190	24.1

Wyoming	62,460,160	8,694,755	13.9
New Mexico	78,401,920	8,487,046	12.1

18. Fifty per cent, but not to exceed $3,000,000 for any one fiscal year, of the appropriation made or that may hereafter be made shall be expended under the direct supervision of the Secretary of Agriculture for the construction and maintenance of roads and trails of primary importance to the national forests, and the balance of such appropriation for the survey, construction, and maintenance of forest roads of primary importance to the States, counties, or communities within, adjoining, or adjacent to the national forests.

In retrospect the apportionment of Federal aid road funds from February, 1917, to September 30, 1921, and the mileage completed, approved, and recommended by district engineers, follows:

States.	Federal aid apportioned, fiscal years 1917 to 1921, inclusive.	Total mileage completed, approved, and recommended by district engineers.

Road legislation was considered by the last Republican national convention, which expressed the purpose and intent of the Republican Party and made this solemn promise to the people of this country:

We favor liberal appropriations, in cooperation with the States, for the construction of highways, which will bring about a reduction in transportation costs, better marketing of farm products, improvement in rural postal delivery, as well as meet the needs of military defense.

In determining the proportion of Federal aid for road construction among the States, the sums lost in taxation to the respective States by the setting apart of large portions of their area as forest reservations should be considered as a controlling factor.

We have before us the consummation of that solemn pledge. The Roads Committee, of which I am a member, has worked long and patiently in perfecting this bill.

This Federal highway act is the most progressive step Congress has ever taken in establishing a network of good roads throughout the country.

With this program carried out year after year, with full cooperation by the States, we shall have within eight years a complete system of interstate roads throughout the United States.

Meanwhile, if the States and counties with Federal aid will carry on their road construction with equal speed, the transportation problem and the farm-to-market problem will soon have been solved. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

Mr. ROBSION. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, this bill violates a fundamental principle of taxation which has as its premise that local improvements should be borne by the taxpayers where those improvements are made.

Five years ago we launched upon this policy under a bill which provided that in the year 1921 only $25,000,000 should be expended. That act was subsequently amended, so that $75,000,000 was appropriated to be expended last year. It never was the intention of the Congress that the National Government should bear the expense or any portion of the expense of building roads in every State in the country for all time to come. It was thought by some that the work would be stimulated by national cooperation. Now that it is started that condition no longer pertains.

Now it has become a sectional matter. Nine States that pay only $46,000,000 into the National Treasury receive $38,000,000 under this act. In Pennsylvania and my own State of Wisconsin road improvements have gone to that extent that they can not use in certain counties any of this money for the improvement of their roads, because every practicable road has been improved. Why should we, as national legislators, impose a burden upon people where they can not receive any benefit from the taxes imposed? Oh, gentlemen from the Western States grow eloquent about making fine driveways into the national forests for pleasure purposes.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I can not yield. Back of this agitation for good roads is one primary wish, and that is to furnish a pleasurable way to the automobile owner of passing through the country. That is the purpose upon which this bill is founded.

If the people of Wisconsin want to improve their roads—and we are doing it—we can do it without calling upon the National Government for aid, because we can raise the money from our own means of taxation.

In New York, Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, and other States they have become surfeited with good roads, and there are counties which can no longer make use of the funds.

Further as to this act, it provides not only $90,000,000 but there is to-day on the statute book a continuing appropriation of $1,000,000, running until 1926, for expenditure in the forest reserves. Oh, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. SUMMERS] grows eloquent as to the great contributions that the forest reserves make to the Federal Treasury, when everyone knows that the administration of that service has been outrageously extravagant and has cost the Treasury of the United States millions of dollars for the benefit of those localities. Now, they come in here with a bill that outrages the public demand for economy. If there was ever a time when we ought to begin to economize, this is the time. Four months of the present year have passed by. There are millions unexpended from existing appropriations; yet you flaunt the public sentiment in favor of economy by appropriating, not what you appropriated last year but an amount which makes the total expenditure $90,000,000. Here, by section 21, two and a quarter million is authorized for administrative purposes and research work alone. Where is your much-vaunted claim for economy?

This is sectional legislation of the worst kind. Agrarian and forest reserve blocs are driving this bill through at the expense of the taxpayers of my district and of every other district in the United States which really pays taxes. The taxpayers of your district and mine are providing for these improvements. Oh, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CABLE] speaks about appropriations for rivers and harbors as an excuse for this appropriation. Appropriations for river and harbor improvements are a benefit to evey community in the country, for they improve the means of communication and egress and thereby lower the cost of transportation.

I say that now when we are trying to economize it is no time to go to the extreme of appropriating $90,000,000 for the benefit largely of the arid and mountainous West, for the benefit of the barren lands and deserts of Nevada and New Mexico, and of the forest preserves in the Mountain States, whose people want us to dig down into the pockets of the taxpayers to give them something to which they are not entitled. I say to them, let them raise their own taxes for the improvement of their own roads. Let them determine their own local and internal policies. They ought not to raid the National Treasury at the expense of others. [Applause.]

Mr. ROBSION. Mr. Speaker, may I inquire how much time is remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has 29 minutes remaining.

Mr. ROBSION. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HAWES].

Mr. HAWES. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I am surprised that this measure should be discussed as an aid to the State. As far back as 1803 and for some 23 years thereafter the United States Government was spending directly from the Treasury of the United States money to build roads, appropriating as much as $500,000 in one year at that period. These roads were costing between $7,000 and $13,000 a mile. This bill has met the approval of a Republican national convention, of a Democratic national convention, and received the indorsement of organizations representing 10,000,000 automobile owners. Every farm organization in the United States has indorsed it. There is not a State legislature that has not a road-building program now mapped out, and having availed itself for four years of Federal funds, its whole arrangement will be dislocated by a failure to pass this bill.

It is true that the State of Texas and the State of Arkansas and a few other States may have to amend their laws to provide for one change which was made in this bill. What is that change? It is a simple one. Prior to the introduction of this bill the Federal Government could deal with subdivisions of a State, with the county or road district. This bill changes this in one respect; it requires that the National Government must deal directly with the State. What does that mean? It means that the State designates the road, the type of road, the kind of road, and the length of the road. This State control as against the county control is the change that the gentlemen from Texas and from Arkansas complain of. I do not know but that if I were in their place I would complain, too. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ROBSION. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HUSTED].

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Speaker, the State of New York has 11,000 miles of improved highways connecting every city and every incorporated village in that State. These highways have been built exclusively from our own funds. It is a magnificent system, of which we are justly proud. We have got to spend a great deal more money, because we now find that these highways were not so built as to stand up under the traffic of heavy motor trucks. The roads are crumbling on the edges and many of them will have to be rebuilt to meet present conditions.

The State of New York will pay about 30 per cent of the amount of this entire appropriation. Oh, we realize that all the money in the State of New York is not made in the State of New York. It is made all over the Nation—in California, Texas, the Middle West, and in Maine, wherever the energy and the capacity of American business men go. If the State of New York was actuated by purely selfish interests it would be opposed to this legislation, but I do not believe that the State of New York is opposed to this legislation. At any rate, I for one intend to vote for it. [Applause.]

Some gentleman has said that the State of New York stood twelfth in the production of basic products. I do not know what he means by "basic products," but in value of agricultural products and manufactured products combined I venture to say that the State of New York stands easily No. 1. It is a great agricultural State as well as a great manufacturing State. It is one of the greatest producers of hay and the greatest producers of fruit. But while the State of New York from a national viewpoint is willing to have its wealth and resources called upon to aid in carrying on any great public work of a national character, it expects generous consideration for its own vital interests. It expects generous consideration for the port of New York, through which the bulk of the commerce of this Nation flows, and it expects generous consideration for the Erie Canal system, which was built by the State of New York out of its own funds at a cost approximating $250,000,000. We do not want our traffic diverted through the St. Lawrence River when the mouth of that river is in a foreign, though friendly, nation. We do not want it there; we want it here within the confines of the State of New York; and while that State is willing to stand by the rest of the Nation in carrying on national projects a large part of whose cost may come out of the treasury of the State of New York, it expects to have generous consideration from the rest of the Nation in return. [Applause.]

Mr. ROBSION. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LARSEN].

Mr. LARSEN of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I desired and expected more time to discuss the pending measure than has been allotted to me, but I realize there are 434 other gentlemen in the House who desire and have the same right to speak that I have; therefore I must content myself with a short limit of time.

The provisions of the bill under consideration are practically the same as when it passed the House on June 27 last. Aside from a slight reduction in operating expenses and one or two other minor matters it might be considered the same.

I congratulate the conferees on the part of the House upon this splendid result, and I am sure they will have the gratitude of every citizen throughout this land who realizes their splendid work.

Section 6 of the House bill, as well as the one now under consideration, provides that highways entitled to receive Federal aid shall be divided into two classes—one to be known as primary or interstate highways and the other as secondary or intercounty highways. It provides that roads of the first class shall not exceed three-sevenths of the total mileage entitled to Federal aid, and that those of the second class shall consist of the remainder of the mileage, or four-sevenths. This includes 7 per cent of the roads in each State.

The primary or interstate system will insure to the public a continuous, connecting system of roads through the various States and throughout the United States, while the secondary or intercounty system will give to the communities in the various counties of the several States farm to market roads as well as church and school highways. Thus, every State and every community will be served and at least 85 per cent of the public will be within 2 or 3 miles of one of these highways and will be directly benefited thereby.

There are a few other matters to which I desire to call the attention of the House in the brief moments allowed. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] to-day, in speaking of early road construction in this country, pointed out some of the difficulties with reference to Federal construction of public highways in the past. He said that when the roads had been constructed by the Federal Government Congress refused to appropriate money for their upkeep. That is one of the difficulties we are trying to obviate at this time. Section 14 is designed to meet the objections pointed out. It places the burden of maintaining the roads when constructed upon the States and not upon the Federal Government and penalizes the negligence or refusal to repair. Just a few words, if you please, regarding the proposition raised by the gentlemen from Arkansas and from Texas. Ordinarily I am glad to vote with these gentlemen on any proposition, but upon this one I find myself at variance. I can not support their view of the situation.

They have the idea, it seems, that the road authorities of the National Government should contract with the various subdivisions of States as well as with States themselves. I believe there are in the State of Arkansas about 75 counties, and in the State of Texas about 260. There are also many cities. I am as loyal an advocate of State rights as any man in this House, but I do not think it would be either fair or proper to expect the Federal Government to contract with 260 subdivisions of the State of Texas or 75 subdivisions of the State of Arkansas. I am in favor of according to the States all consideration due them, but it has never been expected, nor has it ever been the policy, as I understand it, to treat the State otherwise than as an integral part of the Union. We should deal with a State as a whole and not with its subdivisions. We do not want to prevent any State from participating in Federal-aid funds, but it is nothing but right that the States adjust themselves to national conditions rather than expect the Federal Government to meet an unreasonable situation. They are not deprived at this time from participation in Federal-aid funds, and nothing in this act will deprive them of that right. A county or other subdivision of a State may still raise funds and participate in Federal aid. This it may do by permitting its funds to be administered by State authorities. Why should it object to such arrangement? It participates in the selection of such officials; the National Government does not. If the National Government can trust its funds to State authorities for administration, why can not any subdivision of such State do so? Section 24 allows three years in which the States may make necessary adjustments to meet the changed conditions. This should be ample time for constitutional amendments, if necessary. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. ROBSION. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN].

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, the members of the House Committee on Roads deserve to be congratulated upon the final form of this bill. Practically everything that they have contended for, with almost the entire approval of the House, has been embodied in this legislation. In order to determine what should be done the members of that committee had the wisdom, in the very beginning, to seek the advice of a body of men who are the best qualified of any in America to speak on the subject of road building. I refer to those who by actual contact with the problem have learned to solve it, the State highway officials. Into this bill have been written the lessons of their experience and under its terms there will be selected, constructed, and maintained a connected system of interstate and intercounty highways which will give an ample return of service to the American people for all the money expended thereon.

Only two of the major recommendations submitted by the Association of American Highway Officials have not been carried out. In order to properly plan for the future in the matter of State finances, in order to keep intact their engineering organizations, and in order to practice efficiency and economy in the expenditure of both Federal and State road funds, the State highway departments earnestly desire to know just what may be expected in the way of Federal aid during the next five years. This bill, as did the original Federal aid act, should have carried annual appropriations for at least that far into the future so that the States might know exactly how much money they will have to provide as their share in this cooperative effort. The limitation of the appropriation to the remainder of the fiscal year ending on the 30th of next June makes the adoption of such a program impossible. I sincerely hope that, without delay, this Congress will assure the States that at least $100,000,000 will be available for Federal aid each year for the next five years. [Applause.]

The second important recommendation made by those representing the State highway officials which was not finally adopted was that the States in the West should be given credit not only for the unappropriated public lands within their borders but also for all reservations under Federal control. Perhaps the best way to make this matter clear to the House is to recite the history of the proposal. Ever since the passage of the original Federal aid road act in 1916 there has been complaint from the taxpayers of the Western States that they were called upon to do more than their fair share of the expenses of road building because many miles of highway are located on lands that can not be taxed by the States by reason of the fact that the title to the same is in the United States. In 1920 this complaint was presented to the national conventions of the two great political parties, and the Republican national platform contains the following declaration:

> In determining the proportion of Federal aid for road construction among the States, the sums lost in taxation to the respective States by the setting apart of large portions of their area as forest reservations should be considered as a controlling factor.

The Democratic national convention likewise heeded this plea from the West by adopting the following platform plank:

> We favor a continuance of the present Federal-aid plan under existing Federal and State agencies amended so as to include, as one of the elements in determining the ratio in which the several States shall be entitled to share in the fund, the area of any public lands therein.

When this question was presented to the House Committee on Roads for action last December objection was made that to change the ratio for apportioning Federal-aid funds by adding the forest reservations or the area of public lands as a fourth factor would reduce the sums allotted to the Eastern States, and it was therefore determined that the basis of apportionment should remain as heretofore, which is area, population, and mileage of post roads. A satisfactory agreement was reached, however, by giving the Western States credit for the nontaxable lands within their borders in meeting the sums apportioned to them under the existing threefold basis. This understanding was incorporated in the Sells bill, H. R. 15873, which passed the House on February 7, 1921, containing the following provision:

> That in each State in which the percentage of total land area to which the title of the United States is unqualified or exempt by act of Congress from taxation in said State exceeds 10 per cent of the total area of all lands in the State the Secretary of Agriculture may reduce the ratio of cooperation required, but not to below one-half that which the total of the patented, tax exempt, and national forest land bears to the total area of all lands in the State.

When the Dowell amendment to the Phipps bill was under consideration by the Committee on Roads this question was again considered, and the following agreement was reached and approved by the House on June 27, 1921:

> The Secretary of the Treasury shall thereupon set aside the share of the United States payable under this act on account of such projects, which shall not exceed 50 per cent of the total estimated cost thereof, except that in the case of any State containing unappropriated public lands and reservations under Federal control exceeding 5 per cent of the total area of all lands in the State, as shown by certificate of the Secretary of the Interior, which he is directed to make and furnish annually to the Secretary of Agriculture, the share of the United States payable under this act on account of such project shall not exceed such 50 per cent of the total estimated cost thereof plus a percentage of such total estimated cost equal to one-half of the percentage which the area of the unappropriated public land plus the area embraced in reservations under Federal control in such State bears to the total area of such State.

The Senate, upon the contrary, has apparently been unable to appreciate the fact that it is just as expensive to build highways over the untaxed reservations under Federal control as it is over the untaxed public domain, and has consistently refused to give the Western States credit for anything except the unappropriated public lands. The original Phipps bill, which passed the Senate on May 16, 1921, contains the following provision, which is substantially repeated in the Senate amendment adopted on August 19:

> The Secretary of the Treasury shall thereupon set aside the share of the United States payable under this act on account of such project, which shall not exceed 50 per cent of the total estimated cost thereof, except that, in the case of any State containing unappropriated public lands exceeding 5 per cent of the total area of all lands in the State, the share of the United States payable under this act on account of such projects shall not exceed such 50 per cent of the total estimated cost thereof, plus a percentage of such total estimated cost equal to one-half of the percentage which the area of the unappropriated public land in such State bears to the total area of such State.

By comparing the provisions of the Senate and House bills which I have quoted it will be observed that both bodies have agreed that the Western States should be given credit for the area of the "unappropriated public lands" within their borders in determining the share that they should contribute toward the construction of Federal aid road projects and that the only issue to be determined by the conferees was whether similar credit should be extended for the area of "reservations under Federal control." I have discussed this issue at length with the House conferees and I am satisfied that they did their best, but the Senate was unyielding, and in order to reach the complete agreement that we have before us to-day they were compelled to abandon the position recommended by the Association of State Highway Officials and heretofore approved by the House. My primary object in submitting these remarks is that the country may know that it is by reason of the refusal on the part of the Senate to accord justice in this bill to the States containing untaxed Indian lands that we are forced to seek relief by insisting that Congress shall make direct appropriations for the construction of roads on Indian reservations.

It has been said in another body that there is no authority of law for the expenditure of Federal aid road funds on roads within Indian reservations, but whoever it was that made that assertion evidently had not looked at the law. The Federal aid act as amended now provides that—

> The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to cooperate with the States, through their respective State highway departments, in the construction of * * * any public road a major portion of which is now used or can be used, * * * for the transportation of the United States mails.

A public road is a way for passage or travel that is open to use by all persons without discrimination. The roads on all Indian reservations are freely used by anyone who desires to travel thereon, and the United States mails are regularly transported over them. The Indian reservation roads, therefore, as fully and completely comply with every requirement of the law as any other roads in the United States that have received that benefit of Federal aid.

Whoever raised this issue was not only ignorant of the law but also unaware of the fact that Federal aid has been and is being extended for the construction of roads within Indian reservations. In my own State $77,694 from the United States Treasury has already been expended on the San Carlos Apache Reservation as Federal aid on a part of project No. 15, between Globe and Geronimo. All except a mile and a half of the 57 miles in this project is within the Indian reservation, and the total amount of Federal aid allotted to it is $309,312, every dollar of which must be matched by another dollar advanced by the taxpayers of Arizona.

And right there is the rub. The taxpayers of my State very properly want to know why they should be compelled to bear the entire expense of matching Federal aid for the construction of roads over untaxed Indian lands. They are perfectly willing to concede that the white people of Arizona should pay a fair share of the cost of building such roads, but they insist that the Indians should contribute at least a portion of the expense, based upon the use that the red men make of the roads within the State. They justly say that if the Federal Government will not permit the State of Arizona to tax the Indian lands and other property, then it is the duty of the Congress to provide a way whereby an equitable share of the necessary road funds may be made available by the United States on behalf of its Indian wards.

As an illustration of the great burden that is now being carried by the taxpayers of the West, let me direct your attention to the statement made during the hearings by Mr. Thomas MacDonald, the Chief of the Bureau of Public Roads, when he pointed out that "Massachusetts last year spent about 0.11 per cent of its taxable valuation for road purposes, while the State of Arizona spent 0.56 per cent, over five times as much on each dollar of wealth."

The Senate has recognized that the Western States are entitled to pay a less share of road construction in proportion to the area of unappropriated public lands within their borders. The only reason for granting this recognition is that the public lands can not be taxed. But the title to every acre within an Indian reservation, a national forest, a national park, or a military reservation is also in the United States and for that sole cause is not subject to State taxation. Since the exemption of the public lands from any form of taxation by the States is the only basis for the action taken by the Senate, I can not see by what logic that body could fail to agree with the House that all other untaxed lands in "reservations under Federal control" should likewise be taken into consideration in determining the share to be advanced by the Western States for road construction under the Federal aid plan.

We are told that the forest reserves are not in the same category with the public lands, because over $11,000,000 has heretofore been expended from the Federal Treasury in the construction of roads and trails within or adjacent to the national forests and that this bill carries $15,000,000 to be used for a like purpose within the next two years. These sums have been appropriated for two purposes: First, in lieu of taxes, but not entirely so, because it has been conservatively estimated that the national forest lands, even in their present undeveloped condition if privately owned would pay $14,500,000 each year in State and county taxes. Second, in order to make more available for use the 700,000,000,000 feet of standing timber worth, at the present price of stumpage, $575,000,000.

We are also told that credit should not be given for the areas within the national parks and military reservations because Congress annually makes direct appropriations for road construction therein. Last year the total amount carried in the Army appropriation bill for roads, walks, improvement of grounds, and so forth, on military reservations was $900,000, but only a nominal sum was expended for this purpose at Fort Huachuca and Fort Apache, in Arizona. The sundry civil bill allowed $300,000 for the construction of roads, trails, and bridges in the national parks, of which $100,000 was made available at the Grand Canyon National Park, in Arizona.

But what of the Indian reservations? Like the public lands, they are untaxed; but, unlike the forest and military reserves and national parks, there is no general authority of law for road construction. Only in special instances have appropriations been made for road and bridge building, and all such sums have been made reimbursable. The Indian reservations comprise over 25 per cent of the total area of the State that I have the honor to represent, yet the last Indian appropriation bill carried but $5,000 for road and bridge construction on the Indian reservations in Arizona. In the 10 fiscal years since the State of Arizona was admitted into the Union the total amount appropriated in the Indian bill for expenditure on the Indian reservations in Arizona—and practically all of it was for bridges—has been $223,800. Will any fair-minded man say that over a quarter of the area of the State should not have contributed many times more than this amount toward the construction of the State highway system? The Annual Report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs for 1920 estimates the value of all the lands and other property of the Indians of Arizona at $61,843,402. The State road tax rate this year is 5 cents on the hundred dollars, and the average county road tax rate is 15 cents per hundred, or a total of 20 cents, so that the State and county road taxes alone on this property would be approximately $123,000, if the same could be collected.

I have carefully noted the provision of the bill which provides for cooperation by the Secretary of the Interior. It reads as follows:

> The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to cooperate with the State highway departments and with the Department of the Interior in the construction of public highways within Indian reservations, and to pay the amount assumed therefor from the funds allotted or apportioned under this act to the State wherein the reservation is located.

This authority of law would no doubt be useful provided Congress appropriates the money to make the cooperation actual instead of theoretical. The conferees appointed from the Committee on Roads have agreed to this provision, but it will remain perfectly meaningless unless they and the other members of the Committee on Roads join with those of us who have Indian reservations in our districts and help to convince the House that these are not idle words, but convey the distinct implication that Congress shall provide the Secretary of the Interior with funds to "cooperate with the Secretary of Agriculture in the construction of public highways within Indian reservations."

The statements that I have made are not new to my fellow members of the Committee on Indian Affairs, but when I have pressed them to authorize general appropriations for roads and bridges on Indian reservations they insist that the proper way to proceed is by having the matter cared for by an amendment to the Federal aid road act, which can only be accomplished through the Committee on Roads. When I approach the members of the Committee on Roads they say that this question is entirely within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Indian Affairs. But in the meantime, while the buck is being passed back and forth, nothing is done and practically all the roads that are being built on the Indian reservations in Arizona are being paid for by the taxpayers of that State.

This conference report represents a final agreement between the House and Senate on the Federal aid road policy for the immediate future. It can not be amended and, of course, it will be accepted as the best compromise obtainable. But this question of road building on untaxed Indian lands remains unsettled and it ought to be settled right. Since the Senate and House have determined not to give the Western States credit for their Indian lands in meeting the allotments of Federal aid, there is but one other way to proceed, and that is for Congress to make similar appropriations for road construction on Indian reservations as have been provided for in the national forest reserves, the national parks, and the military reservations.

From the figures compiled in the last annual report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs I have prepared the following table showing the untaxed Indian lands in the United States. The only changes that I have made in the commissioner's figures are to add 100,000 acres granted by the State of Florida to the Seminoles and to subtract 9,551,890 acres from the total in Oklahoma, because Hon. Tom. D. McKeown estimated that about one-half of the lands allotted to Indians in that State are now taxed. The table also shows how much money would be apportioned for expenditure within each State if Congress would appropriate, on behalf of the Indians, only 1 per cent per acre each year in lieu of the State and county road taxes that would otherwise be collected if the title to these lands was not in the Indians or the Federal Government.

State.	Acres.	Apportionment.

Total	61,946,840	619,468

This bill as finally agreed upon appropriates $75,000,000 to aid the States in the construction of roads, one-third of which is made immediately available and the remainder after the 1st of next January. Out of this $75,000,000 the amount apportioned to Arizona will be $1,053,000, but instead of having to raise a like sum to match it the taxpayers of that State will only be required to advance $673,218. This reduction in the contribution by the State is occasioned by the provision of the bill which gives Arizona credit for the 16,209,426 acres of unappropriated public land within her borders. According to the latest figures from the Interior Department the public domain comprises 22 per cent of the area of Arizona. Giving the State credit for one-half of this percentage means that for every dollar expended on Federal aid road projects in Arizona during this fiscal year the United States will contribute 61 cents and the State 39 cents.

If credit had also been given for all the untaxed "reservations under Federal control," as provided in the House bill, the percentage in Arizona would have been raised to 65 with a resulting contribution by the State of but 17½ cents out of each dollar expended. Conceding that the direct appropriations made by Congress for roads within the national forests, the national parks, and military reservations are sufficient to eliminate such untaxed areas from consideration if Arizona had been given credit for both the unappropriated public lands and the Indian reservations within the State, these two classes of untaxed lands would aggregate 47 per cent of the total area and the Arizona taxpayers would have to advance but 26½ cents, while the United States would contribute 73½ cents of each dollar expended on Federal aid road projects.

The Senate has insisted and now the House is to agree that the States shall not receive the same credit for the untaxed Indian lands as is granted for the untaxed public lands. Since this fixed policy is to be adopted the only recourse left for the States affected is to demand that Congress make direct annual appropriations of money for road construction on Indian reservations in the same proportion and in lieu of taxes as this bill now provides in the case of the national forest reserves. It is only by this method that a large body of heavily taxed citizens can be relieved of the unjust burden of providing the money for the construction of roads that are used free of cost by nontaxpaying property-owning Indians. [Applause.]

Mr. ROBSION. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HILL].

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, there is not one inch of Federal aided road in my district, but my district is an integral and important part of my State, and the State of Maryland is strong for this bill. Maryland feels that this bill is in the interest of the whole people of that State and of the whole country. I have here a telegram I received to-day and two letters from the chairman of the State Roads Commission of the State of Maryland, with whom I have gone over Senate bill 1072, the Phipps and other previous bills on this subject, and which I incorporate in my remarks at this point, together with some very pertinent extracts from the report of the managers on the part of the House:

STATE OF MARYLAND STATE ROADS COMMISSION,
Baltimore, Md., August 25, 1921.

Col. JOHN PHILIP HILL,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR COLONEL: Your letter of August 23 received and very much appreciated.

I am sure you are going to find Senate bill 1072 everything that you want, for in addition to the changes which we outlined to our delegation in Congress at the conference in which you took the leading part you will find that they have also eliminated the commission feature to which you especially objected.

You have interpreted the sentiment on this point very accurately, because you will find from the records that only 15 Senators voted to retain the commission, despite the fact that the committee had reported favorably the commission idea, and some of these 15, I am sure, were "courtesy" votes.

Very truly, yours, J. N. MACKALL, Chairman.

STATE OF MARYLAND, STATE ROADS COMMISSION,
Baltimore, Md., June 29, 1921.

Hon. JOHN PHILIP HILL,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. HILL: Please accept our sincere thanks for the splendid support which you gave the Phipps bill Monday. It is certainly gratifying to us to know that we have such able support from our Representatives in Congress, and I am sure your constituents will feel as we did, that the continuance of Federal aid is very desirable, and that only by the Phipps bill can we hope for this.

Very truly, yours,

J. N. MACKALL, Chairman.

STATEMENT OF THE MANAGERS ON THE PART OF THE HOUSE.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the amendment of the House to the bill S. 1072 submit the following written statement explaining the effect of the action agreed on. The bill is now submitted in this report for approval of the House, is substantially as the bill passed the House with some exceptions as to appropriations. The principal features of the bill which passed the House were:

1. To have the Federal aid road law administered by the Department of Agriculture under the Bureau of Public Roads instead of by a commission.

2. The initiative in locating roads to receive Federal aid shall remain in the States, subject to the approval of the Department of Agriculture, instead of a commission at Washington.

3. The several State highway departments, with the approval of the Department of Agriculture, shall lay out a system of roads interstate and intercounty in character and not interstate alone.

4. The funds from the several States put up to match Federal aid, from whatever source derived, shall be subject to the direct control of the highway department of the several States.

5. The several States shall maintain and keep in good repair at all times all highways constructed with Federal aid. A penalty is provided for failure to put in proper repairs after 90 days' notice from the Department of Agriculture.

6. In all States having more than 5 per cent of its area in unappropriated public lands greater participation in Federal aid is allowed in proportion to the amount of such unappropriated public lands.

7. No State shall receive less than one-half of 1 per cent of the fund available for the construction of highways.

8. Special provisions were made to take care of roads and trails within, adjacent to, and serving forest reservations and other reservations under Federal control.

9. The time given each State to match and take up the Federal aid allotted to it has been extended for a period of one year, making the time two years instead of one year.

10. Three years' time from and after the passage of this act is given to those States whose laws or constitution will not permit the State to provide revenues for the construction, reconstruction, or maintenance of highways to change their constitution or laws to meet the requirements of this act.

The foregoing are the essential features of the road bill as it passed the House and are fully incorporated in the bill as it passed the Senate and are now set forth in the conference report.

* * * * * * *

5. The bill as amended by the Senate provided for an appropriation of $75,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, to aid the States in the construction of highways, $25,000,000 of which should become immediately available and $50,000,000 to be available six months after the passage of this act. The bill which passed the House last February provided $100,000,000 for the present fiscal year. The Senate fixed the sum at $75,000,000 on the recommendation of the Secretary of Agriculture. As many months have elapsed since the passage of the bill in the Senate, it was deemed advisable by the conferees and so agreed to that $25,000,000 shall be immediately available and the other $50,000,000 shall be available January 1, 1922. The action was deemed wise on account of the unemployment situation throughout the country and it being a favorable time to secure contracts for the construction of roads at greatly reduced cost.

This particular measure has been the subject of very careful consideration by both the House and the Senate and of very careful consideration on the part of the State road engineers of the country. It is certainly a bill which Maryland wishes to see passed, and I shall vote for it. [Applause.]

Mr. ROBSION. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. SINNOTT].

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, sharp criticism has been made to-day because some of the money appropriated in this bill is to be devoted to the building of roads and trails in national forests. The last national Republican platform had this to say on that subject:

In determining the proportion of Federal aid for road construction among the States, the sums lost in taxation to the respective States by the setting apart of large portions of their area as forest reservations should be considered as a controlling factor.

That plank of the Republican platform has been written into this bill. Furthermore, along that line, there are over 150,- 000,000 acres withdrawn from taxation in these national forests. An area as large as Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New York, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, and North Carolina, all combined. If that land in the national forest was to-day paying taxes those 27 States that have these national forests would receive each year more than $14,000,000 in taxation. If that land was upon the tax roll those States would not be here asking a dollar for these trails and roads. Furthermore, Uncle Sam in respect to those States having those national forests is really an absentee landlord owning those enormous areas, and he should pay his share for the necesary trails and roads. The farmer might just as well ask the State to build lanes and his own private roads on his farm, as to have Uncle Sam say, "Here, the States, should build these trails, the States should build these roads necessary for the development of Uncle Sam's holdings." Mr. E. J. Adams, secretary to Senator STANFIELD, and an expert and great student of this subject, says that there are 268 townships in these national forests, that is over 6,000,000 acres, where there are no roads or trails of any kind.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ROBSION. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. LAZARO].

Mr. LAZARO. Mr. Speaker, I am glad that the House and Senate committees have at last agreed to report the Federal good roads bill, and I hope that it will soon be enacted into law. It would have been false economy to have discontinued Federal aid to the States, which began five years ago.

If there is one problem that is vital to all the people of the United States to-day, it is the problem of transportation. Adequate transportation facilities are absolutely necessary if those who produce and those who consume are to get the benefits of our unlimited resources in the United States. It is very evident that the people throughout the country are realizing the benefits of good roads as one of the most important links in the entire system of transportation. Not only that good roads will help to reduce passenger and freight rates, but they are absolutely necessary for the development of the country.

In connection with the building of good roads the people are demanding four things. First, Federal aid; second, the wise and economical expenditure of the money from the State and Federal Governments in the building of good roads; third, a permanent maintenance fund to maintain the roads after they have been built; and fourth, that the roads be built where they will be of the greatest advantage to the people.

I want to call attention to what I consider the main provisions in this Federal-aid road law. First, it will be administered by the Department of Agriculture, under the Bureau of Public Roads. Second, that the initiative in locating the roads to receive Federal aid shall remain in the States. Third, that the several State highway departments (with the approval of the Department of Agriculture) shall lay out a system interstate and intercounty in character and not interstate alone. Fourth, that the funds from the several States to be put up to match Federal aid shall be subject to the direct control of the highway departments of the several States. Fifth, that the States shall maintain and keep in good repair at all times all highways constructed with Federal aid.

Those essential provisions of the road bill were incorporated in the bill as it passed the House. The people need good roads and they want Federal aid. Therefore this bill, carrying an appropriation of $75,000,000, should be enacted into law as soon as possible. [Applause.]

Mr. ROBSION. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the conference report.

The question was taken, and the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer the following motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. HUDSPETH. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas offers a motion to recommit, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. HUDSPETH moves to recommit S. 1072 to the committee on conference with instruction to the House conferees to agree to an elimination from the amendment recommended by the conference the following provisions: On page 17, line 1, after the word "thereof," "and made available for expenditure under the direct control of the State highway department," and the same language where it occurs in lines 7 and 8, on page 21, and also all of sections 6 and 24.

Mr. ROBSION. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to recommit.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, we are not able to determine what this is from the reading of the motion to recommit. I think the House should have some information as to what it is voting on.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the eliminated matter be reported.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the matter eliminated will be reported.

The motion to recommit was again reported.

Mr. ROBSION. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken, and the previous question was ordered.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, sections 6 and 24 are short, and I ask unanimous consent that they be read at this point so that Members who have not a copy of the bill in their hands may know what they are.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the sections referred to will be read.

There was no objection.

The sections were reported.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to recommit.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. HUDSPETH) there were—ayes 24, noes 113.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 36, nays 264, answered "present" 1, not voting 131, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will open the doors.

The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House proceeded to divide, and the Speaker counted those in the affirmative.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused.

The SPEAKER. The gentlemen who are opposed to agreeing to the conference report will rise and be counted.

The counting of the vote was completed, and the Speaker announced—ayes 194, noes 36.

So the conference report was agreed to.

AGRICULTURAL ENTRIES ON COAL LANDS IN ALASKA.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 8842.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oregon moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 8842, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that that bill is not privileged.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8842) to provide for agricultural entries on coal lands in Alaska.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee makes the point of order that the bill is not privileged.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I thought that bill had been referred back to the committee.

The SPEAKER. Yes; but that bill has been reported again.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Can the Speaker state how many days it has been on the calendar.

The SPEAKER. It has been on the calendar for several days.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I thought it was only yesterday they sent it back.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I am sure that this is a matter that has had the consideration of the Speaker, and I do not care to take up the time of the Chair in arguing the question.

Mr. SINNOTT. In addition, Mr. Speaker, to my argument in the RECORD on October 24, page 6687, on the privileged character of a similar bill, H. R. 7948, for which this bill H. R. 8842 is a substitute, I wish to add, Mr. Speaker, that the rule giving the Committee on the Public Lands the right to report privileged bills is as follows:

RULE XI, CLAUSE 56.

The following committee shall have leave to report at any time on the matters herein stated, viz: * * * The Committee on the Public Lands, bills for the forfeiture of land grants to railroad and other corporations, bills preventing speculation in the public lands, and bills for the reservation of the public lands for the benefit of actual and bona fide settlers.

Mr. Speaker, that rule was adopted in the Forty-ninth Congress, first session. It is found on page 322 of the RECORD of that session, December 18, 1885. Mr. Cobb, then chairman of the Public Lands Committee, was the author of the present rule. When Mr. Cobb advocated that rule upon the floor, he said, page 322 of the RECORD:

Mr. Speaker, I think Members will at once see the importance of this amendment, which simply embodies what was a special rule of the House in the last Congress.

Now, he was referring to the Forty-eighth Congress, when a special rule was passed giving the Committee on the Public Lands the right to report privileged bills. The present rule is really that rule of the Forty-eighth Congress, stated in a more condensed, compact form. The present rule is really an epitome of the special rule adopted in the Forty-eighth Congress. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I think it will be helpful to read the rule that was adopted in that Congress. It is found in the proceedings of that Congress, first session Forty-eighth Congress, page 546 of the RECORD, and adopted January 28, 1884. This special rule was introduced by Mr. Holman, then the chairman of the Committee on the Public Lands, and it is as follows:

Resolved, That in the judgment of this House all the public lands heretofore granted to States and corporations to aid in the construction of railroads, so far as the same are now subject to forfeiture by reason of the nonfulfillment of the conditions on which the grants were made, ought to be declared forfeited to the United States and restored to the public domain.

Of course, that part of the rule has nothing to do with the present bill before the House, but even that language has been embodied into our present rule in a more condensed form. Now, I call attention to this part of the rule adopted in the Forty-eighth Congress, because it throws light on the present rule:

Resolved, That it is of the highest public interest that the laws touching the public lands should be so framed and administered as to ultimately secure freehold therein to the greatest number of citizens; and to that end all laws facilitating speculation in the public lands or authorizing or permitting the entry or purchase thereof in large bodies ought to be repealed, and all of the public lands adapted to agriculture (subject to bounty grants and those in aid of education)——

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SINNOTT. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. That is merely the reading of a resolution expressing a thought on the part of the House. It does not go to the procedure.

Mr. SINNOTT. No. That was a special rule adopted at that session of Congress, and when our present rule was adopted its author, Mr. Cobb, stated that it embodied the special rule adopted at the last Congress.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. What the gentleman has read is not a rule in the ordinary sense, a rule of procedure. It declares a contention, but it does not provide for consideration.

Mr. SINNOTT. Oh, yes; it does, as the gentleman will see when I conclude the reading. It says:

And all of the public lands adapted to agriculture—subject to bounty grants and those in aid of education—ought to be reserved for the benefit of actual and bona fide settlers and disposed of under the provisions of the homestead laws only.

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands is hereby instructed to report to the House bills to carry into effect the views expressed in the foregoing resolutions; that said committee shall be authorized to report such bills at any time, subject only to revenue and appropriation bills, and the same shall in like order be entitled to consideration.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SINNOTT. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Did the application of that rule at that session of Congress apply to coal lands in any Territory?

Mr. SINNOTT. I do not recall that there was any legislation up at that session covering coal lands.

Now, in the debate upon that special rule, in the Forty-eighth Congress Mr. Holman, the author of the rule, referred to frauds committed under the preemption law to the detriment of actual settlers. He referred to large bodies of land acquired by capitalists; to the commutation clause of the homestead law as a means of fraud. He further said that the policy of the Government always was to secure ownership of the freeholds in the largest number of citizens; that a republic rests on its freeholding and independent people.

Then he proceeded to make an argument regarding the wisdom of permitting the homestead settler to go upon the lands of the Nation to make entries, to secure a freehold in those lands, as against the capitalists that he referred to, who, he said, were endeavoring to secure title to the land in large tracts. The rule he was discussing, according to Mr. Cobb, the author of our present rule, is embodied in our present rule.

That, Mr. Speaker, I desire to add to the argument that I made on the 24th of October. I understand that the Speaker has read my argument in the RECORD on October 24, so that I shall not reiterate any of that argument.

In addition to the citations in the argument on the 24th of October I desire to call to the attention of the Chair a decision of Speaker CANNON in the Sixty-first Congress, second session, April 13, 1910, RECORD page 4632, when the very law that we are now endeavoring to apply to Alaska was considered in the House as a House bill; that is, the coal land bill, giving a surface right of entry on coal lands in the different States called up by Mr. MONDELL, then chairman of the Committee on the Public Lands on Calendar Wednesday. A point of order was made against calling up that bill on the ground that it was a privileged bill and could not be called up on Calendar Wednesday, whereupon the following colloquy ensued:

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 13907) to provide for agricultural entries on coal lands.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

"A bill (H. R. 13907) to provide for agricultural entries on coal lands."

Mr. CRAIG. Now, I make the point of order, the bill is privileged and not in order on Calendar Wednesday.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the bill is not in order on Calendar Wednesday.

The SPEAKER. To which the gentleman from Alabama makes the point of order that, being privileged, the bill is not in order on Calendar Wednesday. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read at length.

Mr. CRAIG. Mr. Speaker, under Rule XI, subdivision 61——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman makes the point of order?

Mr. CRAIG. I make the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is prepared to rule. The Chair practically ruled a week ago to-day upon a question that arose similar to the one that arises on the present bill. Ruling under the same rule, although it was a different bill, the Chair then overruled the point of order.

Mr. CRAIG. But this is entirely different.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is about to state:

The following-named committees shall have leave to report at any time on the matters herein stated:

The Committee on the Public Lands, for the forfeiture of land grants to railroad and other corporations, bills preventing speculation in the public lands, and bills for the reservation of the public lands for the benefit of actual and bona fide settlers.

This bill on its face permits homesteads upon the public lands to bona fide and actual settlers for the surface, and it seems to the Chair that under the rule it is a privileged bill, which is therefore not in order to-day.

That decision of Speaker CANNON, Mr. Speaker, I contend, is a decision directly in point. But without that decision the authorities that I cited on October 24 indicate very plainly that this is a privileged bill.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may extend my remarks on this point of order by incorporating my other argument with this argument to-day, so that they may be together in one place in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I have no objection to the gentleman extending his remarks on the point of order. It is an unusual thing, but I have no objection.

Mr. SINNOTT. My idea is to have the different authorities cited and brought together in one place in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The Speaker is to decide the point of order; I do not care.

Mr. SINNOTT. I shall print at this point my argument on October 24 last:

JURISDICTION OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE PUBLIC LANDS TO REPORT PRIVILEGED BILLS.

Rule XI as it relates to the Committee on the Public Lands is as follows:

"The following-named committees shall have leave to report at any time on the matters herein stated, viz, * * * the Committee on the Public Lands, bills for the forfeiture of land grants to railroad and other corporations, bills preventing speculation in the public lands, and bills for the reservation of the public lands for the benefit of actual and bona fide settlers."

CONSTRUCTION BY DIFFERENT SPEAKERS ON RULE XI, CLAUSE 56, AS IT RELATES TO THE COMMITTEE ON THE PUBLIC LANDS.

The leading decisions on the rule giving privilege to the Committee on the Public Lands are cited in volume 4, Hinds' Precedents, sections 4633 to 4639, inclusive.

DECISIONS BY SPEAKER CARLISLE.

The bill H. R. 7901, the subject of Speaker Carlisle's decision on March 17, 1888, Fiftieth Congress, first session, page 2195, cited and copiously quoted in section 4633 of Hinds' Precedents, may be found in the House library, volume 34, House bills, Fiftieth Congress, first session.

Speaker Carlisle held this bill privileged, although its title was as follows:

"To secure to actual settlers the public lands adapted to agriculture, to protect the forest on the public domain, and for other purposes."

And the bill, which is too long to read now, in addition to provisions relating to actual and bona fide settlers, covered the following subjects:

"Section 2 provides for classification and sale of mineral lands under existing law.

"Section 3 provides for entry by a citizen or association of citizens on 160 acres of vacant iron or coal lands.

"Sections 4, 5, 6, and 7 provide for sale of timber.

"Section 8 provides for reserving timberlands as public reservations.

"Section 10 provides for the disposition of lands chiefly valuable for stone, unfit for cultivation, and destitute of timber.

"Section 11 provides for public or private sale of isolated tracts.

"Section 27 makes it unlawful to cut or destroy timber on the lands of the United States, or to set fire to any tree on such lands, or to knowingly manufacture any lumber from such timber.

"Section 28 dedicates 2 rods of each side of the section line on said lands for public highways."

When section 2 of the bill was read, which is as follows:

"SEC. 2. That all public lands chiefly valuable for mineral deposits—namely, iron, coal, gold, silver, cinnabar, lead, copper, nickel, and tin—and every contiguous 160 acres or less quantity thereof, in legal subdivisions, the greater part of which is unfit for cultivation, shall be classified as mineral lands, and shall be disposed of under existing laws, except as herein provided. All iron lands shall be disposed of in like manner as is provided by law for entry of coal lands."

Mr. Adams contended that enough had been read to show that the bill was not privileged, on the ground that it had been decided that a matter can not be privileged which contains other matter not privileged in its character. Speaker Carlisle in overruling the point of order among other things said:

"In other words, it is impossible to enlarge the area of the public lands subject to entry under the homestead law without in some way legislating in respect to lands that are not now subject to homestead entry."

This quotation is from Hinds' Precedents, Volume IV, section 4633, where excerpts from the decision are given.

Another decision by Speaker Carlisle may be found in CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Fiftieth Congress, second session, volume 20, part 1, on page 47. This decision is copiously quoted in Volume IV, section 4637, Hinds' Precedents, from which I take the following quotation:

"The Chair has invariably placed a very liberal construction upon that rule"—

Referring to said Rule XI. On this same page 47 of the RECORD of the Fiftieth Congress, second session, Mr. Holman, who reported House bill 7901, in the first session, in his argument as to the privileged character of House bill 1368, the subject of Speaker Carlisle's decision, referred to House bill 7901, held by the Speaker privileged in the first session as follows, showing the character of the bill which Speaker Carlisle held privileged:

"I refer especially, Mr. Speaker, to the decision made by the Chair on the question of order raised on the general land bill at the last session. The general purpose of that bill—the general scope of it—was to secure the public lands to actual settlers, but it necessarily involved a vast amount of other matters—protection of coal fields from monopoly, protection of water courses from monopoly, protection of forests from destruction, and a multitude of other incidental matter. That bill bristled with legislation provisions which are prominent and yet only incidental, and in some cases only remotely incidental, to the general purpose of protecting to the actual settlers the public lands, yet the point of order was overruled, whereas this bill contains but a single subject matter and the provisions directly necessary to secure the purpose sought to be attained, namely, that certain lands heretofore granted by Congress to a corporation shall be restored to the public domain and secured for the benefit of actual settlers."

Another decision of Speaker Carlisle is cited in the second footnote under section 4638 of volume 4, Hinds' Precedents, on page 963. In addition to the subjects mentioned in the footnote, the bill related to the desert-land law where no settlement is required. The bill also required a map of the irrigation plan showing its sufficiency, and also related to abandoned military reservations, land warrants, and land scrip.

DECISION BY SPEAKER CRISP.

The bill, S. 3643, held privileged by Speaker Crisp, cited in volume 4, section 4635, of Hinds' Precedents, is printed in CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, volume 24, Fifty-second Congress, second session, January 26, 1893, on page 864. The following is a copy of the bill held privileged:

"Be it enacted, etc., That all public lands now remaining undisposed within the abandoned military reservation in the State of Wyoming, known as the Fort Bridger Military Reservation, are hereby made subject to disposal under the homestead law only: Provided, That actual occupants thereon upon the 1st day of July, 1892, shall have the preference right to make one entry not exceeding one quarter section under existing laws if qualified, which shall include their respective improvements: Provided further, That any of such lands as are occupied for town-site purposes and any of the lands that may be shown to be valuable for coal or minerals shall be disposed of as now provided for lands subject to entry and sale under the town-site coal or mineral land laws, respectively."

It will be noted that while in the first part of the bill the land is to be disposed of under the homestead law only, yet the last proviso provides that any of the land occupied for town-site purposes and any land valuable for coal or minerals shall be disposed of under the town site, coal, or mineral land laws, respectively. This decision of Speaker Crisp may be found in the RECORD for the Fifty-second Congress, second session, page 2177, February 25, 1893.

DECISION BY SPEAKER REED.

An important decision of Speaker Reed is cited in section 4638, volume 4, Hinds' Precedents, wherein Speaker Reed is quoted:

"The Chair thinks that this provision has always had a liberal construction, and will decide that it is a privileged matter."

The provision referred to, of course, is Rule XI, clause 56, as it relates to the Committee on the Public Lands. I shall read the bill, which is printed in the RECORD of the Fifty-fourth Congress, first session, page 1760, February 15, 1896, which Speaker Reed held privileged:

"Be it enacted, etc., That suits by the United States to vacate and annul any patent to lands heretofore erroneously issued under a special grant shall only be brought within five years from the passage of this act, and suits to vacate and annul patents hereafter issued shall only be brought within 10 years after the date of the issuance of such patents. But no patent to any lands held by a bona fide purchaser shall be vacated or annulled, but the right and title of such purchaser is hereby confirmed.

"SEC. 2. That if any person claiming to be a bona fide purchaser of any lands erroneously patented or certified shall present his claim to the Secretary of the Interior prior to the institution of a suit to cancel a patent or certification, and if it shall appear that he is a bona fide purchaser, the Secretary of the Interior shall request that suit be brought in such case against the patentee, or the corporation, company, person, or association of persons for whose benefit the certification was made, for the value of said land, which in no case shall be less than minimum Government price thereof nor more than the amount paid by the purchaser to the original grantee of the United States, and the title of such claimant shall stand confirmed. An adverse decision by the Secretary of the Interior on the bona fides of such claimant shall not be conclusive of his rights, and if such claimant or one claiming to be a bone fide purchaser, but who has not submitted his claim to the Secretary of the Interior, is made a party to such suit and if found by the court to be a bona fide purchaser, the court shall decree a confirmation of the title and shall render a decree in behalf of the United States for the value of the land as hereinbefore provided. Any bona fide purchaser of lands patented or certified to a railroad company, and who is not made a party of such suit, and who has not submitted his claim to the Secretary of the Interior, may establish his right as such bona fide purchaser in any United States court having jurisdiction of the subject matter, or, at his option, as prescribed in sections 3 and 4 of chapter 376 of the acts of the second session of the Forty-ninth Congress.

"SEC. 3. That if at any time prior to the institution of suit by the Attorney General to cancel any patent or certification of lands erroneously patented or certified, a claim or statement is presented to the Secretary of the Interior by or on behalf of any person or persons, corporation or corporations, claiming that such person or persons, corporation or corporations, is a bona fide purchaser or are bona fide purchasers of any patented or certified land by deed or contract, or otherwise, from or through the original patentee or corporation to which patent or certificate was issued, no suit or action shall be brought to cancel or annul the patent or certification for said land until such claim is investigated in said Department of the Interior; and if it shall appear that such person or corporation is a bona fide purchaser as aforesaid, or that such persons or corporations are such bona fide purchasers, then no such suit shall be instituted and the title of such claimant or claimants shall stand confirmed; but the Secretary of the Interior shall request that suit be brought in such case against the patentee, or the corporation, company, person, or association of persons for whose benefit the patent was issued or certification was made for the value of the land as hereinbefore specified."

It is obvious from these decisions of Speakers Carlisle, Crisp, and Reed that a liberal construction has always been given this Rule XI, clause 56, as it relates to the rights of the Committee on the Public Lands.

Examining H. R. 7948 in the light of these decisions, it is apparent that the bill is entitled to a privileged character. Section 1 of the bill grants actual settlers a surface homestead right on public lands containing coal, oil, or gas, which are not now subject to homestead settlement. Section 1 enlarges the area of the public domain subject to homestead settlement. Section 2 of the bill provides for the issuance of a patent with a reservation to the United States of all the coal, oil, or gas in the land patented. Section 2 further protects and safeguards the rights of the homestead settler by restricting the operations of the coal, oil, or gas permittee or lessee in the interest of the homestead settler; it also requires the permittee or lessee to give a bond for the payment of damages to the crops or improvements on the land. It will be remembered that the coal, oil, or gas deposits in the land covered by H. R. 7948 are now subject to disposition under the Alaska coal leasing act of October 20, 1914 (38 Stat., 741), and the oil leasing act of the Sitxy-sixth Congress, Public 146, approved February 25, 1920, United States Statutes at Large, volume 41, page 437. Said acts provide for the removal of said minerals by permit or lease.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, the main provisions of section 2 are to insure to the settler the fullest use of the homestead with the least possible molestation from the permittee or lessee; the means for accomplishing this object are by requiring a bond or undertaking against damages to crops and improvements, also by restricting the permittee or lessee to so much of the surface only as may be reasonably required for his mining operations. Without such safeguards and restrictions the privilege of the homestead settler would be bootless and nugatory. This proposition is well stated in that part of Speaker Carlisle's decision on H. R. 7901, Fiftieth Congress, first session, not quoted in Hinds' Precedents, section 4633, and which I shall read:

"The Chair supposes that a bill reported from this committee might include matters having no relation to the public lands or to the privileged subjects mentioned in the rule, and thus might lose its privilege; but the Chair will state that in such a bill all provisions relating to the preservation of the public lands for actual settlers, and providing the means for accomplishing that object, are certainly privileged; otherwise the privilege would amount to nothing."

Mr. WALSH rose.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. Assuming that the patent is issued and the final certificate is given prior to the discovery that the land is coal land, is there any restriction upon the person who secures the patent in reference to the future use of that land?

Mr. SINNOTT. The coal, oil, and gas deposits are reserved for all time.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman contend that permitting the homesteader to mine coal upon this land is granting a patent for agricultural purposes?

Mr. SINNOTT. What does the gentleman refer to when he speaks of permitting the homesteader to mine coal?

Mr. WALSH. Does not this bill contain a provision that the owner of the patent may mine coal upon the land?

Mr. SINNOTT. No; this bill does not contain that provision; but the original Alaska coal law might permit him to mine for his own domestic purposes.

Mr. WALSH. The person who was granted this land for agricultural uses?

Mr. SINNOTT. For a limited domestic use, but not for sale.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] desire to be heard?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I have no opposition to this bill. Probably it ought to pass. Possibly the details ought to be amended. But I do not think it ought to be considered as a privileged bill unless it really be privileged, and I do not believe that the history of the rule as cited by the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. SINNOTT] would cause the philosophy of this bill to square with the rule.

The rule under which the House is operating provides that the following-named committees shall have leave to report at any time on the matters herein stated, namely, the Committee on the Public Lands, on bills for the forfeiture of land grants to railroad and other corporations, bills preventing speculation in the public lands, and bills for the reservation of the public lands for the benefit of actual and bona fide settlers.

I take it that what was in thought in the adoption of this rule was to preserve the public domain. Now, this bill is to open up the public domain for settlement, as I understand it. It is not for the forfeiture of any land grant to a railroad or other corporation. It is not for the purpose of reserving the public domain for future settlement. As I understand the purpose of the bill, it is to open up the country to settlement. I take it that that word "reservation" has and now has a technical meaning. If the rule had said "to provide for opening up public lands to settlement," of course that would be the end of the matter; but the rule says "reserving the public lands for settlement."

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, the argument that the gentleman makes was made to Speaker Crisp on January 26, 1893, referred to in my former argument, and in the course of that argument Mr. Outhwaite, of Ohio, made the same contention regarding the Fort Bridger bill. He said:

I do not think that the term "reservation" as used in the rule applies to land which has been already reserved for military purposes and has been abandoned as a military reservation and transferred to the Interior Department under a general law providing for the manner in which such lands shall be disposed of. I think the term "reservation" applies to such portions of the public domain as have never been withdrawn from it, never appropriated to any other use.

The authorities lay down the interpretation of "reservation" as the disposing of land to actual settlers. That is the general interpretation of the word "reservation." We can apply it more strictly in this case, because this land covered by this bill now is all open to coal, oil, and gas entries and to those entries only. Those oil, coal, and gas permittees and lessees can now go onto these lands ad libitum, but this bill reserves the surface of the land and takes it away from the oil and coal entrymen and reserves the surface rights for actual settlers, thus bringing it strictly within the most technical construction of the rule and the word "reservation."

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Do the coal entrymen have the surface rights now?

Mr. SINNOTT. Yes; they would have the surface rights now—of course, not for agricultural purposes.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. SINNOTT. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. Is it not a fact that these lands have been classified and set apart in the Territory of Alaska as coal lands and the method prescribed under which a patent to work them can be issued?

Mr. SINNOTT. They have not all been set aside. A great many of them have, but a law has been passed providing the manner of working the coal and oil lands.

Mr. WALSH. But there is a law prescribing for the working of those lands that have been set aside, is there not?

Mr. SINNOTT. Certain of these lands have been absolutely withdrawn from all entry, and will not be open to surface entry even under this bill.

Mr. WALSH. How can the gentleman contend that the privilege attaches to this bill to report it at any time when it operates upon lands which have been set aside and classified as coal lands and which are opened for working under an existing law for mining purposes or for oil, and the privilege be accorded to a bill opening up these lands for another purpose, when as a matter of fact they are not distinctly public lands in the large acceptation of the term.

Mr. SINNOTT. They are certainly public lands within the purview of this act.

Mr. WALSH. Within the purview of this proposed bill; yes.

Mr. SINNOTT. No; within the purview of the rule. We are taking the surface of these lands away from the mineral claimants and giving them to the homestead settlers. We are reserving them away from the mineral claimant in favor of the homestead settler, so that he may secure a surface entry.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. Speaker, if the purpose of the bill has any effect on the rule, I will say that these lands are not claims. The lands which the bill intends to cover are not claimed for mineral, are not claimed for coal to any great extent. There are some instances in the territory where lands are so claimed, but the principal agricultural lands that this bill intends to open to entry have no claimants for the coal layers therein.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, may I be heard a moment?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, having gone over this matter two years ago when another similar report was made by the Committee on Public Lands, but which never came before the House for final determination, I desire to concur in what the gentleman from Oregon has said. At that time I investigated the question and the language referred to, namely, that bills for the reservation of the public lands and for the benefit of actual bona fide settlers be privileged.

The land is now open and will be to mineral claimants. They can file on it and get title to it, discovered and undiscovered. This bill will reserve that land for the actual settler because it permits him notwithstanding the land is coal, oil, gas, or mineral land, or metalliferous land—he may go on the land as an actual and bona fide settler, make his homestead application, get a surface right for agricultural purposes, and the mineral claimant is not interfered with. So the bill reaches out to protect the homestead settler to get on the land and still it does not interfere with the mineral or oil claimant whatever. Whereas if this legislation is not passed much of the surface will go to the mineral claimant. If we can present any privileged bill at all, this character of bill brings it within the rule and makes it privileged.

The SPEAKER. As the gentleman from Tennessee suggested, the Chair has investigated the question as to whether the bill is privileged, and has considered the very elaborate and thorough argument of the gentleman from Oregon presented some weeks ago. The Chair comes to the conclusion very readily that these precedents and the logic upon which they were founded clearly show that this bill is a privileged bill under the rule which allows the Committee on the Public Lands to report from the floor bills for the reservation of public lands or for the benefit of bona fide settlers. The Chair confesses that the ingenious argument of the gentleman from Tennessee as to the meaning of the word "reservation" struck the Chair as forcible, but against that the gentleman from Oregon retorts that it reserves them against mineral claimants, and therefore is accurate. The Chair thinks beyond that that the word "reservation" has been so construed in the past. Speaker Carlisle said, over 30 years ago:

> In other words, a part of the land which can now be taken up under existing law as timberland or mineral land or desert land will, if this bill passes, be subject to entry hereafter under the homestead law only.

Accordingly, Speaker Carlisle held the bill privileged. The Chair thinks the precedents are to the effect that this bill is one which the Public Lands Committee has the right to report from the floor, and therefore is privileged, and overrules the point of order.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman permit me to make a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. SINNOTT. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I have an article prepared by the Hon. Cordell Hull, our former colleague, upon the economic phases of the failure of the peace treaty. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting that article.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD for the purpose indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MEETING OF DEMOCRATIC MEMBERS.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for half a minute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to proceed for half a minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I want to announce that tomorrow morning at 11.30 the Democrats of the House are requested to meet in this Hall.

AGRICULTURAL ENTRIES ON COAL LANDS IN ALASKA.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman from Oregon if—can we not arrange for time for general debate before going into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union?

Mr. SINNOTT. I have an application for 30 minutes outside of the bill.

Mr. RAKER. I have practically the same application. Can not we agree to an hour on a side?

Mr. SINNOTT. That will be agreeable to me. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the time for general debate be limited to two hours, one hour to be controlled by the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] and the other hour by myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oregon, amending his motion, asks unanimous consent that the time for general debate be limited to two hours, one hour to be controlled by the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] and the other by himself. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, may I inquire what the purpose of the gentleman is as to proceeding to-night. Of course, the bill being privileged it will come up Thursday morning.

Mr. SINNOTT. It will take but little time to dispose of the bill after general debate.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can not there be an understanding that we will rise at 5 o'clock?

Mr. SINNOTT. Let the debate run until 5 and we will see.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oregon moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 8842, to provide for agricultural entries on coal lands in Alaska.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly, the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union with Mr. STAFFORD in the chair.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I object. We seem to have plenty of time for general debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the passage of this act homestead claims may be initiated by actual settlers on public lands of the United States in Alaska known to contain workable coal, oil, or gas deposits, or that may be valuable for the coal, oil, or gas contained therein, and which are not otherwise reserved or withdrawn, whenever such claim shall be initiated with a view of obtaining or passing title with a reservation to the United States of the coal, oil, or gas in such lands, and of the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the same; and any settler who has prior to the passage of this act initiated a homestead claim in good faith on lands containing workable deposits of coal, oil, or gas, or that may be valuable for the coal, oil, or gas contained therein and not otherwise reserved or withdrawn, may perfect the same under the provisions of the laws under which the claim was initiated, but shall receive the limited patent provided for in this act: Provided, however, That should it be discovered at any time prior to the issuance of a final certificate on any claim initiated for unreserved lands in Alaska that the lands are coal, oil, or gas in character, the patent issued on such entry shall contain the reservation required by this act

SEC. 2. That upon satisfactory proof of full compliance with the provisions of the laws under which the entry is made and of this act the entryman shall be entitled to a patent to the lands entered by him, which patent shall contain a reservation to the United States of all the coal, oil, or gas in the land so patented, together with the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the same. The coal, oil, or gas deposits so reserved shall be subject to disposal by the United States in accordance with the provisions of the laws applicable to coal, oil, or gas deposits or coal, oil, or gas lands in Alaska in force at the time of such disposal. Any person qualified to acquire coal, oil, or gas deposits, or the right to mine and remove the coal or to drill for and remove the oil or gas under said laws as applicable to Alaska, shall have the right at all times to enter upon the lands entered or patented, as provided by the provisions of this act, for the purpose of prospecting for coal, oil, or gas therein, upon the approval by the Secretary of the Interior of a bond or undertaking to be filed with him as security for the payment of all damages to the crops and improvements on such lands by reason of such prospecting. Any person who has acquired from the United States the coal, oil, or gas deposits in any such land, or the right to mine, drill for, or remove the same, may reenter and occupy so much of the surface thereof as may be required for all purposes reasonably incident to the mining and removal of the coal, oil, or gas therefrom, and mine and remove the coal or drill for and remove the oil or gas upon payment of the damages caused thereby to the owner thereof, or upon giving a good and sufficient bond or undertaking in an action instituted in any competent court to ascertain and fix said damages: Provided, That the owner under such limited patent shall have the right to mine the coal for use on the land for domestic purposes at any time prior to the disposal by the United States of the coal deposits: Provided further, That nothing in this act shall be construed as authorizing the exploration upon or entry of any coal deposits withdrawn from such exploration and purchase: And provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be held or construed to authorize the entry or disposition of withdrawn or classified coal lands or lands valuable for coal, oil, or gas under section 2306, United States Revised Statutes, or acts amendatory thereof or supplemental thereto, commonly known as soldiers' homestead law.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Alaska [Mr. SUTHERLAND].

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, this bill has been pending in Congress for a period of over five years. I have inherited it, although in former years it was not introduced by the Delegates representing Alaska. Nevertheless I feel that the people of Alaska demand it and that it is my duty to urge the passage of the bill.

The present bill has been approved by the present administration of the Interior Department, by Judge Finney, the Assistant Secretary. In a former administration the essential features of it were approved by Secretary Lane and also by Secretary Payne. In 1910 a general act was passed by Congress whereby agricultural entries could be made on coal lands, but for some reason that I have never heard explained, the act excluded Alaska from the privileges extended to the States. In 1914 an act was passed extending the right of agricultural entries to gas and phosphate lands. That act did not specify the status of Alaska, but the Interior Department holds that where no status is specified the act does not apply to Alaska.

I call your attention to this map of Alaska. In this section of Alaska on the eastern coast of Cooks Inlet there is an area of from 1,000 to 2,000 square miles of fine agricultural land that is classified by the Geological Survey as coal land. It is so classified in this large area for the reason that where the action of the surf has exposed the land and the formation of the country it shows some lignite, but of a very low grade, which in some cases is distributed along the beach, through the centuries of action of the surf. For that reason the Geological Survey assumes that it is coal land. The legend indicates that it may be coal land. They do not say positively that it is, although one or two little areas are particularly marked as coal lands. In that particular section on those areas there are to-day about 50 homesteaders. A number of them have been settled there for about six or seven years. Forty-three of them had made application to the General Land Office early this summer for entry. I am quite sure that there are 50 residents there, men who are working under our homestead law hoping that the land will be open to entry in order that they may obtain title.

The only land laws applicable to Alaska are the general mineral law, which was extended to the territory in 1884, and the general homestead law, which was extended in 1898. There are no other laws, no grazing laws, no stone and timber laws. None of those apply to Alaska at all—just the homestead law, whereby a man must cultivate 20 acres of his 160-acre tract before he can obtain patent thereto. These men located in the section I speak of are praying for this act of Congress to enable them to obtain title to their homesteads.

A man from South Dakota went up to Alaska this summer, a resident of Aberdeen, S. Dak. He was sent up there by a farmers' organization to look into the agricultural possibilities of the Territory. The purpose, as I understand it, was to see what the outlook would be for colonization. I have never seen the man, but I had heard of his trip to the Territory. When he came to Juneau this fall he wrote me a letter on the situation at this particular section of Cooks Inlet, and because he was an entire stranger in the Territory and in the time he visited had the opportunity of seeing what our difficulties are, I assume that he writes without prejudice or bias.

Mr. Cable, the writer, discovered one of the difficulties in Alaska, and that is the lack of adequate laws. He discovered that those people up there feel that Congress discriminates against them in extending the right of homestead entries to every State in the Union but refuses it to Alaska, preventing them from making homestead entries on coal lands. I feel that the agricultural people of Alaska deserve more consideration than that given them by Congress in this particular act of 1910. Congress has passed discriminatory acts against Alaska. The Territory has in many cases been treated as a sort of subjugated province and the people protest against these acts of Congress, and the murmurings you hear in Washington simply come from a discontented or a disappointed American citizenry. Sometimes it is said that that is a bolshevik sentiment up there, but it is nothing of the kind. The farmers who settled on the land in Alaska, 364 at the end of 1919, are made up of 201 native-born Americans, loyal men, nor are the 163 of foreign birth any less loyal.

When the war broke out Alaska gave more men proportionately to the American Army and to the Canadian Army than any other unit of the United States. Alaska has shown her loyalty in response to the sale of Liberty bonds during the war, and in proportion to her population took more of the Liberty bonds than any other unit. In the sale of Victory bonds the State of Delaware only exceeded her proportionately in the amount of bonds purchased. I feel that a loyal people are entitled to the full consideration of Congress, and that when these discriminatory laws come before Congress they should be carefully studied. If I should go into those discriminations in the past by Congress, it would involve matters which are not germane to this bill, but at some time later I hope to have opportunity on the floor to present them fully. I think I can then convince this House that Alaska has been unjustly treated in these discriminatory laws.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alaska has expired.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes more.

Mr. ARENTZ. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Mr. ARENTZ. It seems to me that the principal question involved here is whether or not there are lands in this country susceptible of being tilled. From what I have heard of Alaska, especially the eastern side of Cooks Inlet and the land along certain rivers that flow from waters adjacent thereto, there are approximately 100,000 square miles of territory covered with grass or moss, where the ground is not frozen during a portion of the year, land covered by trees of different kinds, land that will produce agricultural products.

If such is the case, regardless of whether this land is underlaid with coal, lignite, or coal that can be used for commercial purposes, the inhabitants of Alaska have the right to locate a homestead on this land if they so desire, and it seems to me certainly safeguarding the interests of the United States Government if the oil, the gas, and the coal and other mineral rights are reserved to the United States, and the men or women who locate this agricultural land as a homestead should be able to give the right to any man or woman who followed them who wanted to take up oil, coal, or mineral to come onto this land and prospect it and there mine for coal or put down their wells and get gas or oil off this land. It seems to me under these conditions that all rights are reserved to the Government, and only those things that will tend toward the development of Alaska are given to the settler who is willing to go into that barren country to make a home.

Mr. LAYTON. Is that a question?

Mr. ARENTZ. That is a question, and the question I would like to ask the gentleman is this: Is it not a fact there is a great acreage of land or lands in Alaska that are susceptible of farming, and the only excuse for asking for this right, reserving the mineral rights for the Government, is to permit men and women to come into that country and settle on lands that may produce agricultural products?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. Chairman, I would ask for more time.

Mr. SINNOTT. I will yield the gentleman five additional minutes.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. In reply to the gentleman I will say that the Interior Department estimates the agricultural lands in Alaska—that is, lands susceptible of tillage—at 100,000 square miles. The Biological Survey estimates the grazing land in the Territory at 172,000 square miles. Taking and considering the areas of land where the reindeer graze in the sense of being agricultural land, together with the land for tillage, there is an agricultural area in Alaska greater than the entire area of the State of Texas.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I will yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. Is the gentleman contending now that the same laws that apply to the other States in reference to public lands as oil lands, mineral lands, should be applied to Alaska?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Certainly; yes, sir; that is the purpose of the bill. Now, I want to dissipate the idea of a frozen territory. In the section I speak of there is no frost. This section here, the Matanuska Valley, a great agricultural valley, where I presume there are 5,000 or 6,000 square miles, is absolutely free from frost, and there is no frost in the ground at all, but when you get away into the interior in the northern section of Alaska——

Mr. STEVENSON. If the gentleman will yield, does the gentleman mean to say that there is no frost the year round?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I am speaking of perpetual frost—that is, in the far north.

Mr. STEVENSON. What is the length of the season there usually in which vegetation grows?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The length of the season here is about four months of growth. Up in the interior it only requires three months to grow and harvest the production.

Mr. TEMPLE. That is because of the length of day which adds materially to the growing hours for vegetation?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The farmer in this latitude, the wheat grower beyond the mountains in Alaska, harvests his wheat two or three weeks before the farmer in the southern latitude for the reason that the sun is on his crop practically all through the 24 hours of the day.

Mr. STEVENSON. How does he manage about the 8-hour law up there?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. They work 8-hour shifts on the farm.

Mr. LAYTON. I thought that never did apply to farms?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It does in Alaska with reference to the planting in the spring, but I am not so certain about harvesting; but in the planting in the spring they use the 8-hour day.

Mr. LOWREY. What are the crops grown up there on this land—potatoes and what else?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. This section I speak of, Cooks Inlet, would grow potatoes and vegetables and there is splendid hay up there. The grass in that section grows over a man's head, and the wild grass in that section is better than that farther north; the land and climate are adapted to raising any crop of vegetables. However, all the high-grade wheat of Alaska is raised over beyond the mountains up in the interior, although wheat, oats, and other grain are raised in the Matanuska Valley.

Mr. SHREVE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I gladly yield.

Mr. SHREVE. Will the gentleman indicate where the new railroad is being located?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. You start here at Resurrection Bay, on Kenai Peninsula. The road crosses the peninsula and then up the arm of Cooks Inlet and then up through the Matanuska Valley, over Broad Pass to Fairbanks and Tanana Valley. This whole valley has an agricultural area of approximately 20,000——

Mr. SHREVE. We understand the railroad passes through the richest agricultural country?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Into and through the richest agricultural country in Alaska.

Mr. RANKIN. Was the gentleman present when hearings were held on the first Alaskan bill that was passed through the House in the first part of the session? Was the gentleman present when those hearings were held?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Before what committee?

Mr. RANKIN. The Committee on Territories.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I was before the committee, but I do not recall that the bill was passed.

Mr. RANKIN. I should not have said that the bill was passed. But we were holding hearings. Is it not a fact that the representative of the Interior Department or the Department of Agriculture—I believe the latter—testified before the committee that from an agricultural standpoint Alaska was a failure?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not recall.

Mr. RANKIN. You will find that in the hearings.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. He was not a representative of the Agricultural Department, but possibly one of the other departments, and I assume that a representative of the Agricultural Department would say that the forestry in Alaska was a failure, and the forestry man would say that the fisheries were not all they might be. That is the way bureaus work against each other.

Mr. RANKIN. If you will take those hearings, you will find that the gentleman who answered the question in response to my question was positively the best-informed man on agricultural conditions in Alaska of any man who appeared before that committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alaska has expired.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I want to say to the gentleman from Mississippi that the man who made that statement did not know what he was talking about. I do not know how intelligent he appeared to be to the gentleman from Mississippi; the point is that that man never got beyond the glacial area.

Mr. RANKIN. You mean that he did not go far enough north?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Possibly so. Let me at this time try to dissipate the general idea of the climatic conditions in Alaska; that is [pointing to map], the glacial area. That area is in the south. The tourist goes to Alaska and sees the glaciers. I wish the glaciers had not been ceded to us by Russia. They are not an asset, for every tourist who comes back from Alaska has nothing to report except the glaciers. The glaciers are in the south and are viewed from the decks of steamers, and then the tourist shivers, and says that what is beyond the glaciers must be everlasting ice and snow.

They go on the theory that the earth is passing out of the glacial period and that certainly the ice and snow and great cold are at the pole. That is absolutely erroneous, because the Alaskan glaciers are in the same latitude with Denmark and of Scotland, while beyond and over the mountains are the most beautiful and fertile valleys of any similar latitude in the world, where the sun shines out of a blue sky for almost 24 hours in a day and where the climate in summer is as near perfect as any climate on earth. Now, the latitudes of the agricultural lands in Alaska are just the same as the agricultural lands of Norway, Sweden, and Finland, lands that support a great agricultural population. And you never think of those sections as being lands of glaciers and perpetual ice.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SINNOTT. I yield to the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. HUDSPETH. How far is it from the border you pointed out to those agricultural lands?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The railroad starts here and runs a distance of 500 miles right into the center, in fact, to the northern section. Of course, on continuing north to the Arctic you get out of agricultural lands. You get lands that are good for grazing and for reindeer, but not for general farming.

Mr. RAKER. What is the estimated area of the agricultural lands of Alaska?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Interior Department, in a pamphlet that was published in 1917, say that they have been estimated as high as 100,000 square miles of tillable land.

Mr. RAKER. One hundred thousand square miles?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. One hundred thousand.

Mr. RAKER. And you raise there cabbages, turnips, onions, wheat, rye, and all those things profitably?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. How about potatoes? I understand they raise the finest potatoes in the world there. [Laughter.]

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes. There is no question about that; and I will say I have here a letter from the Secretary of Agriculture—or, rather, a letter from the Bureau of Plant Industry—setting forth the fact that the grade of wheat that is raised up there is excellent. They baked a loaf of graham bread right in the Interior Department from the flour sent down from Fairbanks, which is in this northern section, and they state it was the finest loaf of graham bread that they ever baked in the experiments that had been carried on in the department.

Mr. ARENTZ. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Certainly.

Mr. ARENTZ. In your statement with reference to the agricultural regions in Alaska you stopped just in your description of it when you were becoming most interesting. If you would only go on in that same line, you could convince every man here that there was a wonderful area of agricultural land there.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes. They have raised grain and experimented with sugar beets. The result of that experimentation in beets has shown that the beets grown in Alaska, while somewhat smaller than those grown in the States to the south, contain a higher percentage of sugar from the same quantity of beets than the beets grown in the Southern States or in any other sugar-beet-growing section of the country.

This Matanuska Valley, moreover, is possibly an oil valley. It may possibly have an oil basis, although the geological reports in years past have held that there were no indications of oil in this great valley. But recently they have found seepages of oil and have sent samples to the Geological Survey.

In fact, geologists have been up there and have taken samples of the oil that was oozing out of the ground there, and the head of the Alaska survey tells me that there is petroleum oil there without any doubt. So that there is a possibility of that great agricultural valley being also underlaid with oil, and the United States, reserving the right to the oil beneath, would give the future oil operators the privilege of locating there.

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Mr. BRIGGS. Does the railroad that the Government is building run through the territory that you have referred to?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes; through the territory I have spoken of.

Mr. BRIGGS. The idea is that as soon as this bill becomes a law immigration to Alaska will be encouraged?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes; it will aid to a great extent. It would give the right of entry on the land to these men who have already attempted to make a homestead entry, but can not get the title to the land.

Mr. BRIGGS. There are some white people up there now?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes. There are only 31,000 whites up there, but they are good ones.

I spoke of the grievances that the people have at Cook Inlet. In 1903 Congress extended the coal land act to Alaska, the right to preempt the public domain for coal-mining purposes, and men went out on the domain and took up areas and drove shafts and expended their time and money for a period of three or four years, hoping to obtain title. Then came the withdrawals in 1906, and all the work and money and time that they had spent were swept away and counted for nothing. That is one of the grievances that Alaskans have had. Now, I am not debating that policy or passing on the wisdom of that withdrawal, but I do say that men who have given their time to developing coal areas in Alaska and who were shoved aside by those withdrawals had at least a grievance. Possibly for the benefit of the whole some few individuls had to be injured. Nevertheless those individuals, some of them, are to-day in Alaska still, and they all feel that an injury was done them by Congress. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alaska has expired.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 22½ minutes to the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. LAYTON].

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, to the end that the gentleman from Delaware, who is always interesting, may have an adequate opportunity to address the House and the country, I also yield him 22½ minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California, according to the Chair's understanding, has no time to dispose of.

Mr. RAKER. I understood there was an agreement as to the division of the time.

Mr. SINNOTT. One-half of the time was to be controlled by the gentleman from California. It is a case of fifty-fifty.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not know that.

Mr. RAKER. I accept the Chair's apology.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Delaware has 45 minutes. How much did the gentleman from California yield?

Mr. RAKER. Twenty-two and a half minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; the gentleman from Delaware has 45 minutes.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, in the first place I want to express my profound gratitude to the distinguished gentleman from Oregon, the chairman of the Committee on the Public Lands [Mr. SINNOTT], for the privilege of addressing the House, and I want at the same time to state that I do not think it is a proper thing generally to introduce extraneous discussions when a bill is pending for consideration before the House. But everybody does the same thing, so I am asking you to pardon me if I trespass upon you while I discuss a matter in which I am very deeply interested. That is the so-called maternity bill, or the Sheppard-Towner bill. In discussing it I propose to associate with it the Smith-Towner bill, the Fess amendment, and all legislation of a kindred character.

Before I proceed I want to say that the thought I have upon this subject is best exemplified by a quotation from Herbert Spencer. In discussing bills introduced without proper consideration he makes the following observation:

> The theory on which he—

That is, the introducer of such bills—

> The theory on which he daily proceeds is that the change caused by his measure will stop when he intends it to stop. He contemplates intently the things his act will achieve, but thinks little of the remoter issues of the movement his act sets up, and still less of his collateral issues.

Mr. Chairman, as I said before, that exemplifies my thought about the bills I have mentioned—the Sheppard-Towner bill, the Smith-Towner bill, and the Fess amendment—which in my judgment are bills introduced without that grave consideration that ought to have been given to them because of their remoter consequences.

Mr. Chairman, I regret very much that I have to oppose this measure. I am referring now specially to the Sheppard-Towner bill. Its proponents are so riotously enthusiastic, so full of the belief that they have discovered an awful void in our legislation, which, for the good of the whole human race must be filled at once by the enactment of this bill into law, that one rather hesitates to utter a word against it, much less to oppose it vigorously.

But no matter how great this enthusiasm may be, how intense its seeming altruism, as a Representative in this body, having taken an oath to support the Constitution of this country, I can not stand idly by and from lack of courage see this sort of legislation enacted without as potent a protest as I can make, believing, as I do, that to pass this bill means the supplanting of the Constitution, the beginning of the destruction of our old-time democracy, and the establishment of the socialistic principle as the basis of all our future political and legislative action. The most enthusiastic supporter of this bill in this body will not, I suspect, have the temerity to attempt to impose upon the credulity of its membership by asserting seriously that its provisions are not socialistic through and through. If any such supporter makes the attempt, however, he must fail or place himself in the egotistical position of knowing more about the ultimate purposes of this proposed legislation than its proponents. In the event, however, that he attempts this impossible task, but is sincere in desiring to obtain an intelligent understanding of the ultimate purposes of those who favor this measure, let me invite his impartial and judicial consideration of the published statements which have been made by its chief propagandists.

At this point I desire to call the attention of every Member of this House, and of the public generally, to a speech by the Hon. JAMES A. REED, of Missouri, delivered in the Senate of the United States and published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD Wednesday, September 21, 1921. This speech is so comprehensive, both as to appeal, argument, and fact, as to deserve the careful reading of every Member of this body, as well as the careful consideration of every citizen of the land. It is not my purpose to quote extensively from the printed declarations of those who favor this measure but to insert here for the purposes of my argument quotations taken from official sources which are to be taken as entirely accurate, inasmuch as no one has challenged their authenticity. It must be borne in mind that these quotations are taken from official publications issued by the Children's Bureau of this Government and indorsed by its President and members as well as by men and women who belong to these propagandists. They indorse what are called maternity systems taken from German, Austrian, Russian, and other foreign sources.

Those systems so indorsed include the compulsory registration of pregnant women; the maintenance of such women before, during, and after labor; the right of the State to exercise supreme jurisdiction over the care, subsequent feeding, clothing, housing, and schooling of the child. These doctrines are found in a pamphlet edited by Henry J. Harris, United States Department of Labor, Children's Bureau, entitled "Maternity Benefit Systems in Certain Foreign Countries," which received the official indorsement of Miss Julia C. Lathrop, the recent head of the Children's Bureau, and was published and disseminated among the people at the expense of the American taxpayer. This book by Dr. Harris indorses the doctrines of Madam Kollontai, the head of the Russian maternity system, and the associate of Lenin and Trotski, which has been described—as positively criminal and worthy of the most savage tribes of the African jungle—destroying morally, as well as physically, a whole generation.

Miss Alice Paull says that—we intend to insist, also, that the State assume entire responsibility for the maintenance and education of children until they become of age.

Mrs. Harriet Stanton Blatch declares that motherhood must be raised "above all sordid considerations," which can only mean that every mother must be pensioned by the Federal Government—a purely socialistic doctrine.

Miss Helen Todd, in addition to openly advocating birth control, also indorses a pension for motherhood.

Kathleen De Courtney, a former secretary of the British National Union of the Woman's Suffrage Societies, also indorses the "endowment of motherhood" and claims, as one of its essential merits, that—in the event of wage disputes the workers will know that a large number of their dependents are secure and that the call on strike funds will be less.

This is plain socialism and an encouragement of strikes.

At a conference on child welfare standards recently held under the auspices of the Children's Bureau, a list of the invited guests included so-called prominent people from Serbia, Belgium, Holland, Japan, and other countries. The proceedings of this conference and of other meetings held in many large cities of the country were published in book form and disseminated throughout the country at Government expense. Certain notables of the same persuasion from this country were invited to participate in these meetings. It is safe to say that no one was invited who was opposed to this crazy cult.

Permit me at this point to make the following quotations from the convention in question when it published its minimum demands. They are as follows:

There must be established maternity or prenatal centers sufficient to provide for all cases not receiving prenatal provision from private physicians.

The application of the Wasserman—syphilis—tests when indicated.

Rules specifying how long women shall remain in bed after confinement.

Medical supervision to be established over infants and children not under the care of private physicians.

Mothers to be instructed at least once a month how to feed and care for their babies; this to be continued until the child is old enough to attend school.

The establishment of nutrition clinics.

Finally, "there must be employed a sufficient number of public health service nurses to do home visiting and to give instructions to expectant mothers in the hygiene of pregnancy and early infancy and to visit and care for patients in puerperium and to see that the infant is referred to a welfare center."

These are stated practically as the minimum objects of these propagandists. By former quotations I have already shown that this by no means includes the extent of their propaganda.

In general terms, and summarizing what has gone before, these theorists, both men and women, take the ground that the Nation has the right to make itself the guardian of all of the children of the Nation, and that the children themselves shall be the Nation's wards. This supervision goes to the extent of assuming the right to regulate the food and the clothes and the housing and the education of the children; the right of the Government to establish a system of eugenics; the regulation by law of marriage by Government selection of bride and groom. This is the crazy notion of theorists who apply to humanity the practices of a stock breeder.

If these principles thus advocated were confined to the radicals of Germany and of Russia, it would not so much concern us; but when these doctrines are openly indorsed by persons, both men and women, holding prominent official positions under the Government it is time for the sane people of the land to look around and see whither we are drifting and what the current is that bears us along.

But it is asserted by those who favor this bill that none of these ideas referred to are found in this measure; that it does not even appropriate any money for food or clothing, for medicine or nursing, or for the medical care of the pregnant woman; that this money of nearly one and one-half million dollars is to be spent on literature and on a more or less numerous army, composed of young women, who will swarm over the country telling the mothers of the land things about themselves and their babies that the mothers themselves know of, but of which these babeless meddlers know nothing.

I desire to state again that no one in this House can deny that those who have propagated this maternity bill really advocate the maintenance of indigent, pregnant women, both before, during, and after labor; child control by the State; mothers' pensions; the doctrine of eugenics; birth control; and other notions of the sort born out of purely socialistic brains. It is not an assumption nor a groundless declaration when it is said that the proponents of this bill will not be satisfied to let it remain as it is. They have been compelled by public sentiment to abandon certain ulterior purposes which they originally held and advocated—and which they still hold—in order to place the bill upon the statute books of the land in any shape they can, with the subsequent determination to have the bill made eventually to suit them. Their chief reliance at this moment is not by an appeal to the reason and the honest judgment of this House, but to a sort of terrorism of Congressmen by threatening their return to membership in this body.

Such legislation as this could not have been proposed even, much less enacted into law, by the founders of our Government. Our forefathers suffered all the dangers and vicissitudes of war, sacrificed their lives willingly and gloriously, and encouraged the certain odium of treason in order to free themselves from the control of England and establish the Government which they have handed down to us. The War of the Revolution was a war of separation, not only from the political control of England but from the dominating ideas of Europe.

We went to war in 1917 against Imperial Germany for the purpose of preserving not only our rights but our own especial institutions. Is it possible that, having prevailed on the battle field against Imperial Germany, we are to be submerged by a flood of European ideas, especially those emanating from the socialistic and bolshevistic and communistic brains of middle and eastern Europe?

Let us take a brief survey of this measure. It proposed in the beginning care for the indigent, pregnant woman before, during, and after her accouchement. It now is so amended as to provide for a Government bureau with an army of salaried officials paid for out of the Federal Treasury, whose sole usefulness—uselessness is a better word—will be manifested in disseminating literature of its own choosing relating not only to the care of the pregnant woman and the child but relating to all the other beliefs and doctrines held by these propagandists for the purpose of insidiously contaminating the thought of the country for the inauguration of socialism in America.

In order to support this bureau a tax necessarily must be levied upon the whole people. The proponents of this bill say that it will only take a million and a half dollars. But let me remind the House that there never has been a Government bureau established under this Government the operations of which, and therefore the expenses of which, have not widened like the wave of a pond when its placid surface has been disturbed by a stone hurled into its depths.

I do not hesitate to declare that if this bill passes 95 per cent of the appropriation will be spent in salaries, in railroad fares, and in literature. The country could stand, possibly, the first two of these expenses—though I thought in the last campaign that the Republican Party appealed to the country for support upon the distinct promise of less expensive government; of less government in the people's affairs; of lower taxation, and a cutting out of all expenses that could be temporarily, at least, done without—but to have the proponents of this measure given a free hand, at the Government's expense, to flood the country with their hectic and foreign ideas will sooner or later be productive of more evil to the people of America than a hundred epidemics of the "flu" which came from the same sources to sicken and kill our bodies.

Again, some of the proponents of this measure, in speaking about the taxation involved, evidently try to deceive the taxpayer. Let me quote from Miss Dorothy Kirchwey Brown. She says:

Here, again, it must be remembered that the bill is permissive. No State legislature needs to accept its terms unless it wishes to do so.

How artful! How sweetly misleading! Suppose I heartlessly paraphrase Miss Brown's remark, and say "here again it must be remembered that the State refusing to accept the bill will be taxed just the same to support the operation of the bill in other States, and that in order to avail itself of the supposed benefits of the bill it must tax itself again in order to come in on the fifty-fifty basis." This fifty-fifty scheme which is getting to be so popular an addition to socialistic measures seems up to the present time to fool the ignorant and to delude the intelligent. As far as the State of Delaware is concerned, which I have the honor of representing, the fifty-fifty scheme wherever employed is a very costly and unjust proposition. We pay millions in tax and get only a share back in proportion to our territory, and then are compelled to tax ourselves a second time in order to enjoy the blessings of these fifty-fifty schemes.

To this, however, must be added another—an actual bribe—for the purpose of enlisting the support of thoughtless people who imagine they are getting something for nothing out of the Federal Treasury, when, as a matter of fact, every dollar comes out of the pockets of the taxpayer.

The most popular argument for this measure—the one apparently most highly esteemed for its weight and logic—is the now celebrated pig argument which I heard advanced by an esteemed colleague upon the floor of this House. In the garb of modern-day colloquialism, the pig argument for real downright syllogistic bunk argument and fake logic takes the cake. It runs about as follows: Now, the pig is an animal. The baby is also an animal, therefore the Government should give Federal aid to the baby. Or the Government gives Federal aid to the pig in order to conserve the food supply of the Nation. Therefore the Federal Government should give Federal aid to the baby to increase the food supply of the Nation. It may be, however, that these dreaming advocates were inspired by the idea that inasmuch as we were increasing, by Federal aid, our supply of pork, they thought it incumbent upon them to devise some means whereby more mouths could be provided to eat it. I assert that the logic is absurd. We conserve the pig in order, eventually, to kill it. It is designed to conserve the baby, on the contrary, that it may live. We give Federal aid for the extermination and cure of diseases affecting the hog in order to preserve the Nation's supply of pork products for the purposes of food. Logically, we care for the hog because it can not care for himself. Have the proponents of this measure such a contemptuous view of the fatherhood and motherhood of America as to place them in the same category as hogs? The hog has no learned and skilled physician, no learned professors of dietetics or of sanitation, no gentle and accomplished nurses to care for him and to soothe him in his hours of sickness, no establishments of learning of any sort, much less of medicine and surgery, where he can learn to safeguard his existence, so that it is a rational thing to have a proper concern for animals necessary to the subsistence of the people.

The fathers and mothers of this land from the first hour in which they planted their feet upon this, then a foreign soil, asked for no such legislation as this, had no such legislation as this, although without such assistance and relying solely upon their own inherent powers of pride and self-dependence and those universal instincts of love and care and devotion which marked the sturdy fatherhood and motherhood of this country from its earliest days, have built up such a Nation as no other can surpass. They have done this without calling upon the thought of a Madame Kollontai, an apostle of Russian bolshevism, or of a Karl Marx, the high priest of European socialism, or of their infatuated feminine and masculine disciples in this country, some of whom I have already mentioned as being connected in an official way with the Children's Bureau. I am constrained again to invite the careful attention of the proponents of this measure to the fact that the baby is a human being and as such, through its parents, has an open opportunity intelligently to invoke for itself all that science can give it for its own preservation in a far greater degree than ever before possessed; that American parents with a prideful sense of their personal responsibility should care for their own; that to destroy that responsibility helps to destroy the highest citizenship; and that if they grow to depend like mendicants upon the bounty of their Government, their integrity of character, their qualities of mind and of spirit, as well as of heart, will of necessity be deteriorated and perverted, and eventually the national character as it has existed, destroyed. The finest of all principles taught us by our forefathers and given unto us as their most precious heritage was that principle which endeavored to make every individual citizen self-dependent, and to fill him with a sense of his own individual responsibility; to make every man self-initiative and independent; to inculcate in him the duty to govern, not to be governed. This is the very distilled excellence and essence of the governmental principles which our forefathers promulgated and sought to establish in the Constitution. I oppose this bill because it will serve to destroy this responsibility. I oppose this bill because in destroying this responsibility it will tend to destroy the finest thing in the human heart, that sweet, natural instinct, the God-given instinct of personal love and care for the little one which every normal father and mother entertains. I am opposed to this bill because its proponents, with the cold impious hands of officialdom, would invade the home, the one place on earth where one expects to breathe a little air of heaven, the one place in which no foreign foot should tread without the permission and the desire of those who live and reign there. The home belongs to the father and the mother. It is their place of seclusion, their place of worship. The home is the man's and woman's Rehoboth of life—the poor man's as well as the rich man's. It is their castle, an Anglo-Saxon heritage for refuge and defense embodied for a thousand years in our laws, and should not be defiled by the impertinent intrusion of Government officials except under the most imperative necessity.

If the purpose of this bill is to insure and justify an increase of population, the question might be properly asked if our natural increase under the conditions which have obtained for 150 years past will not be entirely sufficient for this purpose. Is it desirable to have an overwhelmingly large population in America? Would not this be a curse of heritage to future generations instead of a blessing? Is it desirable to have a population so large as to parallel the conditions now existing in China and India, where by reason of an overcrowded population the slightest departure from the normal telluric or atmospheric conditions affecting crop production results inevitably in the loss not only of thousands but often of millions annually by actual starvation? This, I repeat, is an annual result in some Province or other of China by reason of its overpopulated condition. This is true also in India, where the British, notwithstanding 150 years of administration, have been unable to avert pestilence and death as a result of famine. In this connection let me assert that it is a serious question whether the increase of the population of the world, which is now unquestionably going on by reason of the wonderful achievements of science, preserving and propagating human life, will not result sooner or later in the fiercest and most savage conflicts that the world has ever seen in a struggle for existence because of a lack of food. Seriously, is there not some virtue, some real reason in nature's law—the survival of the fittest? In fact, is not this law imperative, inescapable, beneficent, and founded in the highest of Divine wisdom—the law of evolution—the survival of the fittest being a necessary condition precedent to the working of this law? For instance, in America here, is there any doubt that we are what we are as a people altogether because of the application of this natural law to our forefathers, to those early pioneers—to those men and women who confronted life with all its dangers and perils and hardships with a dauntless courage which nothing could dismay, knowing that the establishment of this Nation, the conquering of this continent, was for the strong and not for the weak; knowing that on no adventurous journey could a weakling go; knowing that in the supreme contest the weakling necessarily would go to the wall? What do you think those explorers, those hardy pioneers, in whose sturdy and dauntless manhood we take such historic pride—what think you would they have thought of a Sheppard-Towner bill, or a Smith-Towner bill, or a Fess amendment—those adventurous souls, both men and women, who braved the perils of forest and of flood, who endured hunger and want, who even dared the hostility of the ruthless savage? What would they have thought of a provincial government taxing them in order to have their most intimate and sacred domestic concerns made a matter of governmental espionage and governmental interference? Has the father and the mother of to-day so degenerated that their own Government must turn itself into an almshouse for the preservation of their children? Are they so inert and slothful, both in heart and brain, as not to avail themselves of the knowledge affecting both themselves and their children which the present day so abundantly affords them? To pass measures of this character is to enervate and change the whole national character.

But, it is said, "We do not propose to ask for much money to support this legislation—we only want a million and a half of dollars to begin with." What man in this House is there who does not know the subtle seductiveness of this statement? Who, if he is frank and intelligent and has watched the growth of bureaucracy, does not know that this bill will ultimately call not for thousands but for millions; yes, and even for billions, if it is to function in the thousand and one directions which the wild proponents of this measure will ultimately discover? This bill, if enacted into law, means the ultimate nationalization of medicine and surgery, a purpose manifestly existing in the development of the Public Health Service long before this bill was introduced. Likewise the Smith-Towner bill means the nationalization of education. And the Fess amendment such a sticking of noses by Federal officials into the purely domestic concerns of the people as to become eventually unbearably offensive. I have placed these three bills in the same category, because they all have the same odor, being purely and simply socialistic in their aim and purpose. So, digressing in a measure, let me ask the House if it really wants education nationalized? Is it possible that we can be so foolish as to want an individual or even a body of individuals to choose the textbooks for the children of this Nation—the same textbooks for Maine as for Florida, for Oregon as for Texas—the textbooks on history, textbooks on political economy, on sociology, and even indirectly on theology and religion? I unhesitatingly say that to do this—to place this power in the hands of one man at the head of a public welfare department with all the power and prestige of a Cabinet officer—would make it possible to corrupt the minds and hearts, yea, the very souls, of the people in one generation. It would place all our most cherished traditions, even our democratic conceptions of government, at the mercy of an autocratic will—at the mercy of an Anglophile who would make Bunker Hill seem in history a place of infamy, or at the mercy of a pro-German, in which Belleau Woods or Chateau-Thierry would be made to look like places of national cruelty, injustice, and dishonor. If this bill and the Smith-Towner bill and the Fess amendment are enacted into law the floodgates to the socialistic reservoir will be hoisted and never let down again, for there would be no logical justification in doing so. If these measures can be made into law, there is no logical reason why any other socialistic legislation, however rank, may not be enacted.

Knowing as you must the real purpose of its proponents, how can Congress in enacting this legislation reasonably refuse to pass a national food bill, the object of which would be to establish a bureau for the free dispensation of food to all who are hungry everywhere in the land? Or a national clothing bill, to clothe at Government expense all who are cold and clotheless? Or a national bureau for furnishing homes for the homeless? Or a bureau—an addition to the Public Health Service—for the purpose of furnishing free medicines, free nursing, free care, and provision of every sort for all of the sick of the Nation, as well as the indigent, pregnant woman? If we are to open up the floodgates of legislation for such purposes, why not, as they say, "go the whole hog," and establish a bureau for the installation of a bathtub at Government expense in every home in the land that is without one? The dreaming professor of sociology could very nicely and properly use for his propaganda the old saying that "Cleanliness is next to godliness," and so justify his altruism. Again, if it is so desirable to care in a most meticulous way for human life and human ills, why not for prophylactic purposes establish a dental bureau and require every individual of the United States who possesses teeth to have them examined every six months at the Government expense? As a preventive of diseases, there would be no doubt of the value of such a measure. This was not only demonstrated, but insisted upon, as an Army and Navy medical regulation during the late war by all the principal belligerents.

There is no doubt that the passage of this measure now before the House will breed a swarm of similar bills, springing from the dyspeptic brain of the theorist who germinates an idea while gripped in the embrace of a horrible nightmare, or from out some feminine mind suddenly endowed with a sense of her overwhelming responsibility for the care of humanity by reason of the right of suffrage which has been conferred upon her, determined at any cost, indeed, regardless of cost, to show that she is up and doing, and fully possessed of a sense of her responsibility. Or of that other class quite numerous, I am afraid, imbued with a secret purpose to provide a Government office for her holding. Will any of the distinguished proponents of this so-called maternity bill inform the House and the country, categorically, what argument could be advanced, logically, against the Government providing free food, free clothing, free homes, free everything, to those who need and want, if by this bill at Government expense we provide free medicine, free doctors, free nursing, free sustenance, and free housing to the indigent and needy prospective mother, which no one can assert was not the original purpose of this bill, and which no one can show has been abandoned by its proponents?

I am aware that these distinguished advocates of this measure are versatile in debate, possessing agile and sophistic minds, but I doubt if one of them can logically show a difference between the theory as originally proposed, and those measures I have supposed, unless the pig and baby logic is to be reemployed, in which case it would be well for us all to abandon logical argument.

For all of its supposed benevolence and altruism, this bill is dangerous and full of evil consequences. In addition to opening the door full wide to socialism, it can not function in a Nation-wide completeness without such a cost to the taxpayer as to foment unrest and continued opposition. If the bill is not to be general in its supposed beneficence, it must be partial in its benevolence, and therefore contrary to constitutional legislation. If the whole country is to be taxed for this and similar legislation, the people everywhere should partake of the benefits of such taxation. Innumerable millions of dollars could not accomplish this. To illustrate this impossibility, and to reveal the foolish infatuation of those who are working for this bill, and at the same time show their real and ultimate purpose, I desire to relate an incident in which I participated.

One day I was visited in my office by a woman, a propagandist of this measure who is well known everywhere, being a former Member of this House. She said to me, "Doctor, I have called to talk with you about the Sheppard-Towner bill. I am sure I do not have to urge you to vote for a maternity bill, seeing that you are a physician. But, inasmuch as you are from the East—have lived in normal and crowded centers—I want to tell you that there are places in the far West where women about to become mothers live 300 miles away from a doctor, and they ought to be provided for." I said to my caller, "I am at a loss to know, my dear lady, how the whole United States Treasury could ameliorate such a situation, unless it built a cement highway to every one of these outlying homesteads, kept a high powered motor car constantly cranked up, a telephone line in good working order, at the end of which in some town the doctor could have ready notice of the coming event. Or, better still, the Government might construct airdromes in all the towns nearest the outlying homesteads with an airplane always ready to be used. Or, best of all perhaps, a doctor and a nurse with a portable drug store could be installed in the home, both during and after the accouchement, and for as long time as there was need for their presence. Or perhaps, again, all this might be avoided by removing the patient to the nearest town or hospital." I said to her that, "In my private experience, I have more than once been called to such cases where the patient was only 3 miles away, and found the baby alive and kicking when I got there, and once as I remember entirely dressed when I appeared upon the scene, and it is my judgment, dear lady, that where the patient is 300 miles away, 299 babies out of 300 would be born before the doctor at the nearest Government post could get well on the road." To my great surprise she grew quite indignant and said, "You evidently are not enthused by this measure."

My reply was: "Oh, yes; I am very much enthused, but absolutely enthused against it, and against all such legislation, destructive, as I deem it to be, of our institutions; without justification under the Constitution, and which, if inaugurated, with the inevitable multitude of similar legislation, will destroy the essential qualities of our individual self-dependence, our individual initiative, and individual responsibility. That rather than do this, which it surely will, I personally feel that it would be far better that a few should die at birth, as they have, as they will, and as they must, rather than that the essential principles of American democracy should be supplanted through this legislation by paternalistic and socialistic and bolshevistic notions, which owe their presence in this country to the infection of imported theories, which the war has generated in the hallucinated brains of the foreigner. My dear lady, it cost human lives, and many of them, to establish this constitutional Government, and I, for one, am in favor of maintaining it, even at the cost of more."

In addition to the inestimable cost in dollars and cents, entailing a fresh burden of constantly increasing weight upon the taxpayer, this bill will result simply in less care of maternity and a flood of vicious literature.

There are 150,000 physicians in this country. Every town and little village has one or more in addition to the thousands in the city. No man can say that as a class they are not intelligent or humane. Their intelligence is predetermined by State regulations, without exception, I believe, in every State of the Union. By examination or by the presentation of a medical diploma from a reputable medical school they are admitted by the State boards of medicine to practice their profession. In other words, all of the States require a fair standard of qualification for the practice of medicine and surgery within their respective limits. I doubt if there be a State in the Union without such a standard. It is an assumption, and a false one at that, that the States have neglected to care for their respective peoples by neglecting the profession which alone is qualified by study and experience to care for them. Moreover, as a matter of professional ethics—by the splendid traditions of their profession—physicians are expected to care, and do care, for all within the radius of their activities. In my personal experience of many years I know of no maternity case, white or black, which did not have attention if needed. I have no reason to believe that the physicians of my community were not humanely typical of those of other communities throughout the whole country. Now, what will be the effect upon the morale of the physicians of this country if this bill with its ultimate purposes is enacted into law? Ultimately, if the bill is to be effective, a Government doctor must be established in every community.

The civil physicians, not receiving Government pay, will naturally and properly refuse the work which the Government doctor is supposed to do. The Government doctor may be sick; he may be unavoidably absent; he may be indifferent; or he may have more cases at one time than he can attend to. What will be the natural result of this? The civil physicians will say: "The Government has set up a paid competitor against us. Let him attend to it." I use the word "competitor" because it is not supposed that the Government physician would be stationed in an ordinary community and forbidden to practice his profession. If he is not forbidden, he becomes a competitor to the other physicians, who would be handicapped by a rival receiving Government aid. If he is forbidden, certainly the Government would have to pay to the Government physician in such a community a living wage, which would amount to at least $2,000 a year, and under conditions where he would not have, probably, more than a dozen cases in 12 months of indigent pregnant women to care for. This would be a pretty steep price for a labor case, according to my experience. If the Congress designs to take care of the indigent pregnant woman, it would be far more economic, would accomplish a far greater good, would reach a far larger number of cases, to say to the hundred and fifty thousand physicians of America: "Investigate every case that comes to you pleading indigency within the respective spheres of your activities. We regard you as having a far better opportunity than any Government agent to find out the facts in any given case. When found to be needy, supply the need. Give every indigent pregnant woman medical attention. Take care of the baby for such a period of time as you deem it advisable, and then send your bill to the Federal Treasury, which if properly attested by the clerk of a court shall be a draft upon the Treasury of the United States." In this way Government money would reach the very heart of the purpose. It would not be eaten up by salaries, traveling expenses, and obnoxious literature. But no. The proponents of this measure would not be in favor of this proposition, though in this way the real skill and experience of the whole medical profession could be enlisted for such a purpose. They want a bureau, a national bureau with an august head to it, with an army of incompetent and inexperienced employees drawing salaries, with plenty of money to hold conventions and fill themselves with the pleasure of kindred associations, where all the birds of the same feather, whether male or female, can flock together and enjoy a delectable community of thought without opposition—a symposium of socialistic joy!

I make the assertion that man for man, whether surgeon or physician, those who are not on the Government pay roll are superior, both in technique, experience, and knowledge to those who accept Government service. The gentlemen of the House are largely acquainted, I am sure, with the physicians of their respective districts.

I would like to ask the Members of this House if the ablest physicians of their districts would accept a job under the Government at a salary of $2,000 a year, which I believe is the salary paid by the Public Health Service to the twenty-three hundred and odd physicians in its employ? There is only one answer to such a question, and that is "no." And so it follows that if this bill is made into law and the original purposes embodied in it physicians of inferior ability will be necessarily employed for the purposes of this measure, or a costly flock of inexperienced women will be let loose upon the country if it is to be an educational bill only.

I assert that there is no need for this bill—none for the average rural community, and none for the crowded city. In every city of size there are medical schools as well as hospitals who gladly welcome indigent cases for the clinical experience of their interns and matriculates. As for the apparently formidable scale of statistics showing a fearful loss of children who die at childbirth, they are really not worth giving credence to. I assert that there are less children stillborn or who die in early infancy in this country because of medical neglect than in any other country possessing the same wide variations of soil, of climate, and of population. The real truth is that there is a growing distaste for the obligations and pains of maternity, and it is to this cause that a good part of infant mortality is to be attributed.

The proponents of this measure claim great efficiency for the governmental activity, manifested through the Children's Bureau, to which they attribute the lessening mortality among infants. In fact, the members of the bureau do not hesitate to advance their own claims in this direction. No matter by whom made, however, either by the perfervid proponents of this measure in this House or by Government officials of the Children's Bureau, the claim is false. It is a clear case of filching credit from those to whom it properly belongs. Every intelligent person knows there is a marked lessening of mortality from diseases everywhere, both among adults as well as among infants. The average duration of human life is markedly increasing, owing to the increase of knowledge in pathology, materia medica, sanitation, dietetics, prophylaxis; in fact, in all scientific directions which tend to prevent and cure diseases. But this result is not due to Government bureaus. It is the result of the devotion of the 150,000 physicians of the country who in a practical, clinical, everyday way are constantly increasing the store of experience which enables this result to be accomplished by disseminating this experience through national associations of medical science, by medical societies embracing the Nation, sections of the Nation, States, counties with all the multitudinous literature incident to such experience.

It is due to our splendid schools of medicine and surgery, where thousands of the brightest young men and women are taught annually the latest developments of medicinal and surgical science without the Government or any bureau of the Government having anything to do with the matter.

It is due to the thousands of men who, at their own expense, impelled by a love of knowledge, devote themselves to the work of the laboratory, whether it be in biological, bacteriological, pathological, or chemical pursuit. It is from these sources that our advancement comes in combating diseases and lessening both adult and infant mortality, and not from Government-paid officials whether in pants or in petticoat. Apropos of this fact, what does a Miss Lathrop, or a Miss Paull, or a Miss Rankin, or a Miss Todd, or any one of the salaried members of the Children's Bureau, actually contribute in the way of new discoveries, thus adding to the store of medical and surgical knowledge? They contribute nothing. They discover nothing. And as ministers of knowledge discovered by others they are lamentably inefficient in using such knowledge, because they lack actual medical and surgical training. In this connection, and going a little further, what discovery of any magnitude has a Government physician or surgeon made in medical or surgical science? Of the two most important discoveries of this generation that of an antitoxin for diphtheria and that for the prevention of typhoid fever are most conspicuous. They were not discovered by a Government bureau. A Klebs or a Loeffler will not be found in a Government bureau.

If an increased care in this matter of maternity, the oldest thing in the world, was of such sudden and pressing necessity, why were not the physicians and surgeons of the country, the great teachers and scientists devoted to medical lore, called upon to consider the problem and to suggest a remedy—if a remedy were needed—rather than a lot of emotional, kindly, and altruistic people who, in spite of all their altruism and kindliness, really know nothing on the subject in a scientific way, who are wholly without experience, noncontributors of medical knowledge, and hardly able to apply the smatter they have, even in a small way, for lack of previous training. For instance, what in the name of common sense does a Miss Lathrop, a Miss Todd, a Miss Rankin, or a Miss Paull, or indeed any of these hectic propagandists, know as to the method of relief to be afforded a woman in childbirth who has a contracted pelvis, or one who is in the throes of puerperal convulsions, or one who is suffering from puerperal septicæmia? In matters of this sort, grave and fundamental, is it possible that the Members of this House will ignore the great body of the medical profession in the consideration of this question? Is it possible that you regard the medical profession of the United States as inferior to the Children's Bureau?

It is an absurdity incomparable and inexplicable, except on the ground that not judgment, but fear will influence your decision.

I further assert that if the ultimate purposes of those behind this measure are enacted into law it will inevitably increase bastardy. Under present conditions every State, as far as I can ascertain, has a law on the statute books which compels the father of an illegitimate child to assume a certain monetary responsibility and care over it. These laws were enacted as a deterrence to illegitimacy. If by the passage of this bill, with its ultimate conceptions, it becomes known that this care and this responsibility will be shifted to the shoulders of the Government, there will be no restraint upon libidinous inclinations and illegitimate offspring.

Again, I oppose this bill because it would lead to pauperism by undermining the virtue of self-dependence.

It will blight like the withering blast of a hot wind from off the desert those age old ideals and virtues which surround fatherhood and motherhood.

What man worth his salt will let his own child be a pauper upon the bounty of the Government? What mother has so degenerated that she will admit the right of the State to interfere with her own baby through paid governmental busybodies?

Moreover, I oppose this bill because the physicians of my State oppose it. I oppose it because the physicians of the entire country oppose it. I believe that the great body of physicians and surgeons possess a saner judgment as to this matter than any Government bureau or than this House itself possesses. They have been and are the practical and scientific guardians of the public health, and there is no Government bureau nor Government agencies of any character whatever that can or should take precedence over their judgment in such a weighty matter.

If such a bill as this is to pass, it ought to be so amended that no man can hold a position under it who has not felt the compelling obligations and responsibilities of fatherhood, and no woman who has not had a baby of her own, thereby getting a little motherly experience before she endeavors to interfere with other women's babies. As a physician I can assert most positively that if such a requirement was made, at least the proponents of this measure would scatter like mist before the morning sun.

Upon the face of it, this bill as it comes from the Senate is chiefly objectionable because of the expense attached to it at a time when everything should be done to avoid unnecessary taxation. There is, however, a deeper objection in that it is designed as an entering wedge to socialistic legislation which has been openly avowed, and which no one here can show has been abandoned. In the three measures—namely, the Sheppard-Towner bill, the Smith-Towner bill, and the Fess amendment—we are brought face to face with the issue of maintaining the old principles of representative democracy, of State and community responsibility, or of abandoning them for principles openly socialistic in their purposes.

My fellow colleagues, ye who sit upon the right side of the Chamber! Ye who for a hundred years have claimed to be the guardians of the fair temple of democracy! Ye who took the great Jefferson as your own especial teacher and prophet, and proclaimed your devotion to his inspired precepts! Will you abandon your heritage? Will you scorn the founder of your political faith and by your votes repudiate every profession you have made during the past century? Has your past lost its inspiration? Have you ceased to revere? Will you now destroy?

And my colleagues upon the left side of the Chamber will you forget that your teacher and prophet was the immortal Lincoln? Will you apostatize also? Will you desert from your faith? Will you repudiate his immortal enunciation, the creed of your faith—"A government of the people and by the people"—and by your votes substitute a government of bureaucracy and by bureaucracy?

Mr. Chairman, we are standing at the parting of the ways, the place of grave and momentous decision, where principles lead in opposite directions. Gentlemen of the House, it is in your hands to bravely meet this fight or to shun it through fear. Let not the emancipation of women be the cause of the ultimate destruction of the Constitution. Vote, I beg you, to sustain the beneficent results of past experience. Appeal to the real Americanism of the people, both men and women, for your reelection. The great majority of our wives and mothers, of our sisters and daughters, are with us in every material, yea, in every high interest. Our interests in good government are indissolubly bound up with theirs. As we prosper, they prosper; as we fail, they suffer. If finally the Constitution and our old American principles have been a splendid success in their power and operation, let us hold on to them. Let us even fight for them, if need be. If, however, the Constitution and those principles have failed, if you think they have failed, thrown them down. I for one, however, shall be no iconoclast in such an impious procedure. [Applause.]

During the delivery of the foregoing, the time of Mr. LAYTON having expired—

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I would like a little more time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time is in the control of the gentleman from Orgeon [Mr. SINNOTT] and the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER].

Mr. WALSH. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. SINNOTT. Will the gentleman withhold that?

Mr. RAKER. How much time does the gentleman from Delaware desire?

Mr. LAYTON. I should like to have 10 minutes. I will try to finish in five.

Mr. WALSH. I will withhold the point of no quorum if the gentleman can conclude in five minutes.

Mr. LAYTON. I will try to do so.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts withdraws his point of no quorum, and the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] yields to the gentleman from Delaware five minutes additional.

Mr. LAYTON resumed and completed the delivery of the foregoing remarks.

Mr. RAKER. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM].

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas makes the point of no quorum present. Obviously there is no quorum present.

Mr. SINNOTT. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. STAFFORD, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 8842) to provide for agricultural entries on coal lands in Alaska, had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted—

To Mr. ROSE, for a few days, on account of the death of a near relative.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Wednesday, November 2, 1921, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

249. Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting a tentative draft of a bill for the relief of Prospero Monterrose, of Gautemala City, Guatemala; to the Committee on Claims.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. BOIES, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 7076) to amend section 190 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, reported the same with an amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 455), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 210) for the appointment of one member of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 456), which said joint resolution and report were referred to the House Calendar.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the Committee on Claims was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8888) for the relief of the legal representatives of Sylvester Jancovich, deceased; and the same was referred to the Committee on War Claims.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. FOCHT (by request): A bill (H. R. 8955) to regulate the sale of milk and cream in the District of Columbia, to safeguard the public health, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. CLOUSE: A bill (H. R. 8956) to amend an act entitled "An act to prohibit intoxicating beverages, and to regulate the manufacture, production, use, and sale of high-proof spirits for other than beverage purposes, and to insure an ample supply of alcohol and promote its use in scientific research and in the development of fuel, and other lawful industries," passed the House of Representatives October 27, 1919, and in the United States Senate October 28, 1919; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. VOLSTEAD: A bill (H. R. 8957) to define and prescribe punishment for certain offenses against Federal reserve banks, member banks, Federal farm loan banks, and national banks; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CROWTHER: A bill (H. R. 8958) to amend an act entitled "An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes," approved October 15, 1914, by amending section 10 thereof; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. DUPRE: A bill (H. R. 8959) to amend the act to establish a Veterans' Bureau and to improve the facilities and service of such bureau, and further to amend and modify the war risk insurance act, approved August 9, 1921; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By the SPEAKER (by request): Memorial of the Legislature of the State of Louisiana urging the repeal of the Federal estate tax; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, memorial of the Legislature of the State of Louisiana urging a modification of the Volstead law so as to allow the sale of light wines and beer under certain restrictions; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. CLOUSE: A bill (H. R. 8960) granting a pension to Martha E. McDonald; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin: A bill (H. R. 8961) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate, for ornamental purposes, one cannon or fieldpiece and five cannon balls to the village of Sharon, Wis.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. DYER: A bill (H. R. 8962) granting a pension to Eliza J. Lynch; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8963) granting a pension to August Bohlender; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. GORMAN: A bill (H. R. 8964) for the relief of John Berrin; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HERSEY: A bill (H. R. 8965) granting a pension to Effie C. McKay; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MAPES: A bill (H. R. 8966) granting a pension to Milton Clark; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. MOTT: A bill (H. R. 8967) for the relief of A. W. Wright; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. OVERSTREET: A bill (H. R. 8968) granting a pension to E. M. Carter; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. PURNELL: A bill (H. R. 8969) granting an increase of pension to Alameda J. McBride; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8970) granting an increase of pension to Rebecca D. Chizum; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee: A bill (H. R. 8971) granting an increase of pension to Sherman G. Johnson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. THOMPSON: A bill (H. R. 8972) for the relief of Lloyd Addison Basinger; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. WURZBACH: A bill (H. R. 8973) for the relief of Miles A. Chancey; to the Committee on Claims.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

2898. By Mr. BLAND of Virginia: Petition from citizens of Colonial Beach, Va., and Washington, D. C., opposing the compulsory Sunday observance bill (H. R. 4388); to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

2899. Also, petition from citizens of Urbanna and Newport News, Va., opposing legislation increasing the tax on medicinal alcohol or any other medicinal preparations; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

2900. By Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee: Petition of numerous citizens of Nashville, Tenn., opposing House bill 4388, regulating Sunday observance in the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

2901. By Mr. COUGHLIN: Petition of Avoca Methodist Episcopal Church, of Avoca, Pa., indorsing proposed constitutional amendment to prohibit sectarian appropriations and urging its immediate passage; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

2902. By Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania: Resolutions of Pittsburgh Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, pertaining to disarmament and the enforcement of law; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

2903. By Mr. KISSEL: Petition of the Zeldo & Martinez Export Co., of New York City; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

2904. Also, petition of the Kelvin Engineering Co. (Inc.) of New York City; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

2905. Also, petition of the Turner Construction Co., of New York City; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

2906. By Mr. LINTHICUM: Petition of the Afro-American of Baltimore, Md., favoring House bill 13; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

2907. Also, petition of Joel Gutman & Co., of Baltimore, Md., registering opposition to clause 402 of the Fordney bill; also petition of Coale Muffller & Safety Valve Co., of Baltimore, Md., favoring reduction of personal income tax revenue bill; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

2908. By Mr. RHODES: Resolution on law enforcement, signed by Rev. A. R. Graham and others; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

2909. By Mr. TOWNER: Resolution and petition of Convention of Christian Churches of California North, urging passage of Towner-Sterling educational bill; to the Committee on Education.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, November 2, 1921.

(Legislative day of Thursday, October 20, 1921.)

The Senate reassembled at 11 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The principal legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gerry	McKinley	Sheppard
Borah	Hale	McLean	Simmons
Brandegee	Harreld	McNary	Smoot
Broussard	Harris	Moses	Spencer
Bursum	Heflin	Nelson	Sterling
Calder	Hitchcock	New	Sutherland
Cameron	Johnson	Newberry	Swanson
Capper	Jones, N. Mex.	Nicholson	Townsend
Caraway	Jones, Wash.	Norbeck	Trammell
Culberson	Kendrick	Norris	Wadsworth
Cummins	Kenyon	Oddie	Walsh, Mass.
Curtis	Keyes	Overman	Watson, Ga.
Dial	King	Penrose	Watson, Ind.
Edge	Ladd	Phipps	Weller
Ernst	La Follette	Poindexter	Willis
Fernald	Lenroot	Pomerene
Frelinghuysen	McKellar	Reed

Mr. DIAL. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. SMITH] is detained on account of illness. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. GERRY. I wish to announce that the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] is necessarily absent on official business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Sixty-six Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

INVESTIGATION OF TREATMENT OF SOLDIERS.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, on yesterday while I was for the moment out of the Chamber the Presiding Officer appointed me as a member of the special committee to investigate certain charges which were made on the floor of the Senate. I am at the present time serving on two special committees by direct appointment of the Senate, one being the committee investigating the incapacitated soldiers' relief bureaus and the other the committee investigating the Haitian and Santo Domingo difficulty. I am also serving on some of the regular committees and subcommittees thereunder, and I feel that all my time is occupied. I am afraid that if I were to attempt to serve on the committee appointed yesterday I would not be able to do justice to that work. I therefore ask the Senate to relieve me from that duty. It is not a desire on my part to shirk any responsibility, but I feel that I can not give the time to it, and I hope I may be relieved.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair relieves the Senator from Ohio from service on the special committee as requested and appoints in his stead the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore subsequently said: The Chair desires to announce that he has been advised that the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] is absent from the city. In that situation the Chair appoints the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] to act upon the committee to which the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] was appointed.

ADDRESS BY SENATOR NICHOLSON.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a very able address by Hon. SAMUEL D. NICHOLSON, a Senator from the State of Colorado, delivered before the American Mining Congress at Chicago October 20 on important current questions relating to the mining interests of the country, and also a resolution adopted by the American Mining Congress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I have not heard what the paper is, and I would at least like to know for what unanimous consent is requested.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the paper.

Mr. PENROSE. I do not want to have it read, but I would at least like to know for what purpose the revenue bill is being interrupted.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I did not suppose it would interrupt the revenue bill to offer this matter to be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. PENROSE. This one matter does not interrupt it, but some score of Senators, I observe, are on their feet, doubtless for similar purposes, and I thought it was legitimate curiosity at least to have the Chair extend to me the courtesy of informing me what was presented.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I stated, and I now restate, that it is a speech delivered before the American Mining Congress by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. NICHOLSON] on important questions relating to the mining interests of the country.

Mr. PENROSE. I only desire to state that I shall not object in this instance, but I hope the revenue bill now be proceeded with. Later in the day, if a convenient lull occurs in the proceedings, there will doubtless be opportunity given for the introduction of these minor legislative matters.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the address and resolution will be printed in the RECORD.

The matter referred to is as follows:

ADDRESS DELIVERED BY HON. SAMUEL D. NICHOLSON, UNITED STATES SENATOR FROM COLORADO, BEFORE CONVENTION OF THE AMERICAN MINING CONGRESS AT CHICAGO, ILL., OCTOBER 20, 1921.

NEED OF THE MINING INDUSTRY FOR CABINET REPRESENTATION.

Senator NICHOLSON spoke as follows:

To satisfy the requirements of war, it became necessary for the Government to exercise the initiative in speeding up the production and mobilization of the essential war resources of the Nation. These resources were constituted principally of the products and by-products of the agricultural and mining industries. The problem confronting the Government was not merely to insure the normal output of those products, but in many cases to make certain of a sufficient overproduction to satisfy the additional requirements of Europe under the stress of war. The governmental machinery in all branches was put to the severest test. The most unusual burdens were thrust suddenly upon the executive, legislative, and administrative branches of the Government. The available machinery of every governmental department was carefully analyzed to determine whether it could assume the responsibility and perform well the task. Wherever it was found that the governmental machinery already existing was not adequate, various agencies were created to supplement the organizations of such departments and to assume the responsibilities for supplying various resources. Power was delegated to these newly formed branches of the Government and responsibility centralized.

Upon our entrance in the war, the Department of Agriculture was well equipped to meet the problems of war. Its extensive machinery had been developed progressively since 1889, when that department was first represented by a Cabinet member. Through its many experiment stations and field agents, this department was in close and friendly touch with the farmers all over the country, and it became necessary only to increase the field force in order to expand the service which was required to increase production. The Food Administration was organized solely to aid the agricultural industry in the conservation of food, an emergency requirement of the war, and not a prerequisite in times of peace.

When the mining industry was analyzed, however, the governmental machinery was found to be woefully deficient to cope with the many vexatious problems of mineral production. In making this statement I do not minimize the excellent service which the United States Geological Survey and the Bureau of Mines rendered during this period of great national stress, but what I desire to say is that there was no secretary of mines to correspond with the Secretary of Agriculture, who had personal contact and knowledge of that industry. There was no executive branch of the Government with well coordinated facilities to assume the responsibility which was imposed. It became necessary, therefore, to create many independent agencies for the purpose of extending and developing the governmental machinery to solve the war problems of mineral production. This alone should be a lesson to those in charge of our governmental affairs who must assume administrative responsibility, that the occasion never again should arise when the machinery is not well developed and available to meet any of the emergencies of war. A Government well equipped to deal with the resource production problems arising from war is the best adapted to render the service needed in times of peace.

It is with this thought in mind that I have introduced Senate bill 1957, to establish a department of mines, with Cabinet representation for the mining industry.

The first Secretary of Agriculture was appointed in 1889, in which year the agricultural output of the Nation was valued at $2,460,000,000. In that year the mineral output was valued at $551,000,000. In 1900 the mineral output had expanded to $1,064,000,000, or nearly double that of 1889. In 1910 the mineral output again doubled to a production of $1,992,000,000. The United States Geological Survey estimates that the mineral output of 1920 was $6,707,000,000, or twelve times as great as that of 1889, and nearly three times the value of the agricultural output at the time when the Department of Agriculture was created. Because of this rapid growth in the mining industry and the position of increasing importance that it has and will continue to assume for the Nation as a whole, there should be no question but that it is entitled to Cabinet representation.

Another evidence of the importance of the mining industry to the industrial system of the Nation is the amount of traffic which it supplies to the railroads. Of a total freight tonnage of 2,307,000,000 tons carried by the railroads of the United States in 1918, the mining industry supplied 1,500,000,000 tons, or over 65 per cent, while the combined tonnage of the agricultural and live-stock industries was but 290,000,000 tons, or less than 13 per cent.

It is apparent from the foregoing statement that the railroads of the Nation could not provide the necessary transportation facilities for the agricultural and live-stock industries were it not for the fact that the mining industry sustains the major burden of their operating costs. This reflects the general dependence of the public upon the operation of the mines for the lowering of the cost of transportation on their food products. The cost of living would become prohibitive if the agricultural and live-stock industries were forced to bear the entire burden of operating the railroad system.

The United States Geological Survey, in estimating the world's production of minerals, shows to what extent the United States has contributed. In 1913 the United States produced 39 per cent of the 1,342,300,000 metric tons of coal produced by the world. In 1918 we produced 355,900,000 barrels of crude petroleum, which represented 67.8 per cent of the total produced by the world. For the period 1857–1918 the production of crude petroleum by this country was 4,608,000,000 barrels, which represents 61.1 per cent of the total world output. This country in 1913 produced 63,000,000 metric tons, or 36 per cent of the world's total of iron ore. We consumed in that year 64,500,000 tons of iron ore, from which 31,500,000 metric tons of pig iron was produced, or 40 per cent of the world's total, and 31,800,000 metric tons of steel, which was 42 per cent of the world's production. The United States produces from domestic ore about 60 per cent of the world's output of copper, and through its commercial control of deposits in Mexico, Peru, Chile, and Canada supplies about 9 per cent more. The iron, coal, oil, and copper reserves of the United States exceed the combined developed reserves of all other nations. This list of minerals extensively produced in this country could be greatly lengthened.

Practically all of the foreign nations regard the mining industry so important that they have made special governmental provision for it in creating departments of mines. In Canada and most of the British possessions a minister of mines presides over the department. From an international standpoint an industry which makes so prominent a contribution to the world's output of fundamentally necessary mineral products as the mining industry of the United States should be dignified by having a separate department in the Government, presided over by a representative of the President's Cabinet.

The Department of the Interior, originally created to dispose of the public domain, has become the repository for numerous other odds and ends of administrative responsibility wholly unrelated to the purpose for which it was created and still more unrelated to the administrative problems of the mining industry. There are 14 separate bureaus in the Interior Department, of which but two relate to mining, while in the Agricultural Department there are 18 subdivisions, all of which relate to agriculture.

Under the present system the United States Geological Survey and the Bureau of Mines are but 2 subordinate bureaus among 14 over which the Secretary of the Interior must exercise control. It is not conceivable, even though the Secretary might have excellent qualifications to solve the problems confronting the mining industry, that he could, with his other manifold responsibilities as the chief executive of the Department of the Interior, devote sufficient time to the work. There should be a governmental leader for this great industry so fundamentally necessary to the progress of the Nation. If a crisis should occur in the coal-mining industry or any other branch of the mining industry, who could be called upon on behalf of the administration to render advice, formulate a remedy, and assume the responsibility for the result without the creation of a special commission with its costly delays?

Many constructive laws have been enacted for the benefit of the agricultural industry, and I am in hearty accord with all that has been done as favorably affecting the farmer and the general interests of the public. I contend, however, that the welfare of the mining industry is as fundamentally important to the general welfare and prosperity of the Nation as the agricultural industry, and that consideration should now be given the request of that industry for a department of mines with Cabinet representation.

The bill which I have introduced is broad and comprehensive. All activities affecting every branch of the mining industry, wherever located in the present governmental program, are assembled under one central control.

I am an exponent of economy in the expenditure of public funds. The creation of this new department will effect economies arising from the elimination of all duplications of effort of the various agencies now employed, and will expand the present governmental service to the industry at less expense. The mining industry is not benefited by duplicated activities, and would welcome this more direct and businesslike administration. The indirect benefits which would accrue to the public generally would be an even more important consideration arising from the centralized control made possible through Cabinet representation and the creation of a department of mines.

In 1910 the mining industry produced $2,000,000,000 of new wealth and was then as much in need of a department to deal exclusively with its many problems as was the agricultural industry in 1889, with a similar value of production.

The mining industry has outgrown the governmental machinery provided, and yet the problems involved in our mineral and metallurgical production are no less complex than those of an agricultural nature. To-day the Nation is confronted with many economic uncertainties affecting all branches of industry. The ocean upon which we are sailing is uncharted and precedents are lacking to guide our course to safety and industrial poise. The solution of our industrial problems depends upon the reduction of costs of production. These operating efficiencies can be obtained only through improvements developed by research, and in this connection the department of mines would render a signal service to the mining industry. Without this effective assistance our return to normal will be postponed for many years to come and the unemployment difficulties aggravated.

I am informed by the Secretary of Labor, in a letter of recent date, that we have approximately 19,000,000 wage earners in the United States whose employment, either directly or indirectly, depends upon the production of minerals and their manufacture into the machinery of industry, the implements of agriculture, and the tools of trade.

This Nation's labor will have to face the keenest competition of the labor of the world, and the superior operating advantages which our labor should derive from inventive improvements will mean the success and prosperity of the Nation's business. Our problems of unemployment will disappear only when the wheels of our industry are all turning, and the speed of these can be greatly accelerated by the creation of a department of mines.

It should now be apparent to the people of our Nation that, notwithstanding the abundance of our agricultural yield, we have over 5,000,000 men whose unemployment largely results from the present depressed condition of the mining industry.

I believe that there are those who still agree with the immortal Lincoln who delivered this message to the mining industry a few days before his death:

"Tell the miners for me that I shall promote their interests to the utmost of my ability, because their prosperity is the prosperity of the Nation."

DEPARTMENT OF MINES.

Resolution No. 2, introduced by William J. Loring, of California.

Whereas the mining industry is confronted with special problems due to the consequences of war and the present urgent requirements of readjustment, the solution of which could be greatly facilitated by Cabinet representation for the mining industry; and

Whereas the employment of 19,000,000 wage earners, of which some 5,000,000 are now out of employment, is dependent directly or indirectly upon the products of the mines, the implements of agriculture, the machinery of industry, and the tools of trade; and

Whereas the agricultural industry in 1889, when a Cabinet representative for that industry was appointed, had a total value of production of less than $2,500,000,000, while the mining industry had during 1920 an estimated value of production of over $7,000,000,000; and

Whereas the American Mining Congress has recognized the need for the creation of a Department of Mines and direct Cabinet representation for the mining industry during the 24 years since its organization, during which period the organization has indorsed many bills which have been introduced in Congress for this purpose: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the American Mining Congress in the twenty-fourth annual convention assembled at Chicago, Ill., hereby indorses Senate bill 1957, introduced by Senator SAMUEL D. NICHOLSON, of Colorado, which centralizes all governmental activities related to the mining industry in one department to be presided over by the secretary of mines, who would be a member of the President's Cabinet; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States, the Secretary of the Interior, and to the Members of the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States.

TAX REVISION.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8245) to reduce and equalize taxation, to amend and simplify the revenue act of 1918, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT].

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, there are some score of minor amendments which the Senator from Utah, on behalf of the Finance Committee, will now submit to the Senate.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to introduce a bill and a resolution.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I must object to the introduction of any further morning business at this time. There is no evidence on the part of the minority of any willingness to hasten the passage of the bill or to agree upon a fixed date to vote, and until some such disposition is shown I do not see why the orderly progress of the bill should be interrupted. For the present I must object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made. The bill and resolution will not be received.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, when the Senate took a recess last night there was pending before the Senate amendment No. 33. It provided for inserting on page 129, in line 4, after the word "begun," the words "in any court." I ask now to withdraw that amendment and allow the provision to stand just as it is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The amendment is withdrawn. The Secretary will report the next amendment.

The READING CLERK. Amendment No. 34, on page 113, line 4, after the word "return" and before the comma, insert the following:

made under the revenue act of 1917, the revenue act of 1918, or this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The READING CLERK. The next amendment is amendment No. 35, on page 118, after line 17, to insert the following paragraph:

(h) The provisions of subdivisions (e), (f), and (g) of this section shall apply to the assessment and collection of taxes which have accrued or may accrue under the revenue act of 1917, the revenue act of 1918, or this act.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The READING CLERK. The next amendment is amendment No. 36, on page 121, line 8, in the committee amendment already agreed to, after the word "filed," to strike out the remainder of line 8 and all of lines 9 and 10 and insert in lieu thereof "prior to the passage of the revenue act of 1918 under subdivision (a) of section 14 of the revenue act of 1916, or filed prior to the passage of this act under section 252 of the revenue act of 1918."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair suggests that the vote by which the committee amendment was adopted should be reconsidered.

Mr. SMOOT. That is true. I ask unanimous consent that that be done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment on page 121, beginning in line 6, will be reconsidered, the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah will be agreed to, and, without objection, the amendment as amended will be agreed to.

The READING CLERK. The next amendment is amendment numbered 39, on page 156, line 4, after the word "section," to strike out the semicolon and insert a period.

Mr. SMOOT. This amendment is merely a change in punctuation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will observe that according to the print before the Chair a period is already placed after the word "section"; but, without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The next amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. The next amendment is amendment numbered 62, on page 221, after line 19, to insert a new paragraph as follows:

This section shall not apply to vessels or boats used without profit by any benevolent, charitable, or religious organizations, exclusively for furnishing aid, comfort, or relief to seamen.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that an amendment in practically the same terms as the one just stated has heretofore been agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. That action was taken at the request of the Senator from Massachusetts, as he had to leave the Chamber, and we forgot to mark it off on the copy which I have here. I therefore withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment is withdrawn. The next amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. The next amendment is amendment numbered 63, on page 238, lines 2 and 3, to strike out the words "to an amount equal to the full value of the adhesive stamps so furnished," and in lieu thereof insert "in a sum to be fixed by the Commissioner."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The vote whereby the amendment heretofore has been adopted must be reconsidered before the amendment just stated will be in order. Without objection, the vote whereby the amendment on page 238, beginning in line 1, was adopted will be reconsidered.

Mr. SIMMONS. I will ask the Senator from Utah to give us a brief explanation of the object of the amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. I hold in my hand a letter from C. P. Smith, Assistant Commissioner of Internal Revenue, in which he states:

The above paragraph of section 1107 of the revenue bill now pending in Congress provides: "In such cases the collector may require a bond, with sufficient surety, to an amount equal to the value of the adhesive stamps so furnished * * *." The Empire Trust Co., of New York, which is the only depository now permitted to receive documentary stamps for sale without previous payment therefor, objects to the above language, inasmuch as it would entail an enormous expense to it in the handling of documentary stamps. At the present time this trust company sometimes has on hand as much as $4,000,000 in stamps. It is necessary that it carry a large amount of stamps of different denominations for the convenience of taxpayers, and especially for the convenience of collectors. It can not tell in advance how many stamps of a certain denomination may be required. Under the present arrangement it has been required to furnish a surety bond of $500,000, the premium on which is $2,500 per annum. If it were required to furnish a bond of $4,000,000, the premium expense would be $20,000. The company claims that the sum of the bond should be fixed by the commissioner. It therefore is very anxious that the above quoted language of paragraph (c) of section 1107 be made to read as follows:

"In such cases the collector may require a bond, with sufficient surety, in a sum to be fixed by the commissioner * * *."

I can not see any objection to the change, and am, therefore, recommending it.

I will say to the Senator that the company referred to in the letter, without any profit whatever, handles stamps for the convenience of customers at New York or anyone else who may apply. It is simply done at the request of the department, and it is desired to so arrange the matter that the commissioner may accept a bond for an amount that he feels will secure the Government on account of the revenue stamps deposited with that institution.

Mr. SIMMONS. Is it the construction of the Senator that the language used in the amendment now in the bill would require the institution to give bond for the full amount of the stamps on hand?

Mr. SMOOT. It would.

Mr. SIMMONS. Instead of that the Senator wants such an amount fixed as the commissioner thinks would reasonably secure the Treasury?

Mr. SMOOT. That is the plan of the existing law; but the committee amendment changes that, or at least the commissioner thinks that it changes it, so that it will require a bond for every dollar of revenue stamps that the Government may send them to dispose of.

Mr. SIMMONS. This, I assume, is a bank of great financial standing?

Mr. SMOOT. It is. It only handles these stamps for the convenience of the taxpayers in New York, and it does so without profit.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Is there not a collector of internal revenue there?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; there is one collector of internal revenue for the whole State of New York.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Is he not located at New York City?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; but the institution to which I have referred is located in the business district, where the greater amount of such stamps are called for and distributed. The arrangement is only made for the convenience of the taxpayer; there is not a cent of profit in it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment is agreed to, and the amendment as amended is also agreed to.

The READING CLERK. The next amendment is, on page 272, line 11, in the committee amendment already agreed to, after the word "refunding" to insert "or crediting."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the vote by which the committee amendment was adopted will be reconsidered. The question now is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the next amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the next amendment is an amendment to the same section.

The READING CLERK. It is also proposed, on page 272, after line 19, to insert the following paragraph:

This section, except as modified by section 252, shall apply retroactively to claims for refund under the revenue act of 1917 and the revenue act of 1918.

Mr. SMOOT. That simply means that we put all of them upon the same basis.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That practically bars all claims for the year 1917.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator will refer to section 252 he will find that that section covers income and profits taxes, and the amendment now offered simply makes the provision retroactive to apply to the acts of 1917 and 1918.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. But the four years have already expired since 1917.

Mr. SMOOT. Under the act of 1917 only two years were allowed. This amendment, if adopted, will allow four years in all cases. Of course, if four years have expired, it would not affect the matter in any way.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The READING CLERK. The next amendment is, on page 273, line 20. In the committee amendment already agreed to, after the word "refund," it is proposed to insert "or credit."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the vote whereby the committee amendment was agreed to will be reconsidered. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The READING CLERK. On page 274, after line 4, insert the following paragraph:

This section shall not affect any suit or proceeding instituted prior to the passage of this act, but shall apply to all suits and proceedings instituted after the passage of this act, whether or not barred by prior acts of Congress.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, that means that if a suit has already been begun the adoption of this section will not bar them from proceeding with the suit.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the vote whereby the committee amendment was agreed to will be reconsidered. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The READING CLERK. The next amendment is on page 274, line 9.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, that is the same amendment that I withdrew in the beginning; and I now withdraw that amendment, No. 70.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, amendment No. 70 will be withdrawn.

The READING CLERK. On page 276, line 18, in the committee amendment already agreed to, after the word "for," insert "internal revenue."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the vote by which the amendment was agreed to will be reconsidered. The question now is upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The READING CLERK. The next amendment is No. 72.

On page 286, line 4, in the committee amendment already agreed to, after the word "Treasurer," strike out the comma and the remainder of the line and all of lines 5, 6, and 7, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "of the United States, a Federal reserve bank, or other depository duly designated for that purpose by the Secretary, which shall issue receipt therefor," and a comma.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the vote by which the amendment was adopted will be reconsidered. The question now is upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The READING CLERK. The next amendment is No. 73. On page 289, line 7, insert after the period a new sentence to read as follows:

For the purposes of this section, public-service corporations shall be construed to be affiliated only if and to the extent provided in the regulations heretofore promulgated with reference to Title II of the revenue act of 1917.

Mr. SIMMONS. I will ask the Senator to explain this amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. This amendment provides that public-service corporations shall be construed to be affiliated only if and to the extent provided in the regulations heretofore promulgated with reference to Title II of the revenue act of 1917. That permission has been granted them under existing law, and this is simply to put them in the same position that they are in now, under existing law. This is to make sure that when a public-service corporation elects as to how it shall make its return, it can not change that and afterwards make the return as a corporation.

Mr. SIMMONS. This amendment says:

Public service corporations shall be construed to be affiliated only if and to the extent provided in the regulations heretofore promulgated with reference to Title II of the revenue act of 1917.

That is, affiliated for the purpose of making their returns.

Mr. SMOOT. On the subsidiary companies; but if they elect to do that they can not come in later and make a return as one company, upon the whole, as an affiliated company.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is the effect of the regulation?

Mr. SMOOT. That is the effect of the regulation, and this is exactly as it is to-day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the vote by which the committee amendment was agreed to will be reconsidered. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The READING CLERK. The next amendment is No. 74. On page 289, line 19, in the committee amendment already agreed to, strike out the words and figures "sections 230 and 301" and insert in lieu thereof "Titles II and III."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the vote by which the committee amendment was agreed to will be reconsidered. The question now is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The READING CLERK. On page 289, line 21, in the committee amendment already agreed to, strike out the words and figures "sections 230 and 301" and insert in lieu thereof "Titles II and III."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the vote by which the committee amendment was agreed to will be reconsidered. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The READING CLERK. Amendment No. 75. On page 292, strike out lines 3 to 25, inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

SEC. 1400. (a) That the following parts of the revenue act of 1918 are repealed, to take effect (except as otherwise provided in this act) on January 1, 1922, subject to the limitations provided in subdivision (b):

Title II (called "Income tax") as of January 1, 1921;

Title III (called "War-profits and excess-profits tax") as of January 1, 1921;

Title IV (called "Estate tax") on the passage of this act;

Title V (called "Tax on transportation and other facilities, and on insurance");

Sections 628, 629, and 630 of Title VI (being the taxes on soft drinks, ice cream, and similar articles);

Title VII (called "Tax on cigars, tobacco, and manufactures thereof");

Title VIII (called "Tax on admissions and dues");

Title IX (called "Excise taxes");

Title X (called "Special taxes");

Title XI (called "Stamp taxes");

Title XII (called "Tax on employment of child labor") as of January 1, 1921; and Sections 1314, 1315, 1316, 1317, 1319, and 1320 of Title XIII (being certain administrative provisions) on the passage of this act.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the vote by which the committee amendment was agreed to will be reconsidered. The question now is upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, just a word of explanation: I will state that this specifically states the day on which the repeal takes effect in better form than Title XIV as reported to the Senate. This is more definite.

Mr. SIMMONS. I understand that it embraces only the taxes that have been repealed, and is substituted for the enumeration in the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. That is correct.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The READING CLERK. Amendment No. 76: On page 293, line 2, after the word "shall," insert a parenthesis and the following: "unless otherwise specifically provided in this act)."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the vote by which the committee amendment was agreed to will be reconsidered. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The READING CLERK. The next amendment is No. 77: On page 294, after line 2, insert a new heading and section to read as follows:

INCREASE IN TREASURY SAVINGS CERTIFICATE LIMIT.

SEC. 1402. That section 6 of the second Liberty bond act, as amended, is amended by striking out in the next to the last sentence thereof the figures "$1,000" and inserting in lieu thereof the figures "$5,000."

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, will the Senator explain that amendment?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

The Treasury Department is going to undertake a drive for the sale of savings stamps, and under the existing law the amount that can be held by one person is $1,000. This amendment provides that it shall be increased from $1,000 to $5,000. I have here a letter addressed to the chairman of the committee from the Secretary of the Treasury, and if the Senator desires I will have this letter read from the desk.

Mr. SIMMONS. No. Will the Senator state the contents of the letter?

Mr. SMOOT. The contents are just what I have already stated as the object of this amendment. It is to allow an individual to purchase $5,000 of these savings stamps instead of $1,000.

Mr. SIMMONS. Will the Senator state the purpose of making this drive to sell savings stamps?

Mr. SMOOT. There are two reasons.

Mr. SIMMONS. For what object is the money to be raised? This is substantially the Government borrowing that much more money. What is it proposed to borrow this money for?

Mr. SMOOT. If we get this money, we will redeem the short-time certificates that are drawing a higher rate of interest than will be drawn by these savings certificates; and then there is another object in it. The Senator remembers that when the proposition was first presented, it was to create a spirit of saving among the people of the United States. The rate of interest on these certificates is not as high as the rate of interest on the short-time certificates, and all the money that we can get in this way will be used for the retirement of savings stamps presented for payment and if more is sold then the short-time certificates that are in circulation to-day.

Mr. SIMMONS. Does the Senator mean that it is proposed now to refund the short-time certificates that have been issued by issuing longer-term notes or longer-term obligations of the Government?

Mr. SMOOT. No. The short-time certificates of course are sold now not at any specific time, but as the requirements of the Government demand. There is no increase in them now, because of the fact that when they fall due the Treasury Department simply makes another sale of short-time certificates to take up the ones due.

Mr. SIMMONS. What I am trying to get at is, are these stamps being sold for the purpose of supplying the requirements of the Treasury until taxes can be collected and they can be paid off, or are they being sold for the purpose of extending the time for the payment of certificates already issued?

Mr. SMOOT. All those certificates will be paid when they fall due.

Mr. SIMMONS. Many of them will not be paid when they fall due, and it is proposed to fund them in long-term notes.

Mr. SMOOT. This has nothing to do with that. A great many foreigners in this country have purchased these savings stamps up to the amount of a thousand dollars. They can not under the law purchase any more of them, and of course the only thing they can do, not having confidence in anything but the Government, is to send their additional earnings home. Among that class of people no doubt there are many who would purchase these savings certificates to the amount of more than a thousand dollars if they could.

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not question at all the effect upon the thrift of the people of selling these savings stamps, but what is going to be done with the money? Are we selling these stamps to raise money to pay current expenses? If we are, it is a bad proposition. If we are selling them for the purpose of raising money to pay off obligations which already exist, and which we do not expect to pay out of current taxes, I have no objection.

Mr. SMOOT. I will assure the Senator that the purpose is not to sell these bonds to pay the running expenses of the Government.

Mr. REED. But are they not to pay obligations which have already been incurred, and which ought to be met out of the taxes which are collected from time to time?

Mr. SMOOT. They were incurred years ago, when the Government had to incur the obligations, and, of course, when they are paid off, that might, in a way, be construed as paying the running expenses of the Government; but they are not taken into consideration in estimating the amount that would be required for the maintenance of the Government for this fiscal year or any future fiscal year. They will be used, of course, if possible, to save the difference between the interest upon the saving certificates and the interest on the short-time certificates, which are drawing now about 4¾ per cent.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I have this in mind: The Senator will recollect that in his original estimate the Secretary of the Treasury included $170,000,000 to take up certain short-time obligations of the Government incurred in part through the operations of what is known as the Pittman amendment. His subsequent estimate was reduced by $520,000,000, and part of the $520,000,000 he proposed to provide for by the issuance of securities of the Government to take up this $170,000,000 I referred to instead of paying it out of the current taxes.

Of course that is an obligation already incurred, but it was an obligation, as I understand it, which properly should be met out of the revenues collected from time to time by the Government, because I think the Government got the benefit of the very moneys which it now must replace, and I am curious to know whether we are now to have a drive for the sale of savings stamps to get that money in.

Mr. SIMMONS. In addition to the $70,000,000 to pay off the obligations of the Government in connection with the Pittman amendment, the Secretary included as a part of this $4,000,000,000 we are now trying to raise a million dollars which would be necessary to redeem saving stamps which would be presented for payment during this current year. I have somewhat of a notion that these new savings stamps are to be sold to pay for those saving stamps.

Mr. SMOOT. No; if the Senator will remember, the estimate, covering these items both Senators speak of, was over $4,500,000,000.

Mr. SIMMONS. That was the original estimate.

Mr. SMOOT. That was the original estimate, which included the items both Senators have spoken of; but the $4,034,000,000 did not include those items at all.

Mr. SIMMONS. But the $4,500,000,000 did include both of those items, and at that time the Secretary of the Treasury undoubtedly reached the conclusion that these two items were legitimate objects to which revenue should be devoted. But when he reduced the estimates he eliminated those two items, one of them being, as I said, to redeem such war-savings stamps as might be presented under the law for redemption during the current fiscal year. As they have to be provided for, it occurred to me that possibly the Secretary of the Treasury had in mind to provide for the redemption of those issues already out by issuing more. I would like very much if the Senator would advise me if the Secretary has any such purpose as that, because he has already, by virtue of his original estimate, in which they were included, let it be understood that, so far as he was concerned, he regarded them as belonging to this fiscal year, and that it was an obligation of the Government which should be paid out of current taxes.

Mr. SMOOT. They did not belong to the fiscal year's expenses, but many of them were falling due in the fiscal year and had to be met either by issuing short-time certificates to take the place of the obligations which were made years ago, or, if we could sell these certificates now at the lower rate, the Government would save whatever difference there might be in the interest.

As far as the $170,000,000 for the silver under the Pittman Act obligation is concerned, we passed that law, and the western miners of the United States agreed with the Government that silver should not be more than a dollar an ounce. At the same time, silver was being bought all over the world at $1.36 an ounce. That was the agreement made by the Government of the United States, and there was only one great reservoir of silver unused in the world, and that was in the Treasury of the United States, and in order to save England's credit that reservoir was tapped and sold to England and other countries at $1 an ounce instead of $1.36 an ounce, the world price. England's obligations to India were paid in silver taken from the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. REED. How did we get in debt by the transaction of taking the dollars out of our Treasury and melting them down?

Mr. SMOOT. For every ounce of silver that was taken out of the Treasury of the United States, whether it was in bullion or in silver dollars or half dollars, and melted and sold to England at that time to keep her credit good, the Government of the United States was required, under the law, to purchase an equal amount of American silver that was to be produced thereafter.

Mr. REED. They got the money from England, did they not?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; but it was used in the war, at the time of the war. There is no question but what it was a part of the advance that was made to England.

Mr. REED. Then we did not get the money from England. We took the silver dollars out of our Treasury, we melted them down, we turned the metal over to England to the amount of $170,000,000. I understand the transaction that far; it is very simple. We were to buy, and did buy, an equivalent amount of silver from our miners.

Mr. SMOOT. No; we have not bought all of it yet, but we will, under the law.

Mr. REED. We were to buy it?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; that is right.

Mr. REED. But we have not bought it. England did not pay us $170,000,000 cash to put back into our Treasury, and that is a part of the debt England owes us to-day. Is that the Senator's understanding?

Mr. SMOOT. It would be just the same whether they paid us money for it and then we loaned them the money, as if they were advanced that as part of the loan made to England.

Mr. REED. No; it would not be the same, because if she had paid us $170,000,000 in gold for this silver which we sold to her at 39 cents on the dollar less than the market price, we would have had the gold in our Treasury, and the Treasury would have been whole, anyway. We might thereafter have loaned her an equal sum, but that would be a different transaction. The Treasury in that case would have been whole, and they could have taken the money out of the Treasury and gone and bought the silver; but the Treasury is now without the $170,000,000, and is it proposed now that the Treasury shall raise $170,000,000 by the issuance of interest-bearing securities, and go out in the market and buy $170,000,000 of silver under the Pittman Act?

Mr. SMOOT. No; that is not proposed at all, Mr. President. Under the law, the Government of the United States must purchase that American silver and pay a dollar an ounce for it until it has purchased the same amount of silver which they took out of the Treasury at the time of the passage of the Pittman Act.

Mr. REED. This is what I want to know, if the Senator please, whether we are now proposing to sell interest-bearing securities of the United States, and to employ the money raised in that way to purchase silver, either under this act or under the Pittman Act?

Mr. SMOOT. I can not say what securities of the Government will be sold, but if it is necessary in order to purchase the silver that the Government must sell certificates of any kind, it will have to be done.

Mr. REED. If that is the law, then we must repeal the law, and we might as well insert the repeal right here in this bill, and then we will know that we are not paying interest and going out to buy silver to bank up in the Treasury of the United States, and particularly since silver has fallen. Has it not fallen very greatly in value?

Mr. SMOOT. It has; but there was an agreement made with the silver producers of the country that if they would sell their silver to the Government of the United States for $1 an ounce; and that silver at the time was sold to England for a dollar an ounce, when the market value, for a while at least, was $1.36. The Senator does not now suggest that the Government of the United States should not fulfill the promise they made under that law to the silver producers of the country?

Mr. REED. I, of course, do not want the Government of the United States to break any obligation it has made, but I can not understand this transaction. We agreed with the miners to pay them a dollar an ounce for their silver, but we did not take their silver; we took our own silver, melted down our own dollars, and the miners did not deliver to us any silver at a dollar an ounce.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, yes; they have been delivering certain amounts every year. If they have delivered it, then we have paid for it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Only a part has been delivered. They are delivering it from month to month.

Mr. REED. They are delivering it from time to time?

Mr. SMOOT. Just as fast as they can produce it.

Mr. REED. Was the contract made with them to deliver a certain amount, or was the contract simply that for what they would deliver, they should sell it at a dollar an ounce?

Mr. SMOOT. The contract was that they would deliver to the Treasury of the United States as many ounces of silver at a dollar an ounce as were taken from the Treasury of the United States at that time and sold for a dollar an ounce to England.

The purchases were made by the Government of the United States as low as 56 cents an ounce and sold it at a dollar an ounce. All profit went to the Government, and during the war time, and whatever gains were made were expended then, and all we ask is that the contract made with the producers of silver in the country be carried out. The Senator from Missouri is the last man in the world who would ask the Government of the United States to repudiate its obligations.

Mr. REED. I would not suggest a repudiation of the obligation, but I had not understood from the previous statement of the Senator that it amounted to an obligation.

Mr. SMOOT. It certainly is an obligation.

Mr. REED. It is an obligation that is accruing from month to month, from time to time, as the silver is delivered. We are now to understand that it is proposed to sell war savings certificates to meet in part that obligation instead of meeting it out of the revenues of the country.

Mr. SMOOT. It is not an annual expense of the Government. It is an obligation made just the same as the obligation created by the selling of Liberty bonds or the short-time certificates that were authorized by Congress. It is the same character of obligation. There is no difference at all. We hope to have the short-time certificates paid off in time. There is no doubt about that. This is an advantage to the Government of the United States because the interest upon the savings certificates is less than the interest upon the short-time certificates.

Mr. REED. The Senator said it is an obligation incurred during the war. We incurred many obligations during the war which we have been paying out of the revenues of the Government. We are paying interest right along out of the revenues of the Government, and this is no more an obligation to be postponed and renewed by the Treasury without authority of Congress than any other obligation of the Government. I maintain that the Treasury of the United States has no authority, unless it is found in some particular statute, to refund the obligations of the United States, and yet here is a device which I believe is nothing more nor less than authority to sell a lot of certificates and then the Treasury will take that money and buy this silver from time to time and thus increase the interest-bearing debt of the United States instead of reducing that debt.

The Senator has said we can have plenty of money. Certainly we can if we lay the taxes in this bill. If the Senator's sales tax is adopted it would raise the money.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, no; the sales tax of the Senator from Utah as it is now framed, providing 1 per cent as it now does, would raise only $253,000,000.

Mr. REED. If you put back the excess-profits tax you are taking off you can pay off these obligations and many other obligations. The proposition, as I understand it, is to cut down the bill to a point in the reduction of the taxes that have been so often discussed and need not be referred to again specifically, so that obligations such as we are now discussing, accruing from time to time in the payment for silver—that is, to take the place of the silver taken from the Treasury—may be paid by the issuance of interest-bearing securities and thus increase the interest-bearing debt of the United States.

Now, Mr. President, as far as I am concerned, I am opposed to that proposition. We ought to raise the taxes now when people are able to pay them and from the people who are able to pay them, and we ought to meet such obligations as these and not be issuing a lot more of short-time securities which will come back to plague us. It is a wrong method of conducting the business of the Government.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that the amount that would be paid for any purpose that would in any way, shape, or form increase the obligations of the Government as they exist to-day will appear just as soon as the Treasurer's report is made. I say that the proposition we have before us now is for the purpose of redeeming the savings stamps bearing interest, I think, of 4 per cent as presented for payment, and when they fall due.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. The amendment means——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair must insist that Senators proceed in order. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I have forgotten what interest these savings stamps bear.

Mr. SMOOT. As I remember the law, it was not to exceed 4 per cent. That is as I remember the law.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That interest is not paid until the stamps mature?

Mr. SMOOT. It is paid in this way: If it is a $5 stamp, it is purchased for less than $5. In other words, the interest is figured during the life of the savings stamp and is given to the purchaser at the time he buys the savings stamps. In other words, whatever he gets in the way of interest, at whatever rate it is, he gets at the time of purchase.

Mr. REED. Then how much do we save?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. A war savings stamp with a maturity value of $5 is purchased, I think, for $4.12.

Mr. SMOOT. Every month the value changes.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I mean, if bought originally it was $4.12.

Mr. SMOOT. If bought originally, it would have been about that amount.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. There is 1 cent added every month.

Mr. SMOOT. It is something like that. It was figured out exactly.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. But the Treasury report fails to state what that interest approximates. What I desired to ask the Senator was whether it is not a fact now that the interest on these Treasury certificates is being reduced from time to time and is likely to get below what the savings stamps actually bear?

Mr. SMOOT. No. I will say to the Senator that it will not get that low for a long, long time, not while we serve in this body.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I have here the report of the sale of savings stamps up to October of last year. That sale seems to be going on as it is now at very substantial figures.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield, and if so, to whom?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. I thought the Senator from Nebraska was through.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I was trying to find out the purpose of stimulating the sale of war savings stamps at this time if there is nothing to redeem and if the taxes provide all the necessary revenues of the Government.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say that this is a thrift program. It was begun for the purpose of inducing the American people to learn how to save and place their savings with the Government, where there is no chance of losing the money. As it is generally done, a person, particularly a foreigner who comes into the country, as well as many of our own people, who may have saved $100 or $200 or $1,000, is approached by some speculator who comes along with some rosy statement as to how much he could make if he will only invest his money in some security or in some project owned by him, and every dollar that is invested in it would be lost. This is simply a furtherance of that saving and thrift program.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Let me ask the Senator this question. Is it not a fact that a limit of $1,000 was placed on the purchase of saving stamps for the reason that the interest was a higher rate than the Government was paying on its ordinary borrowings.

Mr. SMOOT. No; I do not think that was the reason.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That is my impression. If that is the case we should be a little careful how we authorize the doubling of that limit.

Mr. SMOOT. No; I will say to the Senator that the real reason why it was limited to a thousand dollars was that if the Government of the United States entered into the savings bank business and receiving deposits and paying the same rate of interest that the savings banks of the country did, and at the time the bill was passed they were only paying 3 per cent in all of the eastern banks, that the savings institutions of the country would not only be crippled, but they would be virtually destroyed. That is why the limit of $1,000 was placed.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think otherwise. I wish the Senator could produce a table showing what is the actual rate of interest on war saving stamps. My impression is that it approximates 5 per cent.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think the purpose of the war savings stamps was to encourage investment in our war securities by those of small earnings or means. It was not intended to appeal to that class expected to invest in Liberty bonds and like war securities. They were intended to appeal to the man of small means who might have small savings and who could readily understand the simple plan upon which these saving stamps were based. In order to appeal to these small investors the rate of interest was made higher than those of Liberty bonds or our other war obligations and the plan was so simple that it required no business experience or investment knowledge to see its advantages.

Mr. SMOOT. The existing law requires that it shall not be more than 4 per cent. The original law allowed 3 per cent on the savings, but during the war time we did change that law and provided that the rate of interest at no time should be more than 4 per cent.

Mr. SIMMONS. But it was adjusted so as to appeal to those of small earnings or capital.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator is correct.

Mr. SIMMONS. For that reason we limited the amount that one person might purchase to a thousand dollars. Of course we would not have limited the sale of these stamps to one person to a thousand dollars unless we were appealing to this class and did not wish investment in these securities who might become purchasers of our war bonds or certificates of indebtedness. It was a scheme to bring out the small holdings of the poorer classes of the country, and for that purpose a special inducement was offered.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. My colleague [Mr. NORRIS] just informs me that the rate of interest on war savings stamps is 4¼ per cent and that it is compounded semiannually, so that makes it better than 4¼ per cent and increases the rate of interest to the point where we have been selling securities since the war.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that with Liberty bonds selling at $88 and $90 it is not a better rate.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. But we have been selling Treasury certificates on that basis since the war, and they are likely to be down there very soon again.

Mr. SMOOT. The junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] may be right about it being 4¼ per cent, but I do not so remember it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That was my impression.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the law requires that it shall be not more than 4 per cent, but I will have it looked up in just a moment.

Mr. SIMMONS. It is probably a little more than 4 per cent, but the interest is compounded, as the Senator from Nebraska has stated, and as the result of that compounding it is equivalent to more than 4 per cent. I am sure the Senator will not controvert the proposition that the rates were made and the conditions were made much more favorable than those of the Liberty bonds or any other Government obligations which we issued during the war. We limited it to a thousand dollars because we did not wish the investor to buy; we did not wish to sell that class of securities to the investor, the man of large means. We wanted him to buy the other bonds at a lower rate of interest.

Now the proposition, as I understand, which is contained in this amendment is an invitation to the man who has an investing capital of $5,000 to put it in war savings stamps instead of investing it in Liberty bonds or in certificates of indebtedness. I somewhat question the policy of that; certainly it is a reversal of the former policy; but, Mr. President, that was not the ground upon which I based my inquiry of the Senator. I will not say opposition, for I am not now exactly occupying the position of opposing the amendment offered by the Senator. The purpose of my inquiry of the Senator was to find out definitely for what reason the Secretary of the Treasury desired to sell these stamps.

I have a suspicion, and that suspicion has grown into conviction as the result of this discussion, that the Secretary of the Treasury is now seeking to secure authority to borrow upon the faith of the Government sufficient money to pay the $170,000,000 that he struck out of his original estimate. It was originally expected and estimated that the $170,000,000 due by the Government—on account of the Pittman coinage act and maturing war-savings stamps—under the law would be presented for redemption during this fiscal year. I understood, and we all understood, if this large sum was to be eliminated from the estimate of the amount of taxes to be imposed by this bill, that these Government obligations would have to be met in some other way and that the only other way would be by borrowing the money. However, I had presumed that the Secretary of the Treasury proposed to borrow the money upon short-time certificates, which short-time certificates would hereafter be paid off when revenues sufficient to meet them accrued to the Treasury. Now, it seems that the Secretary of the Treasury proposes to sell savings stamps and to raise the money to pay these current obligations in that way. I do not know how long the savings stamps will run; I do not know when they will be payable.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator knows that the savings stamps which have already been issued are payable on January 1, 1925.

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes; but I refer to the new savings stamps. When will they be payable, and how shall we pay them? It is generally understood that when we issue certificates of indebtedness they are issued for the purpose of enabling the Treasury to obtain money in order to meet current obligations until the taxes have been paid and a sufficient fund is in the Treasury and that then those certificates are to be paid off and cancelled. Does that condition apply to the war-savings stamps? I do not think it does.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator from North Carolina that the war-savings stamps which have been issued were issued on January 1, 1920, and they mature on January 1, 1925.

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. They were purchased all the way from $4.12 up to $4.23, the difference in price being due to the time at which purchases were made.

Mr. SIMMONS. Let me ask the Senator this question: Does the Senator contend that these war-savings stamps are to be issued in anticipation of revenues to accrue to the Treasury through taxation, or does he understand that, differing from certificates of indebtedness, they will have to be paid not out of taxes but by renewing the obligations of the Government?

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from North Carolina knows very well that the amount of these savings stamps that could be sold would be so small as compared with the obligations which we have got to meet in payment of the short-time certificates that it would be inconsequential.

Mr. SIMMONS. Of course, Mr. President, I understand that, but it would not be so small that it might not be large enough to pay off the $170,000,000.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think that there is any intention on the part of the Treasury of the United States other than simply to begin this thrift program as mapped out not only by the Treasury Department but by the Post Office Department.

Mr. SIMMONS. Does the Senator think that it is to be the inauguration of a permanent policy?

Mr. SMOOT. I think so. I think that this will be a policy which the Government will continue. I think it is a splendid policy, too. Anything that will take the savings of the American people and secure the investment of those savings with the Government at a fair rate of interest it seems to me Congress ought to encourage in every way possible.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have no sort of quarrel with any policy of the Government which is intended to encourage thrift among the people, but I do inveigh against a scheme to postpone the payment of the obligations of the Government which ought to be met from the current revenues of the Government. I inveigh against schemes that are calculated to postpone the payment of obligations that ought to be met from day to day and from year to year and to put them in the form of long-term Government bonds, that will throw that part of the burden of the war that ought to be borne by the present generation, that ought to be borne by the men who profited as the result of the war, upon future generations, who are not in the same sense that we are obligated to the discharge of those obligations—at least who will not, like many of the taxpayers of to-day, have in their pockets large profits which have been made as the result of the war in which these great obligations were incurred.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish to assure the Senator——

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator will pardon me, it is a small amount, it is true, Mr. President, but I am afraid that there is a sentiment in this country looking to the postponement of the payment of that part of our war obligations that ought, I think, to be paid out of current taxes.

That is the only point I wish to make. It is not that I want to antagonize particularly the amendment, but I was afraid the amendment indicated a policy of which I disapprove, and I thought it was well to have some little discussion of it.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I merely wish to say that I have a telephone message from Assistant Secretary Gilbert, of the Treasury Department, in which he states that they do not anticipate selling enough savings stamps to redeem the stamps that fall due on January 1, 1925. If they are successful and sell all they anticipate, they will not sell enough to meet the annual redemptions of savings stamps which are now being presented to the Post Office Department throughout the country, all of them due on January 1, 1925.

Mr. President, I wish to say in relation to the budget in connection with the payment of the debts by the Government that under the budget presented to the Finance Committee we had to provide revenue by this bill, among other things, for an item of $253,000,000, that amount being the sinking fund provided for under existing law. That has to be taken care of; and other obligations as reported by the Secretary of the Treasury bring the amount up to $389,000,000.

We can not pay all of the debt off in five years; but I am in full sympathy with the idea expressed by the Senator from North Carolina that we should not leave all of the obligations of the Government as they exist to-day to be paid by future generations. We ought to pay them off gradually, and that is going to be the policy under existing law.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Utah one further question in regard to the matter we have just disposed of?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. REED. The Senator spoke of a drive to sell war savings stamps. Is it proposed to duplicate the performances of the past and have a lot of paid agents sent out over the country?

Mr. SMOOT. In no way is it proposed to repeat that experience, but the stamps will be sold at the post offices throughout the country. The Post Office Department is going to attend to the whole thing.

Mr. REED. Very well; I am glad to know that.

Mr. SMOOT. There are three small amendments that I desire to offer at this time. On page 179, in line 6, I move to strike out "600" and insert "603."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That appears to be in an amendment of the committee already adopted. Without objection, the vote whereby the committee amendment was adopted will be reconsidered. The Secretary will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah to the amendment of the committee.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. In the committee amendment, on page 179, line 6, it is proposed to strike out "600" and insert "603."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. On page 179, line 11, I move to strike out "600" and insert "603."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On line 11, in the committee amendment already agreed to, strike out the numerals "600" and insert in lieu thereof "603."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the vote whereby the committee amendment was agreed to will be reconsidered. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. On line 24 of the same page I offer the same amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On line 24, in the committee amendment already agreed to, it is proposed to strike out "600" and in lieu thereof to insert "603."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the vote by which the amendment was agreed to will be reconsidered. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. On page 167 I offer the amendment which I send to the desk and ask that it be stated. It is simply an amendment changing the title, because the tax on telegraph and telephone messages is all that is left in the title.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 167 in the committee amendment already agreed to it is proposed to change the title on lines 21 and 22 to read as follows:

Title V. Tax on telegraph and telephone messages.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the vote by which this amendment was agreed to will be reconsidered. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. On page 19, line 22, I move to strike out the words "and capital loss." There is no capital loss involved in that section.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 19, line 22, it is proposed to strike out the words "and capital loss" in the title, in romans, so that the heading will read: "Capital gain."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. On page 20, I move to strike out lines 15 to 17, inclusive.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 20, it is proposed to strike out lines 15 to 17, both inclusive.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. On page 20, line 23, I move to strike out the word "includes," and to insert in lieu thereof the word "means."

Mr. SIMMONS. May I ask the Senator why he is making these changes? Is it because of the amendments adopted?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes. There is no capital loss in this section at all.

Mr. SIMMONS. It is just to meet that amendment?

Mr. SMOOT. Just to meet that amendment; that is all. All three amendments are for the same purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 20, line 23, it is proposed to strike out the word "includes," and to insert in lieu thereof the word "means."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. There is only one other amendment, and that is the insurance amendment, No. 32. I ask now that the Secretary state that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 107, the committee proposes to strike out all of line 13, down to and including line 22, inclusive, and to insert in lieu thereof the following words:

SEC. 246. (a) That, in lieu of the taxes imposed by sections 230 and 1000, there shall be levied, collected, and paid for the calendar year 1922, and for each taxable year thereafter, upon the net income of every insurance company (other than a life or mutual insurance company) a tax as follows:

(1) In the case of such a domestic insurance company the same percentage of its net income as is imposed upon other corporations by section 230;

(2) In the case of such a foreign insurance company the same percentage of its net income from sources within the United States as is imposed upon the net income of other corporations by section 230.

(b) In the case of an insurance company subject to the tax imposed by this section—

(1) The term "gross income" means the combined gross amount, earned during the taxable year, from investment income and from underwriting income as provided in this subdivision, computed on the basis of the underwriting and investment exhibit of the annual statement approved by the National Convention of Insurance Commissioners;

(2) The term "net income" means the gross income as defined in paragraph (1) of this subdivision less the deductions allowed by section 247;

(3) The term "investment income" means the gross amount of income earned during the taxable year from interest, dividends, and rents, computed as follows:

To all interest, dividends, and rents received during the year, add interest, dividends, and rents due and accrued at the end of the taxable year, and deduct all interest, dividends, and rents due and accrued at the end of the preceding year;

(4) The term "underwriting income" means the premiums earned on insurance contracts during the taxable year less losses incurred and expenses incurred;

(5) The term "premiums earned on insurance contracts during the taxable year" means an amount computed as follows:

From the amount of gross premiums written on insurance contracts during the taxable year, deduct return premiums and premiums paid for reinsurance. To the result so obtained add unearned premiums on outstanding business at the end of the preceding taxable year and deduct unearned premiums on outstanding business at the end of the taxable year;

(6) The term "losses incurred" means losses incurred during the taxable year on insurance contracts, computed as follows:

To losses paid during the taxable year, add salvage and reinsurance recoverable outstanding at the end of the preceding taxable year, and deduct salvage and reinsurance recoverable outstanding at the end of the taxable year. To the result so obtained add all unpaid losses outstanding at the end of the taxable year and deduct unpaid losses outstanding at the end of the preceding taxable year.

(7) The term "expenses incurred" means all expenses shown on the annual statement approved by the National Convention of Insurance Commissioners, and shall be computed as follows:

To all expenses paid during the taxable year and expenses unpaid at the end of the taxable year and deduct expenses unpaid at the end of the preceding taxable year. For the purpose of computing the net income subject to the tax imposed by this section there shall be deducted from expenses incurred as defined in this paragraph all expenses incurred which are not allowed as deductions by section 247.

SEC. 247. (a) That in computing the net income of an insurance company subject to the tax imposed by section 246 there shall be allowed as deductions:

(1) All ordinary and necessary expenses incurred, as provided in paragraph (1) of subdivision (a) of section 234;

(2) All interest as provided in paragraph (2) of subdivision (a) of section 234;

(3) Taxes as provided in paragraph (3) of subdivision (a) of section 234;

(4) Losses incurred;

(5) Bad debts in the nature of agency balances and bills receivable ascertained to be worthless and charged off within the taxable year;

(6) The amount received as dividends from corporations as provided in paragraph (6) of subdivision (a) of section 234;

(7) The amount of interest earned during the taxable year which under paragraph (4) of subdivision (b) of section 213 is exempt from taxation under this title, and the amount of interest allowed as a credit under subdivision (a) of section 236;

(8) A reasonable allowance for the exhaustion, wear and tear of property, as provided in paragraph (7) of subdivision (a) of section 234;

(9) In the case of such a domestic insurance company, the net income of which (computed without the benefit of this paragraph) is $25,000 or less, the sum of $2,000.

(b) In the case of a foreign corporation the deductions allowed in this section shall be allowed to the extent provided in subdivision (b) of section 234.

(c) Nothing in this section or in section 246 shall be construed to permit the same item to be twice deducted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SIMMONS. This is all one amendment?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes. I can explain it to the Senator in a very few moments. I will say that the amendment now offered is the same amendment that we were discussing on the floor day before yesterday, and it went over at the request of the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. SIMMONS. It is substantially the same proposition that was contained in the last revenue act as it passed the Senate?

Mr. SMOOT. Substantially the same.

Mr. SIMMONS. But since that time the Senator has made numerous changes, and I want to know the general character of those changes.

Mr. SMOOT. I will tell the Senator what the changes are. The only changes are that we have amended the amendment by making a separate provision for mutual companies. In the past the mutual companies have paid scarcely any tax whatever. In some cases it is so small that it would hardly be denominated a tax. If they are included in this amendment, the tax in some cases would represent an increase of over 400 per cent. The purpose of it is to allow the mutual companies to pay taxes under existing law.

Mr. SIMMONS. You exempt them from this new scheme?

Mr. SMOOT. We exempt them from this new scheme.

Mr. SIMMONS. So as not to overtax them. I agree with the Senator about it.

Mr. SMOOT. That is all there is to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah.

The amendment was agreed to.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 7, line 2, after the figures "245," insert the following:

and paragraph (5) of subdivision (b) of section 246.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is the one we are discussing.

Mr. REED. Is that this long section?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; this is the insurance section. These amendments are simply to perfect the original amendment so as to exclude mutual companies from the tax imposed under this amendment and allow the mutual companies to pay taxes under existing law. That is all there is to the amendment, and that is what they want.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, supplemental to what the Senator from Utah has stated, I desire to inform the Senate that the Finance Committee met on this morning and fully considered these matters, and authorized the Senator from Utah to submit these amendments to the Senate. There was a full meeting of the committee.

Mr. KING. I suppose the Senator means the majority members of the committee.

Mr. PENROSE. No; all were invited, I will say for the consolation of the Senator.

Mr. KING. It does not console me at all.

Mr. PENROSE. We are always illuminated and helped by the presence of the minority, when they come.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I care nothing about the proposition; but if I received an invitation it never got to me personally. I never heard of the meeting until this morning.

Mr. PENROSE. The clerk of the committee was instructed to notify every Senator by telephone and written notice of the meeting this morning. The notices were sent out yesterday afternoon.

Mr. REED. I did not get any.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I do not think we ought to have this useless discussion here. I have not heard anybody opposing the action of the committee this morning, and ask for a vote.

Mr. PENROSE. Let us vote on these amendments.

Mr. ASHURST. Vote!

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 7, line 2, after the figures "245" in the House text and after the bracket, it is proposed to insert:

and paragraph (5) of subdivision (b) of section 246.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 17, line 5, strike out the words "trust under"——

Mr. REED. What amendment is the Secretary now referring to?

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. It is the latter part of amendment 32, on page 8 of the printed pamphlet.

Mr. REED. Very well.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 17, line 5, strike out the words "trust under," and in lieu thereof insert the following:

Trust, and to insurance companies subject to the tax imposed by section 243 or 246, under.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I ask my colleague whether, in the examination of these proposed amendments, it has been accurately determined that no deductions or allowances will be made to insurance companies to which they are not entitled, and that no exemptions or extensions of favors will be granted by this legislation?

Mr. SMOOT. There is no doubt of it; and I want to say to my colleague that when this amendment is agreed to, outside of the mutual companies, every insurance company will pay to the Government of the United States a higher tax than it pays to-day.

Mr. KING. I knew the general purpose, but I was wondering whether they had been sufficiently coordinated with reference to existing law as fully to protect the Government.

Mr. SMOOT. They have; and the amendments that we are passing on now are required because of the fact that we have taken out the mutual companies from the provisions of this amendment. That is all there is to it.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, before this amendment is agreed to, I should like to ask the Senator from Utah how much in premiums this exempts the mutual companies?

Mr. SMOOT. Just what the exemptions are to-day. In fact, if all of the provisions of the amendment are agreed to, the mutual companies will be taxed under the present law. The other companies will be taxed upon their income instead of upon the premiums, as has been done in the past.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah.

The amendment was agreed to.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 83, lines 15 and 16, it is proposed to reconsider the committee amendment already agreed to, and in lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the committee amendment to insert the following:

Determined (except in the case of insurance companies subject to the tax imposed by section 243 or 246).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the vote by which the committee amendment was agreed to will be reconsidered. The question now is upon agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I have informed the senior Senator from Minnesota that I would yield for a moment for the submission to the Senate of a patriotic resolution which he desires to present.

ARMISTICE DAY, 1921, A HOLIDAY.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to report from the Judiciary Committee and ask for the immediate consideration of House joint resolution 215, a joint resolution to declare November 11, 1921, a legal public holiday.

I will state briefly that it is to make Armistice Day this year only a legal holiday. It applies only to this year, and as the time is very short between now and the 11th of November it will be necessary for this to pass the Senate at this time.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to the consideration of the joint resolution, which was read, as follows:

Whereas Armistice Day, November 11, 1921, has been designated as the appropriate time for the ceremonies incident to the burial of the unknown and unidentified American soldier in the Arlington National Cemetery; and

Whereas this unknown soldier represents the manhood of America who gave their lives to defend its integrity, honor, and tranquillity against an enemy; and

Whereas the nations of the earth are on that date joining with the United States in paying respect and homage to this unknown soldier: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the President is hereby authorized to issue a proclamation declaring November 11, 1921, a holiday, as a mark of respect to the memory of those who gave their lives in the late World War, as typified by the unknown and unidentified American soldier who is to be buried in Arlington National Cemetery on that day; and the President is respectfully requested to recommend to the governors of the various States that proclamations be issued by them calling upon their people to pause in their usual pursuits as a mark of respect on this solemn occasion.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OF BILL EXTENDING EMERGENCY TARIFF ACT.

Mr. McLEAN. I submit an amendment intended to be proposed by me to House bill 8643, to extend the tariff act approved May 27, 1921.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment will be received, printed, and lie on the table.

Mr. PENROSE. The amendment ought to go to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. McLEAN. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so referred.

REINTERMENT OF AMERICAN SOLDIER DEAD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Acting Quartermaster General of the Army, transmitting a list of American soldier dead to be reinterred in the Arlington National Cemetery November 3, 1921, at 2.30 p. m., which was ordered to lie on the table for the information of Senators.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. NEWBERRY presented resolutions adopted by the board of directors of the Manistee (Mich.) Board of Commerce and the Saginaw (Mich.) Rotary Club, favoring inclusion in the permanent tariff bill for a limited period of a selected embargo against importation of synthetic organic chemicals, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a memorial of the Mason County (Mich.) Bankers' Club, remonstrating against the imposition of a tax on bank checks and drafts, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. McLEAN presented a petition of sundry members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, of Sterling, Conn., praying for the enactment of the so-called Willis-Campbell antibeer bill, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented 42 memorials of sundry citizens of New Haven, Bridgeport, New Britain, Norwich, Ansonia, and West Haven, all in the State of Connecticut, remonstrating against the enactment of the so-called Penrose and Fordney bills providing for refunding the debts of our allies in the World War, and also praying for the enactment of legislation granting a bonus to veterans of the World War, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. HARRIS presented a communication from A. E. McLean, J. S. Gordy, and W. J. Penn, jr., transmitting resolutions unanimously adopted by a meeting of representative citizens of Albany, Ga., held October 6, 1921, favoring the limitation of armaments, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. CAPPER presented a petition of the Forum Discussion Club, of San Dimas, Calif., praying for the enactment of Senate bill 1435, to control forest devastation, to perpetuate forests in the United States, to raise a revenue from forest products, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION PRESENTED.

Mr. SUTHERLAND, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on the 1st instant they had presented to the President of the United States the enrolled joint resolution (S. J. Res. 114) accepting the invitation of the Republic of Brazil to take part in an international exposition to be held in Rio de Janeiro in 1922.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. NEWBERRY:

A bill (S. 2657) for the relief of Richard Kirchoff (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. McNARY:

A bill (S. 2658) to aid in the construction of the Roosevelt Highway along the Pacific coast of Oregon; to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

By Mr. HARRIS:

A bill (S. 2659) to amend the interstate commerce act; to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

By Mr. MOSES:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 132) to provide for the continuance of certain Government publications; to the Committee on Printing.

CEREMONIES FOR UNKNOWN DEAD IN ROTUNDA OF CAPITOL.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to introduce a concurrent resolution which I send to the desk. May I say that I have consulted with the chairman of the Committee on Finance and assured him that it will take only one minute to dispose of it?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. SIMMONS. What is the request of the Senator?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I ask unanimous consent to introduce a concurrent resolution authorizing the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate and the Sergeant at Arms of the House of Representatives to secure a wreath to be placed upon the casket of the unknown soldier on November 11.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The concurrent resolution will have to go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The concurrent resolution will be received, printed, and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I am directed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate to report favorably the concurrent resolution just introduced by my colleague, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the concurrent resolution, which will be read by the Secretary.

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 14) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate and the Sergeant at Arms of the House of Representatives be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to purchase a floral wreath to be placed upon the caisson bearing the remains of the unknown soldier which are to lie in state in the rotunda of the Capitol of the United States from November 9 to November 11, 1921, the expense of same to be paid in equal proportions from the contingent funds of the Senate and House of Representatives.

TAX REVISION.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8245) to reduce and equalize taxation, to amend and simplify the revenue act of 1918, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the next amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. Page 90, line 13, after the word "contracts" insert a period and the following:

After December 31, 1921, this subdivision shall apply only to mutual insurance companies other than life insurance companies.

The amendment was agreed to.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 90, line 23, after the word "only," insert a period and the following:

This subdivision shall not be in effect after December 31, 1921.

The amendment was agreed to.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 97, line 3, after the period, insert the following sentence:

In the case of domestic insurance companies subject to the tax imposed by section 243 or 246, the term "net income," as used in this subdivision means net income as defined in sections 245 and 246, respectively.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That completes the committee amendments. The bill is as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I send the following amendment to the desk and ask that the Secretary read it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the proposed amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 218, after line 2, insert a new subdivision, to read as follows:

(13) From and after January 1, 1922, every person who is engaged in a trade or business in which he sells or offers for sale at retail firearms, new or secondhand, or shells or cartridges, in any State or in the District of Columbia, shall pay a special tax of $50 a year; and no person shall engage in the sale or offering for sale at retail of any firearms, shells, or cartridges until he has paid this tax for one year in advance; and any person violating this provision shall be fined in any amount from $100 to $1,000.

Every person so engaged in the retail sale of firearms shall keep a record in writing, under regulations provided by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, showing in detail every sale of firearms, giving the description and manufacturer's number of the weapon and the full name and address of the purchaser.

This record shall always be open to inspection by representatives of the Treasury Department or any officer of justice, State or Federal.

Failure to keep such record or to keep it correctly shall subject the offender to a fine of not more than $100 for each offense.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, this amendment is an effort to tax the retail sale of firearms and to require every man engaged in the retail sale of firearms to keep a record of the parties to whom sold and their addresses. It levies a tax of $50 a year on every such individual and requires him to pay, in addition to that, a tax of 3 per cent on the sale price of firearms sold. It requires him also to keep that record in order that the Government representatives can check up on the sale of his firearms, and in order, incidentally, that officers of justice may, upon occasion, find the names and the addresses of those who have purchased firearms.

This is the outgrowth of the discussion on the floor of the Senate yesterday regarding the very injurious and widespread sale of firearms by too irresponsible people, generally occurring in the worst neighborhoods of our cities.

Mr. McCORMICK. Would this tax apply to shotguns?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It would.

Mr. McCORMICK. A tax of $50 a year?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes. Of course, any merchant selling shotguns would be a man who could easily afford to pay that tax on the sale. It must apply to everybody selling arms. It is designed, I will say to the Senator from Illinois, particularly to reach those irresponsible small dealers in all our large cities who offer revolvers and other firearms for sale at small prices, often secondhand weapons, exhibited in their windows.

Mr. McCORMICK. The tax of $50 a year is on the dealer?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. On the dealer. My feeling is that if we can compel every man who sells such firearms to pay a tax to the Government there will be a tendency to reduce the number; and, as I was saying, anyone need but go into any city and into the worst neighborhoods of the city, and he will see there exposed in the windows secondhand revolvers offered for sale, often at trifling amounts, and the character of customers that that man has is enough to arouse the anxieties of any law-abiding citizen. Any tough, any half-witted criminal can go into such a place and buy a firearm and go out and shoot a citizen within 15 minutes, and I think there ought to be some attempt made by the National Government to bring the sale of firearms at retail under some sort of regulation. It may be said that this is a State matter, and many States have endeavored to deal with it; but the trouble is that a State can only regulate or control the sale within its own borders. As it is now, an evil-disposed person can buy a firearm in one town, cross a river or cross a State boundary and be a dangerous factor in another community.

So I think it requires the national authority to require these people who sell firearms to pay a tax, just as we formerly required liquor dealers who sold liquor to pay a tax, and just as we still require cigar dealers and tobacco dealers to pay a tax to the Government of the United States.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. It strikes me that the Senator's argument is good in so far as pistols and revolvers are concerned, but that it does not hold good so far as shotguns and rifles, used for hunting, are concerned. They are a very different kind of firearm, and as a rule shotguns and rifles are used for perfectly lawful purposes, while revolvers are not. Will not the Senator limit his amendment to revolvers and pistols and small arms?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That thought occurred to me, but when I reflected that in all towns I am familiar with shotguns and rifles are sold in large stores, where the $50 tax is an insignificant matter. I did not think it would be oppressive on such a store to pay $50 a year as a tax, and I believe such stores would be benefited by eliminating the sale of second-hand weapons by irresponsible people.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, there is very much merit in the Senator's proposition; but let me ask the Senator if this is not in line with the proposition to have the Federal Government, under the guise of taxation, put its hand upon the business activities of the people, and control, by Federal officials and Federal functionaries, the business which ought to be controlled, if it is controlled at all, by the States or the municipalities? Is it not, under the guise of taxation, a scheme to further subject the State governments and the municipal governments to the omnipotent hand of the Federal Government?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think there might be some color of truth in what the Senator says, were it not for the fact that many States have already sought to reach this evil in this way, and all the States would be benefited by this action. The action by an individual State is utterly valueless if a neighboring State fails to take corresponding action.

Mr. McKELLAR. I want to call the Senate's attention to the argument made by the distinguished Senator from Utah just a moment ago. He talked about its being a vicious practice to interfere with the affairs of the States in this way. I call attention to the fact that yesterday, when we were considering the question of a tax on hotels, the Senator himself invaded his own doctrine of State rights by voting to place a tax on hotels.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I sympathize with what the Senator from Utah has said, and I would not be a party to such an effort if it were not for the fact that this is really in aid of State efforts, rather than in antagonism of them. It is not usurping any function of the State, but it is in aid of what a good many States have already done.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I am in sympathy with the Senator's amendment, but I propose this for his consideration, Whether he should not insert on line 6 of his amendment the word "county." For instance it reads now—

> This record shall always be open to inspection by representatives of the Treasury Department or by any officer of justice, State or Federal.

It occurs to me that especially in our Western States the sheriff and the attorney of a county are the peace officers, the officers of justice, and if they were required to call upon the State officials to get the evidence or inspect these records they would be making continual trips to the capital, whereas I think it would promote the enforcement of the law if the officers of the county, the sheriff and the other officers of justice, would have the right to inspect this record, so that when a crime was committed and the question was asked, "Where did the defendant secure the pistol?" an inspection could be made by the sheriff. I hope the Senator will perfect his amendment, as he has a right to do, by inserting the word "county."

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I will ask the Secretary to insert the word "county" in connection with the State and Federal authorities. I am sure there is not a Senator here who has not been shocked—as we all have been shocked—during the last two or three years by the prevalence of crimes of violence. There has been in this city a number of murders committed during the last 12 months, as in my own city there have been. There is not a city in the land or a town of any size that has not been shocked by recurring crimes of irresponsible individuals who are carrying revolvers. I think some step in the direction of regulating the sale of revolvers or at least creating a record to show who have purchased revolvers ought to be made. It will yield a small tax.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I am wondering why the Senator did not include the manufacturers and wholesale dealers in firearms. The retailers could not sell them unless they got them from the wholesalers or manufacturers.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The manufacturer is already taxed in another paragraph. I am not proposing this altogether for the purpose of antagonizing the legitimate sale of firearms. It is the retail dealer, the irresponsible retail dealer, who will sell to any blackleg or thug who comes to his place, who will sell him a revolver for two or three dollars. Those are the people who ought to be reached and put under some sort of surveillance. They should be required to keep a record of sales.

Mr. McCUMBER. I wish to ask the Senator if nearly every State has not already such a regulation as he speaks of?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. No; I think many States have not. I know a few States have, and to those States this will only be supplemental. It will really aid them; but those States that have it are suffering because neighboring States have failed to make any provision.

Mr. McCUMBER. Where a State, for instance, has one law on the subject and the Government would make a different law and regulation on the same subject, can not the Senator see that there is great danger of conflict? If at all, it would seem to me that his amendment should only apply to the District of Columbia, if they have not already a law in the District, or such States as have no law upon the subject.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. No; I think if the Senator reflects he will realize that this is merely cumulative. Where any State has already provided the tax this would add to it; it would be another tax. Where any State has a regulation as to keeping a record this would simply require another record. I can not see any evil to come out of it.

Mr. McCUMBER. The main evil that I see in it is that already mentioned by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING]. It seems to invade to some extent the province of the States. In addition to that, however, I think the tax is too heavy. Every little hardware store in the little towns in my State carries firearms, and I think under the laws of the State they have to make a record if any firearm is sold to any person. But it certainly would be a hardship on the little country hardware store, that does not have $5,000 worth of business a year, to compel it to pay $50 where it may not sell $50 worth of revolvers or guns in the whole year. I think the amendment is really not for the purpose of taxation or for the purpose of revenue but rather for the purpose of regulation, and that $5 would be better than $50.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. If the Senator thinks $50 is excessive, I am willing to make it $25.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think even $25 is excessive on the little country stores.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I am a little disturbed over the expense this kind of proposition is going to incur. I am wondering if even $50 would pay the expense of the Government in enforcing the law.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I will say in answer to the Senator from Michigan that the Government is enforcing the law on tobacco dealers all over the country, and formerly enforced it on liquor dealers. The same representatives of the Internal-Revenue Department who do one could do the other. I think that is the answer to that proposition.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President, it seems to me that the Senator's tax will be prohibitive. In a great many cases we know that most of the country stores keep cartridges to accommodate boys in the community at this time of the year. In a good many places I imagine the total sales of those cartridges would not amount to $25 a year, and it is a great accommodation to those boys. While I fully sympathize with the purpose of the Senator, it seems to me that he has his license fee altogether too high, because I know that a great many small stores might not sell $10 worth of stuff in a year.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think the answer to that is that if they sell only $10 worth, it is an indication that there is a very small demand and very few people would be inconvenienced.

Mr. McLEAN. But it is a very great accommodation to the boys who live in the neighborhood. They might be 50 miles from a town where they could get what they want.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, would not the Senator be content to make the tax a percentage on the amount of sales and omit the tax on the dealer? That would accomplish the purpose, it seems to me. He could have his regulatory provision about keeping the records just the same. The big dealer in New York may sell hundreds of thousands of dollars of these sporting goods, while the little country dealer may, as the Senator has said, sell only $10 worth a year. Why not make it a percentage on the amount of the sales or the value of the sales?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think there ought to be a tax on the concern for doing the business. It is a fact that while I propose $50 in this case, we have levied many $50 taxes in the bill.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. This is not a situation where no other business is conducted in the same store, but a country store or notion store deals in a thousand or more articles. This may be only one, and why make him register as a dealer in firearms when he carries in stock only half a dozen pistols?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think that is for safety. I am thinking of the big cities with these little stores generally located in the toughest neighborhood of the city, places where the Senator from Connecticut rarely goes. I have often, as a matter of interest, when I have been in a strange town, walked into these very neighborhoods and seen these deadly weapons exposed for sale. Nearly every time we hear of a murder it is committed by a man who has bought his weapon in such a place. These places ought to be registered and there ought to be a record of them.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not object to the record. It is the tax on the dealer to which I object.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think the Senator will agree with me that most of these dealers are perfectly able to pay the tax and are the very class of people from whom we ought to collect the tax.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Then put a tax on the value of the sales. The big dealer in the city, about whom the Senator has spoken, and whom he wants to check and make keep a record, could be made to keep a record and pay in proportion to the amount of sales that he made; and the Senator would not hurt the small dealer in the country town who is not exclusively a dealer in arms, but merely a country storekeeper.

Mr. McLEAN. It seems to me anyone who wants to get a murderous weapon with felonious intent will not be deterred by this tax. I think the Senator's purpose is to secure regulation so that the person who gets the weapon can be identified and the sale can be restricted. With that I concur, but it seems to me a very small tax on the article itself with the other requirements will serve every purpose the Senator seeks. I do not like to single out a legitimate business and impose a tax that will be onerous.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. We have taxed legitimate business all the way through the bill in this very chapter.

Mr. McLEAN. I know that.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. We have levied $50 taxes on many different businesses.

Mr. McLEAN. But we do not desire to add to them. We have too many now.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do not think it is a hardship to make it $50, but if the committee would be willing to accept a $20 tax I will do anything to get it started. I believe if it can be once tried it will be found to be a very desirable move.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I consider the principle unalterably vicious to make the revenue bill a vehicle through which to regulate the morals of the community. It should be confined to its legitimate purposes, the raising of revenue in the least oppressive way to the community that can be devised, and not to prohibit firearms in one community as against another community which approves of the use of firearms, or even child labor laws or other enactments which are often saddled on revenue bills.

I shall always strenuously endeavor to confine such bills to their legitimate purpose, the raising of revenue for the Government. If the Senator objects to citizens carrying firearms or having them in their residences or in their automobiles for protection at night, it seems to me a separate measure would be very desirable and it would receive careful consideration. For myself, I like to have a gun around if I am in a dangerous neighborhood. Others may differ.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I have not said that I objected to a citizen having a gun or weapon in his home, or even in his automobile, or even in his pocket. I am not seeking to regulate that. What I am seeking to do is to levy a tax upon these irresponsible dealers who expose for sale in the worst parts of our cities these cheap firearms, which are absolutely a temptation to the criminal and vicious class as they are exposed to sale. What I propose is nothing more than a tax similar to other taxes that have been imposed in the bill, and that have been imposed heretofore by the Congress on various other occupations.

But if the Senator from Connecticut and the Senator from Michigan think the tax is excessive, as the Senator from North Dakota expressed it, I will reduce it to $20 and leave it to the committee when the matter gets into conference to say whether they find it necessary to make a further reduction.

Mr. McCUMBER. Suppose there is a little place that has not a population of 20 heads of families, and yet there is a little country hardware store which carries two or three revolvers, and perhaps sells two a year. Would the Senator tax that dealer $20 for selling those revolvers? There are any quantity of those little hardware stores all over the country that sell these things. I certainly would not be in favor of going over $5, because the real purpose is not to get revenue. The real purpose is to regulate the sale and keep tab on all who purchase revolvers. I should not seriously object if the proposed tax were $2.50 to $5, but if it is anything above that I think it is too heavy for regulatory purposes.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. In the hope of getting support I will ask to perfect my amendment by reducing the annual tax to $20. That is less than half the amount of many of the taxes the bill already imposes on such concerns as shooting galleries and other places. I can not consider that it is excessive.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska as modified.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. DIAL. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 37, after line 3, it is proposed to insert a new paragraph, to read as follows:

(9) The rental value of a dwelling house and appurtenances thereof furnished to a minister of the gospel as part of his compensation.

Mr. PENROSE. I will accept that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OVERMAN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 193, line 15, after the word "municipality," it is proposed to insert the following:

Or of maintaining a cooperative or community center moving-picture theater.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think the committee will accept that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. PENROSE. I think it would be well if the Senator from North Carolina would enlighten the Senate as to just what is meant by the amendment.

Mr. OVERMAN. In the farm life schools in the country outside of municipalities there have been established by the farmers certain community centers, where they have little moving-picture shows. I know of one instance where a man out in the country has turned his cow barn into a moving-picture theater, where he gathers the farmers and the farmers' children once a week to witness these little shows. The amendment proposes to give the same privilege to such community centers as is given to municipalities. I think the Senator from Pennsylvania will agree to that. There can be no objection to it.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I have no objection to the fundamental principle involved in the amendment. However, I think the amendment is very widely drawn.

Mr. OVERMAN. The amendment was drawn by the expert of the committee, Dr. Adams, and it is all right.

Mr. PENROSE. I think the experts should have had other experts to watch them in this particular instance. We perhaps can perfect the amendment in conference and see that the cow barn is properly safeguarded.

Mr. OVERMAN. The shows are not only given in the cow barns, but in farm-life schools and night schools, where the farm children are gathered in.

Mr. PENROSE. I will accept the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from Indiana.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 32, line 22, after the words "District of Columbia," it is proposed to insert:

Where the compensation is paid by the United States.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, the object of the amendment is simply to put local officers in Hawaii on equal terms with corresponding local officers in the States and municipalities in the United States. Under the pending bill such local officers in Hawaii would be taxed, whereas the corresponding officers in the States are not taxed and those local officers in Hawaii would be called upon to pay a tax that is imposed upon no one else. The amendment affects the school-teachers, the provincial officers of the Territory, who are paid out of Territorial funds, and of course pay their Territorial taxes. The provision of the bill as at present framed would compel them to pay a tax from which, as I have said, State and municipal officers in the United States are relieved. It was not the intention of the committee, I am sure, that that should be done.

The amount involved is very small.

Mr. POMERENE. Do I understand that if this amendment be adopted the appointees of the President who are serving in Hawaii would not be subject to the income tax?

Mr. NEW. No; not at all; but the officials to whom I refer are not appointees of the President.

Mr. POMERENE. Some of them are.

Mr. NEW. The amendment does not affect such officials.

Mr. POMERENE. May I ask that the amendment be again stated?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The Assistant Secretary again read the amendment.

Mr. NEW. Where their salaries are paid by the United States these officials would be subject to a tax. The insertion of the words proposed by the amendment would have the effect simply of relieving from taxation purely local and provincial officers.

Mr. KING. Let me inquire of the Senator from Indiana, if I may, whether he understands that all Federal officials under existing law are exempt from the payment of income taxes?

Mr. NEW. Here in this country?

Mr. KING. All Federal officials.

Mr. NEW. No; but these are not Federal officials. Those covered by the amendment are the local officers over there; they are school-teachers and trustees and mayors of the towns; they are not Federal officers at all, excepting that they are serving in Hawaii under a Territorial form of government.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NEW. Certainly.

Mr. POMERENE. As I recall, the President of the United States sends in the nominations of judges for Hawaii; he also appoints the United States attorney and, I think, the governor. Under the amendment proposed by the Senator from Indiana would those officers be exempt from taxation?

Mr. NEW. No; they would not be. I am not seeking to relieve them, but only the purely local officers.

Mr. POMERENE. I wanted to make sure that there was no discrimination in favor of certain United States officers over there as against those occupying similar positions in the United States.

Mr. NEW. No; that is neither the purpose nor the effect of the amendment.

Mr. WARREN. It is designed to avoid discrimination.

Mr. NEW. Exactly. As the Senator from Wyoming says, the amendment is intended to avoid a discrimination which now exists. It simply puts the local officers in Hawaii on an equal footing with corresponding officers in the various States of the Union.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator if it is not a fact that the only reason why we do not tax officials of the States is because we have not the authority under the Constitution?

Mr. NEW. I presume that is so.

Mr. KING. We may not tax the officials of sovereign States, because under the power of taxation we might destroy the efficiency of and, indeed, the State government itself. A Territory is not in the same category as a State, and because we do not tax State officials, because we have not the authority so to do, it does not follow, it seems to me, logically, that we may not tax Territorial officials.

Mr. WARREN. Why should local officials who live in a Territory which would only be too glad to come into the Union as a State be penalized while they are there helping to upbuild the country? It seems to me that such officials should be treated as fairly as the officials of the States.

Mr. KING. But they live in a Territory and are subject to taxation.

Mr. NEW. And they are taxed.

Mr. KING. And they ought to be taxed, so far as I can see.

Mr. NEW. Certainly they ought to be taxed, and they are taxed locally.

Mr. KING. I sympathize very much with the position taken by the Senator; but it seems to me that the argument is not sound that because we do not tax State officials—and we do not do it because we have not the authority—therefore we ought not to tax the officials of the Territories where we do have the authority to impose taxes. It does not seem to me that because our hands are tied with respect to the principle of taxation in the States we may not exercise the power in the Territories, where we have the undoubted authority.

Mr. NEW. To tax them simply imposes upon them a burden from which, whatever the reason may be, similar officials in the States are entirely exempt.

Mr. KING. The Senator, if he will pardon me, knows that individuals who are employed by private concerns in the United States, such as bookkeepers or private teachers or what not, are taxed. They have to pay their income taxes.

Mr. NEW. So do such persons in Hawaii. The amendment has no effect upon anybody except the particular local officers that I have just described. It is intended to put them on an equal footing with those who hold corresponding offices in the States. If that is not done, the local officers over there will have to pay a tax from which local officers in the States of the Union are exempt. That is the whole story.

Mr. KING. Federal officers pay taxes, and a Territory is a part of the Federal Government; it is not a State; it is not a sovereignty; it breathes because of the power given to it to breathe under organic acts or some charter from the Federal Government. When a Territory is emancipated from its tutelage and becomes a State, then it may claim the constitutional privilege which State officials now claim; but in principle, Mr. President, I can see no reason why the officials of Territories should not be taxed the same as other officials of the Federal Government.

Mr. NEW. I think the Senate understands what the amendment is designed to accomplish, and I ask for a vote upon it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I have not understood yet whom the Senator proposes to exempt from taxation.

Mr. NEW. I have said that the amendment merely applies to local officers of the Hawaiian Islands, such as school-teachers, the mayors of towns, and other purely local officers. They are not paid by the Federal Government; they are paid by the Territorial government.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Let me ask the Senator why do we not exempt school-teachers in Ohio or school-teachers in Indiana?

Mr. NEW. School-teachers are taxed in Hawaii under the local laws.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Are not school-teachers taxed in Indiana?

Mr. NEW. No; not by the Federal Government on the salaries they draw from the State.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Certainly they are.

Mr. NEW. Not at all.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. They are taxed on their incomes.

Mr. NEW. Not at all. They are taxed in Ohio under the State law, and they are taxed in Indiana and Nebraska under the State law, but they are not taxed under the Federal law, as they are officers of the State. All I want is to give the corresponding local officers in Hawaii the same privileges that are extended to similar officers in the States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Indiana. [Putting the question.] By the sound the noes seem to have it.

Mr. NEW. I ask for a division.

On a division, the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment which I offer.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. SIMMONS. I desire to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the amendment. I think he will have no objection to it.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 40, in section 214, it is proposed to add a separate paragraph immediately following paragraph No. 6, so that it would follow line 18, to read as follows:

In case of losses arising from destruction of or damage to property where the property so destroyed or damaged was acquired before March 1, 1913, the deduction shall be computed upon the basis of its fair market price or value as of March 1, 1913.

Mr. PENROSE. I will accept that amendment, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I have another amendment of the same kind to apply to corporations. This applies only to individuals. I now offer the same amendment to another provision so as to apply it to corporations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 86, after line 11, it is proposed to insert:

In case of losses arising from destruction of or damage to property where the property so destroyed or damaged was acquired before March 1, 1913, the deduction shall be computed upon the basis of its fair market price or value as of March 1, 1913.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, last night, during the debate upon the proposed hotel tax, the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] appended to his argument a table of added costs under present conditions of conducting a hotel. It was under more or less criticism at the time, because the additional rates charged at this time were not furnished to the Senate. In going over my correspondence I find a very complete table which covers the additional costs at the present time of administering a hotel, together with the average increase in prices, representing a very large hotel corporation. I think, in fairness to the hotel business—which is one of the largest industries in the country—the letter containing these figures should be inserted in the RECORD.

I may say that I think the debate last night was perhaps a trifle severe on the hotel profession in its entirety. We all admit that there are men in every line of business who perhaps are profiteers; but, as an industry, the hotel profession is certainly a thoroughly recognized one, and it seems to me that in the interest of justice and fairness this letter, giving the costs on one side and the charges on the other, should be inserted in the RECORD.

I ask unanimous consent that that be done.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator by whom these figures have been prepared?

Mr. EDGE. They have been prepared by the Marlborough-Blenheim Hotel Co., of Atlantic City, N. J., one of the largest resort hotels in the United States.

Mr. KING. Of course the Senator knows that the hotel keepers of Atlantic City have carried on a very extensive propaganda against any taxation by the Federal Government. May I inquire of the Senator whether these figures show the dividends that have been paid by the hotel companies during the past three years?

Mr. EDGE. I shall be glad to have the letter read if it will not take too much of the time of the Senate.

Mr. KING. No; I do not ask that.

Mr. EDGE. This letter, in addition to what I have stated on the floor, discusses the lack of excess profits.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CAPPER in the chair). Is there objection to printing the letter in the RECORD? The Chair hears none.

The letter is as follows:

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., September 26, 1921.

Hon. WALTER E. EDGE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: The figure which I mentioned to you yesterday as representing what our tax would be if section 907 became part of the new tax law was not exactly correct, inasmuch as I had interpreted the meaning of the second paragraph that the tax should be applied to the full American-plan rate where such room if rented on European plan would be more than $5 per day or more than $8 per day. Under the interpretation which you gave me yesterday that the American-plan guest in a room which would be on the European plan more than $5 per day, or for two more than $8 per day, should be calculated at 10 per cent of the European rate for that room, I find that our tax for to-day, where the house count is 60 per cent of our capacity count, would be $289.10. Therefore, as our house count seems to average 75 per cent capacity for the year, our average daily tax would be $361.50, or about $132,000 per year.

This hotel, as you perfectly well know, is conservative, but offers as much genuine comfort and luxury without any abnormal frills as is required by people who live well at home; and after 20 years of most painstaking, careful management we have been able to build up a good business, which is profitable but, as anyone can see by our excess-profits taxes, has not borne any abnormal profits. And yet by this amendment if we played the game as is the spirit laid down in the amendment the profit in this business would not be worth the exertion.

There are many cities where large hotels exist, and in some cases in this city, where the capital invested has run into such enormous figures that they have been forced to a rate in excess of the $5 per day basis. Of course, in places where the public are required to go by their needs of travel those hotels in other cities may not necessarily suffer from increasing their present rates, which this amendment will require, but in Atlantic City, where people are not required to come, the forcing of the hotel rates upward, which is the positive effect that this amendment will have, will simply keep people away from this resort and work an untold hardship, causing its downfall in the end. I do not believe that any Senator who has interested himself in this tax bill wishes to bring about any such result.

I told you yesterday that I would offer you some comparison as to our own business here, which I will do in as short and comprehensive way as possible, as follows:

For instance, compare our cost prices in a few items with the cost prices of 1914 and we find that foodstuffs have increased, 1920 over 1914, a little over 100 per cent. Help for the same period increased 104 per cent, coal increased 196 per cent, and general operating expenses increased 148 per cent. Our rates which we charged guests increased, 1920 over 1914, 54 per cent on the American plan and 33 per cent on the European plan. You will note by the above that everything that went into the operation of our plant increased from 100 to 196 per cent between 1914 and 1920, and yet we have not advanced our rates in anything like the same ratio.

Taking another comparison between the years 1920 (first eight months) and the first eight months in 1921 (as far as our accounts have gone) we find foodstuffs have decreased in price in 1921, 23 per cent. Help has increased in 1921 over 1920 three-tenths of 1 per cent; general expenses of operation for the same period have increased 24 per cent. Please note the one item of reduction in costs to us. Our rates which we are charging on our advertised reduced schedule at this time are for our highest priced rooms reduced 12 per cent on the American plan and 16⅔ per cent on the European plan. On medium priced rooms the reduction is 6¼ per cent on the American plan and 11 per cent on the European plan. On our lowest priced rooms the reduction is 14 per cent on the American plan and 14 per cent on the European plan.

Now, then, in the face of the abnormal increase of all of our costs over our increase in our rates during the war period of 1914 to 1920, and the decrease in cost up to this time of the one item of 23 per cent in food, how could we possibly make a greater reduction in our rates than we have?

It simply resolves itself into a plain condition. If this amendment is passed, the hotels are absolutely forced to raise their rates. The statistics we have given you above apply to this house which has been running consecutively for 20 years under a very moderate capital investment and ownership and management where every member of our company puts his best effort into the work. We believe we operate as economically or more economically than most high-class hotels can. We know that hotels of this class, built in the last five years, are forced to charge higher rates than we do, and we know from personal inquiry that those hotels who are seriously affected by this tax will simply raise their rates to meet it.

* * * * * * *

I hope you will continue to use your very powerful efforts to check this legislation.

Yours, very truly, ALLEN K. WHITE,
Vice President.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 49, in line 10, it is proposed to strike out the word "eighteen," and in lieu thereof to insert the word "twenty-one," so that, if amended, the paragraph will read:

(d) Four hundred dollars for each person (other than husband or wife) dependent upon and receiving his chief support from the taxpayer if such dependent person is under 21 years of age or is incapable of self-support because mentally or physically defective.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, my amendment speaks for itself. The purpose in offering it is so that under this exemption of $400 on account of minor children receiving the principal part of their support from their parents, the exemption shall be $400 up to the age of 21 years instead of only up to the age of 18.

Mr. President, I submit that the average child at 18, 19, or 20 years of age, if being given his principal support by his parents, is probably a greater expense at that age than at a younger age, because it is at that time that the parents are putting him through college. I do not quite understand why the age was arbitrarily fixed at 18 years. If it was upon the theory that the boys and girls of the country should be required to get out and get to work when they are 18 years of age, that is a mistaken idea as to the actual experience of the average family that is trying to give its children a collegiate education.

If the boy or the girl goes out to earn his or her livelihood at 18 or 19 years of age, this exemption will not apply. It applies only where the parents are contributing the principal part of the support to the minor. I think we should raise the age limit to 21 years, because, if we do not, with the people of moderate means or who are struggling to educate their children and to give them a collegiate education you cut off and eliminate the exemption at the very time they are under the greatest strain to furnish the money for the purpose of educating those children. Very few persons go into college before they reach their eighteenth birthday. In the case of a person of ample means, where the expense of a collegiate education in no wise taxes the family to send their children to college, it is not a matter of any concern. It is the family that is struggling to educate a boy or a girl, and to give them a collegiate education, that this exemption will benefit to some extent.

I submit that we should change the age limit from 18 to 21, and I propose the amendment in the hope that we may accomplish that object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Borah	Gooding	McKinley	Smoot
Brandegee	Hale	McLean	Spencer
Broussard	Harris	McNary	Stanley
Bursum	Heflin	Nelson	Sterling

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-two Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I am going to occupy the time of the Senate for a very few minutes in expressing some views I have in reference to the pending bill and what has been done in reference to it. I shall occupy but a very few minutes.

Both of the great political parties in the presidential campaign of 1920 promised the people that if intrusted with power they would revise the tax law to the end that it would be simpler and reduce taxation. Certain specified taxes were to be abolished, principally the so-called " excess-profits " tax. At least two Democratic Secretaries of the Treasury had recommended to Congress that such tax should be abolished. The Republican Party was specific in its platform on this subject. Its candidate for President on several occasions advocated the abolition of the excess-profits tax, and a tremendous majority of the people elected him President on the platform containing the provision I have mentioned, knowing that he was in accord with it.

The Republican platform also pledged the Republican Party to a reduction of Government expenses to the actual needs of Government economically administered. I shall discuss this pledge hereafter.

Platform pledges are always more easily made than performed. But there was no division of sentiment as to the needs of economy and taxation reforms. The country was suffering from the disturbed conditions of the greatest war of history. It was in that war 18 months, and yet many of its costs were more than those of the individual allies during their four years of warfare. Due to the delays in preparation for war and to the tremendous waste and inefficiency, and worse, our expenditures mounted into the billions. Our obligations and liabilities were not at all understood at the time of the national conventions. We knew they were appalling, but the full extent of the liabilities which the new administration was to inherit from the old was not known. Indeed, they are not even yet fully understood. We knew that hundreds of millions of dollars had been expended in the Airplane Service, from which but little benefit had been derived. We believed that of the billions that had been voted to the Emergency Fleet Corporation and the Shipping Board a large portion had been worse than wasted, but we had not a faint idea of the complications of this branch of the service and the enormous extra costs which the settlement of this matter would require if from the flotsam and jetsam an American merchant marine is to be secured. We were told in March, 1919, when the railroads were turned back to their owners, that the Government had run behind only $300,000,000 during the period of its operation of them. We afterwards learned that this deficit would exceed a billion dollars, and the end is not yet. These are but samples of the burdens which have been placed upon this Congress.

The actual conditions of to-day are not the theoretical conditions of 1920. The Congress, however, is confronted with the stupendous duty of raising money through taxes, at a time not only of national depression but of world depression amounting in many countries to national bankruptcy, sufficient to pay our inherited obligations and to meet the expenses of government. It will be admitted by every honest man that these obligations were not the creation of the present administration. They are, however, ours now to meet, and the country naturally expects that the party which has met several similar situations in the past following a Democratic administration, but none so bad and so complicated as the present one, will do all that can be done through legislation to bring order out of chaos and restore normal conditions of prosperity in the United States.

We are now considering the tax bill. We have had it before the Senate for more than a month. This should be a nonpartisan measure. The best and most patriotic efforts of every Senator should be put forth to this end, but due to the fact that a few Senators have evidently felt that partisanship was a better evidence of statesmanship than patriotic endeavor to secure a law calculated to meet the fiscal needs of a country with closed factories, idle millions, and depressed industry generally, our duties have been made more difficult. Two-thirds of the time of the Senate has been used by a few Senators who have iterated and reiterated their political speeches, not with the hope even of making the legislation better, but for the purpose, sometimes frankly admitted, of creating an adverse political sentiment among the people. Facts count for little with these political orators, who evidently believe that they can fool the people again. They must feel that their individual political fortunes at home are in a critical condition and that they are therefore justified in employing any argument, however faulty or void of facts, any device, however detrimental to the country's welfare, to delay or prevent action. No patriotic Senator is influenced by these political speeches. The people know these gentlemen and what they represent. They were sick and tired of the Democratic Party as a party in November, 1920, because of its demonstrated incapacity to conduct the Government along the lines of peace, progress, and prosperity, and at every opportunity since they have expressed most emphatically their continuing disapproval. The people are not going to be deceived now by demagogic appeals to passion and prejudice.

I do not wish my remarks to apply to those Democratic Senators who have been working, as I have been working, to obtain the best possible tax law. What I have said will apply where it belongs and no one will wince unless he is hit.

I complain at the rules of the Senate which will permit a few Senators, at a cost of hundreds of thousands of dollars to the people, to block legislation which must be enacted and at the same time inflict injury to the health and lives of those who want to perform their duty by compelling them to work unusual hours and under unfit conditions. I have introduced an amendment to the rules providing for limited cloture. I believe in free, unlimited debate when it is devoted to the subject and is not a repetition again and again of the same thing. I do not believe that the time will ever come when the salvation of popular government will depend upon the lung power of a few Senators, however gifted. Our elections occur too frequently, the people are too intelligent and too powerful to permit permanent danger to their institutions from the denial to any Senator the right to talk a week or ten days on any subject. My resolution is now before the Committee on Rules and I am demanding as best I can that action be taken upon it, and I shall govern my action according to what the Committee on Rules may do.

But I have digressed from my original plan to discuss the tax problem before us.

Both parties were pledged to repeal the excess-profits tax. All economists agree that except as a war tax it is inimical to business prosperity and beneficial to no one. It is true that the war is over, but the effects and burdens of war are still with us. The needs of the present year are now practically known, and to repeal the excess-profits act for 1921 would be unwise, and I believe that no political platform would now propose such repeal. We must meet conditions as they exist and not as we hoped in 1920 that they would be. The bill does abolish this tax for 1922, and in so abolishing it I am satisfied that we have complied with our pledge to the people.

The highest estimate from excess-profits tax under existing law for 1922 is $450,000,000. It has already dropped from over two billion in 1917 to $750,000,000 this year, and unless business is revived and prosperity restored there will be no excess profits next year, which means greater business depression, more unemployment, and less ability to pay the expenses of government. Senators say that this compliance with a solemn pledge to the people will relieve the rich and the profiteer. I neither hate nor love the rich because of their wealth. "A man's a man for a' that." I am not even moderately rich. I have never tried to amass a fortune. I probably would have failed if I had tried, for I have not the gift for making money. I regard it generally as a gift, the same as I do that of music, or painting, or mathematics, or invention. I have frequently wondered what would have happened to the world if there had been no men of great business genius and courage. I have stumbled unseeing over business opportunities which others have seen and improved, with the result that the world has been made richer and better and happier. Men and women have been given employment, the wheels of industry and commerce have been made to turn; in fact every material thing which we now enjoy has been made possible through business genius. It is true that this very genius or ability has placed its possessor where he should bear the heavier burdens of government. Where the money is, there the Government must go for taxes, and that is where this bill does go. Every man knows, even the demagogue probably knows, that the one great duty of Congress now is to promote a return to national prosperity, under which alone can all of our people be peaceful and happy. Men who never gave another man a day's work, who never contributed a material thing of value to the world, who never made a dollar except upon the misfortunes and troubles of others, are the loudest and most voluble critics of those who develop the resources of the country and furnish opportunity and employment to the people.

It must not be forgotten, either, that when Senators are talking about exempting the rich through a repeal of the excess-profits law they want the people to understand that the very large and rich corporations are the ones relieved. The fact is, however, that the greatest share of excess profits comes from the corporations of small capital to whose affairs a few active, hard-working business men have devoted their undivided time and attention. Their gross income is not large, but its per cent of capital is large. These are the corporations which pay a large part of whatever excess-profits tax is paid, while the United States Steel Corporation, with a large capital, earns less than 8 per cent, and inasmuch as the exemption of corporations is $3,000 plus 8 per cent of the capital no excess profits are assessed, and a repeal of the excess-profits tax would not affect it.

Take the case of corporations of $25,000 capital, where two or three stockholders devote their personal energies to the business, with the result that they earn $25,000 net. That is 100 per cent of their capital. This corporation would be assessed under the existing law about $5,000 as excess profits, while the United States Steel Co., with its billions of earnings, would not pay one cent. No one can detest more than I do the man who took advantage of war conditions to profiteer. His name is legion, and so far as contact with the people is concerned, he is not a corporation. He is a self-righteous business man, who found it easy to mark up the goods on his shelves and sell for what he could get from customers with pockets full of easy money. He is the laboring man who profited by the absence of fellow workmen in the war, the hotel man, the merchant, the baker, the candlestick maker. These were the most offending profiteers, who all along the road from production to consumption took their unrighteous tolls from the public. Of course, these offenders preyed upon each other, and their excuse for extortion was "the other fellow does it." But much of the avails of profiteering has been dissipated and much of it was in hands which could not be reached by the tax gatherer. This tax continued next year would not reach the war profiteer at all, but would be paid by these small corporations, which contribute to the life and support of the people and which are taxed almost to the limit under other provisions of this bill.

I shall have no hesitation in obeying the people's mandate given to me in the election of 1920 and shall vote to repeal the excess-profits tax for 1922.

This repeal does not mean, however, that corporations subject to it under existing law are to be exempt from taxation. The pending bill provides for a 50 per cent increase of the flat corporation tax. Under existing law a large corporation like the United States Steel Co. pays a tax of 10 per cent upon its net earnings. Under the proposed bill it will pay 15 per cent. It would pay no excess-profits tax under existing law. This proposed increase of 50 per cent in the corporation tax will work a hardship upon the small corporation whose net earnings are small, and no one seems to be able to devise a provision which will prevent every case of injustice. I voted for the Walsh amendment, not that I thought it was free from injustice but because in my judgment it somewhat reduced the proposed injustice. Of course, I do not expect that with the varying conditions which surround even the same kind of business that any tax law can be framed that will be exactly fair and equitable at all. The one great fact is, we must have the money if the Government is to function and meet its obligations, and all I can reasonably hope for under the circumstances is an approximation of what is right.

The income tax, in my judgment, is here to stay as a part of our fiscal system. It is based upon the theory which I have mentioned, namely, that the taxes must be paid by those who are able to pay them. It is applied to individuals. The income which comes to the individual, either from dividends on stock in corporations or from other sources, is taxed first by a flat tax of 8 per cent, except that a citizen or resident of the United States is taxed only 4 per cent under the proposed bill on the first $4,000 of his income.

The surtax is a graded tax. The House placed a limit of 32 per cent upon the incomes in 1922 in excess of $66,000 per year. The amendment of the Senate increases that limit to 50 per cent as the maximum on all incomes in excess of $200,000 per annum. This amendment to the existing surtax provision is a general reduction of existing rates, but higher than the House provision. I am satisfied that the needs for revenue at the present time require the increase proposed by the Senate. By this increase and the increased capital-stock tax it has largely been made possible to repeal the tax on freight, express, and transportation, and to abolish most of the so-called nuisance taxes which greatly annoy the people and which are difficult of collection.

The bill as it will finally be enacted will not be approved by anyone in every particular. No tax law was ever enacted which did receive such approval. As I have stated, the differing conditions under which the same kinds of business are conducted make it impossible that a general law will be equitable to all, and yet a general law applicable to specific classes of business is the only law that can be lawfully enacted. Every patriotic Senator recognizes the difficulties surrounding revenue legislation. It would be infinitely easier to assume the rôle of critic and place obstacles in the way as some Senators have done than to assume the responsibility of honestly trying at least to obtain a law which would be approximately right.

I have stated that pledges were made to the people to the effect that their tax law would be simplified. That the existing statute is cumbersome and complicated every man who has had anything to do with making tax returns readily understands, and it does not seem to me that the pending measure greatly relieves the situation. The experts from the department who have assisted in the preparation of the bill are familiar with cases which have risen in the department during the administration of the act, and they have naturally sought to overcome these obstacles. They probably have succeeded. But in dealing with special cases it is possible that they have overlooked their exact relation to other matters, and I am not wise enough to determine this fact if it shall prove to be a fact. Naturally the Congress was obliged either to rely upon the present methods of taxation or else write a new scheme. The only alternative to existing methods is the plan suggested by the senior Senator from Utah, known as the "manufacturers' sales tax." I confess that I have been unable to understand just how it could be made to work equitably in its effect upon all of the people, and inasmuch as a modification of this plan is to be proposed I am waiting for further information. Of one thing I am satisfied, and that is that every tax which is imposed by the Government and which is capable of being passed on to the consumer is passed on, and he pays not alone the tax, but that tax multiplied sometimes many fold, and I have no doubt whatever that if it were possible for us to determine just what taxes are carried along to the people it would be infinitely better for the consumers, rich and poor, to pay the Government tax directly instead of paying it indirectly after it has been made an actual source of revenue to the taxpayer upon whom it was originally levied.

If I shall be convinced that the revised Smoot plan is just and equitable to the people as a whole, I shall not hesitate to substitute it for many of the propositions in this bill. It certainly is simpler. If when I understand it I shall believe it will not increase the taxes now paid by consumers and that it will remove some of the perplexities of existing law, I shall vote for it. Whatever law we enact must be tested by experience, and partisan arguments or uninformed declarations should not deter any Senator from doing his duty.

In all my congressional experience I have never known such unusual efforts to hinder revenue legislation and to misrepresent and confuse the legislative issues. I am satisfied, however, that the people understand the nature of our problems and the smoke screen that the opposition has thrown around it. They know that the majority are as patriotic and as intelligent as those who have employed the cheapest and most petty methods of politics, either with the hope of benefiting their own desperate political fortunes or of hampering the present administration in its efforts to bring order out of the Democratic chaos which it inherited on the 4th of last March.

I desire in conclusion to express my appreciation of the earnest patriotic efforts of the Senate Finance Committee to solve the almost unsolvable problem of taxation. It is impossible for me to conceive a more complex problem. The committee should have received the help of every Senator. It has not received it. It has, however, proceeded with great patience and is entitled to the gratitude of the country.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I have just listened with a great degree of interest to the remarks of the distinguished Senator from Michigan. I have had the pleasure of sitting at the council table with the Senator for weeks and for months. I know that he is a man of undoubted intellectual integrity, and what he has said, by reason of that fact, will undoubtedly carry considerable weight to the country.

I do not feel like referring to the criticisms which he has made regarding the political speeches to which we have listened during the pendency of the bill before the Senate. Necessarily a measure of this sort must involve what will ultimately be considered questions for political consideration by the people of the country. I do not believe that there has been any attempt on the part of any Senator to occupy the time of the Senate in discussing the bill with respect to its political features further than to call attention to the features of the bill which will undoubtedly be discussed during future political campaigns.

I did not rise, however, for the purpose of referring to those matters, and I only wish to refer now to one phase of the discussion just presented to us by the Senator from Michigan, for whom I have the highest degree of respect and even an affection. I only wish in the consideration of the bill not only that Senators could all sit around the council table where we could discuss in a quiet and conversational way the terms of the bill and the effect which we believe it will have upon the people of the country, but I wish that we might broaden that field and have the people of the country brought together in that way.

Unfortunately, it seems to me, even in this small Chamber, when we begin to discuss a bill of this sort the voice is necessarily raised and there is an inducement, which apparently is irresistible, to have what should be a quiet discussion converted into something in the nature of a speech. In considering such a bill as this, I think it could be better done if we could have that quiet and peaceful consideration which we get around the council table.

The Senator from Michigan has referred to the repeal of the excess-profits taxes that it was promised the people during the last campaign and that its repeal had been recommended by two Democratic Secretaries of the Treasury. That is true, but the provisions of law which should take the place of a repeal of the excess-profits tax I do not believe were presented to the people of the country even by the Republicans during the last campaign.

Certainly the Democratic Secretaries of the Treasury offered some other method of raising revenue to take the place of the excess-profits tax. One of the methods which was recommended I undertook to present to the Senate a few days ago. I hope that it will be further considered by the Senate.

The Senator from Michigan, however, has not suggested any method for raising revenue to take the place of the repeal of the excess-profits tax which will not work greater hardships upon the business of the country and upon the people of the country than if the excess-profits tax provision of the law should remain. The Senator has cited one instance which undoubtedly affects some people of the United States, and will, perhaps, reconcile them to a repeal of the excess-profits tax, provided they go no further in the consideration of the subject. We all know that in past years it has been considered a very popular thing among the masses of the people to deprecate the activities of large corporations. When orators attacked large corporations they were always supposed to have struck a very popular chord. The Senator from Michigan indulges in that argument. He says the excess-profits tax should be repealed because it does not levy any burden upon the large corporations of the country. I believe the Senator is right in that statement, because it is a fact that many of the large corporations of the country are not making and have not been making sufficient profits to bring them under the provision of the excess-profits provisions of the law; but the Senator apparently referred to that fact as the one justification for the repeal of the excess-profits tax. I think we should analyze the matter with all the deliberation possible and see how far that argument justifies the conclusion which the distinguished Senator has reached. That is substantially the only argument which the Senator presented to us here. The Senator would repeal the excess-profits tax solely or almost entirely because of the fact that it does not collect any revenue from the so-called big corporations of the country.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I am afraid I did not make myself very clear if the Senator from New Mexico thinks what he has stated was the only argument I made in reference to the repeal of the excess-profits tax. I mentioned that as an incident to the argument which is made, that by its repeal we exempt the rich. I brought it out in that connection; and I proceeded to show that we were not exempting the great rich by the repeal of the excess-profits tax. I further argued or attempted to prove that through the excess-profits tax the revenue that we would obtain would be derived principally from corporations which ought not to be discriminated against in that way.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I do not think that I failed to understand the Senator, and he has now merely stated in other language what seems to be the necessary result of what I tried to portray a while ago. The Senator now refers to the fact that the exemption of large corporations from this tax is alleged to be an exemption of the very rich.

Mr. President, in all fairness it seems to me that this question should be understood. The so-called big corporations, against which the people of this country have inveighed in the past, were corporations which were organized with a large capital stock, with watered stock, and the people of the country revolted against the idea of paying large dividends or any dividends upon watered stock. However, the great majority of the large corporations of the country to-day are not of that character. Take the railroads of the country; they have not been issuing any watered stock for a number of years. Take the United States Steel Corporation; it has been in existence for a great many years, and I believe that it is now conceded that that corporation has at least dollar for dollar of substantial assets for every dollar of its capital stock or bonded indebtedness. The result is that to-day there are but few of such corporations as the people of this country revolted against some years ago. Moreover, the capital stock of corporations is not the measure of the capital on which earnings are computed before the imposition of the excess-profits tax. The measure in such case is "invested capital." Watered stock is not considered. The net income amounting to 8 per cent of the "invested capital" which is exempted from the excess-profits tax is computed upon the basis of capital actually employed in the business.

As a further result to-day the so-called rich men of the country are not the owners of the large corporations. They have distributed the stock in those corporations to the people of the country, until we find that the large corporations are now in the main mere aggregations of a large number of individual stockholders. I wish Senators could realize that fact.

After the corporations have been built up to the point where the earning capacity amounts to but little, if any, more than a very modest dividend upon the capital stock, that stock is distributed through sales to the common people of the country. It is owned and held by those who have moderate means; who have small incomes, as a rule. So, to-day, inveighing against corporations because they are large is not a potent argument which would justify the shaping of legislation merely for the purpose of imposing a tax upon the so-called large corporations.

I wish to remind the Senator further that, while the large corporations as a rule are not making profits which would be reached by the excess profits tax law, there are thousands of other corporations, with moderate capitalization, or with small capital, if you please, which are making less than 8 per cent upon their invested capital. I believe there are at least 100,000 of them, including corporations of large capital distributed among a large number of people and corporations of small capital owned by a few people making less than 8 per cent upon their invested capital. For the sake of removing the excess-profits tax from those corporations which are making higher percentage of profits than 8 per cent, for the sake of those few that are making the high profits, you would put the burden upon those which are now making 8 per cent or less profit on their invested capital.

The Senator from Michigan referred to the fact that the corporations which were making excess profits have as a rule small capital, compared with some of the large corporations. He is undoubtedly correct about that; but he argues that such corporations are dependent for their prosperity not upon their invested capital but upon the personal efforts and exertions of the owners and the managers of the business. Let me remind the Senator and anyone else who desires to study this question that in all of those cases before the excess-profits tax is applied every one of the managers who was devoting his personal efforts to the prosperity of the business has a salary allowed him before any profits of the corporation are taken into consideration. Instance after instance has developed where the salaries of managing directors have been increased far beyond anything of which they had ever previously dreamed. They have a right to raise their individual salaries to any point they please, unless the experts of the Treasury Department shall conclude that they are doing so solely and for the specific purpose of defrauding the Government of revenue, and they have done it; they have increased their salaries, and deducted them as expenses and costs against the business of the corporation, just as high as their consciences and the experts of the Treasury would permit.

Talk to me about relieving that kind of a concern which, after having paid such salaries, upon its invested capital has earned a large profit, from a tax upon their profits in excess of a reasonable amount! Shall we take the tax off such concerns and increase the tax by 50 per cent on those corporations which are earning less than 8 per cent upon their net invested capital? Talk to me about that being proper legislation! Is that what the Republican Party last year told the people of this country would be their program? I say, no. If the people of the United States had understood it we would not have had the result which followed the last election. You simply talked about wanting to take off the excess-profits tax. The people of this country never understood what you proposed to put in the place of it. They never understood that the thousands and hundreds of thousands of people of this country who had their all invested in a few shares of stock in a dividend-paying corporation earning not more than 8 per cent would have their taxes increased by 50 per cent, while those other corporations making large profits were to have the excess-profits tax removed and to be permitted to retain all of their excess profits. You never told the people that; and now, when you undertake to justify what you propose, you talk about the large corporations; you condemn the large corporations.

This is the first time in my career that I have ever heard such an argument as that come from the other side of the Chamber. The Democrats are the ones who have always been accused of being against the large corporations. Those on the other side of the Chamber are the ones who have always been defending big business; but now, when you find that you want to relieve some of your pet corporations that are making large percentages of profit upon their capital, when they are of more importance to you than these hundreds of thousands of individual stockholders in the large corporations, you begin to talk about large corporations!

Is that the kind of an appeal you made to the people last year? I say, no. You did not tell the people what you intended to put in the place of the excess-profits tax; and if this bill goes through as you have framed it now I predict that when the people find out what you really had in mind there will be a revulsion from one side of this country to the other. They will not permit the taxes of those who are making modest profits to be increased 50 per cent and the taxes of those who are making higher profits to be removed or greatly reduced.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 294, the last page of the bill, after line 2, it is proposed to insert a new heading and a section to read as follows:

INCREASE IN INTERNAL-REVENUE COLLECTION DISTRICTS.

SEC. —. That section 3142 of the Revised Statutes is amended by adding at the end thereof a new paragraph to read as follows:

"The whole number of collection districts for the collection of internal revenue and the whole number of collectors of internal revenue shall not exceed 74."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I raise a point of order against the amendment which has just been submitted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah will state the point of order.

Mr. KING. I will state frankly that I am not sure that it is subject to a point of order, but we are considering now a revenue bill, and this amendment is not germane to the bill. It relates to an entirely different subject matter.

That is the only point of order which it seems to me could be urged.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I think, of course, the point of order is not very well taken, because this is not an appropriation bill; but, upon the question of whether or not it is germane, it is a part of the administration, and if passed as a separate law would still be a part of the administrative portion of this bill. The Committee on Finance has already reported favorably the same proposition that is now included in the Senator's amendment. There is on the calendar, favorably reported, a bill providing for an increase in the number of districts. I think, although I am not certain—the Senator from North Carolina can correct me if I am wrong—that there was no opposition to the measure in the committee. I am certain, at least, that it was reported favorably and is on the calendar; and if there was any opposition it has escaped my memory.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, my recollection is like that of the Senator from North Dakota. I know that I have not myself opposed it, because I have known for some time that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue felt that he did not have authority to appoint a sufficient number of collectors of internal revenue, and that the service had suffered very much on that account. Mr. Roper was very much in favor of a larger increase than this. I think there ought to be an increase.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that the rules of the Senate do not require an amendment to be germane to the subject matter of a bill, with the exception of appropriation bills, and therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Heflin	McNary	Shortridge
Borah	Hitchcock	Moses	Simmons
Brandegee	Johnson	Myers	Smoot
Broussard	Jones, N. Mex.	Nelson	Spencer
Bursum	Jones, Wash.	New	Stanfield

Fletcher	McCumber	Pomerene	Warren
Frelinghuysen	McKellar	Reed	Watson, Ga.
Hale	McKinley	Sheppard	Watson, Ind.
Harris	McLean	Shields	Willis

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Sixty-eight Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER].

Mr. KING. I ask to have the amendment stated

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On the last page of the bill, after line 2, it is proposed to insert, with a heading:

INCREASE IN INTERNAL-REVENUE COLLECTION DISTRICTS.

SEC. —. That section 3142 of the Revised Statutes is amended by adding at the end thereof a new paragraph to read as follows:

"The whole number of collection districts for the collection of internal revenue and the whole number of collectors of internal revenue shall not exceed 74."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the amendment just submitted by the Senator from New York has for its object the increasing of the number of collection districts, and therefore the number of collectors, from 64 to 74; in other words, to add 10 more collection districts to the already large number existing in the country. If this amendment is adopted, it will add hundreds if not thousands to the Federal pay roll and cost the Government hundreds of thousands of dollars annually. However, this is in line with the economy which the Republican Party is giving to the country. In this manner it is redeeming its platform pledges. It went before the people promising an economical administration. It charged that the Democratic Party, during and subsequent to the war, had multiplied officers, increased the number of officeholders, and was guilty of extravagance in the conduct of the affairs of the Nation.

In every part of the land where Republican orators were heard, from the present President of the United States down to the humblest spellbinder, in the big cities and in the rural districts, one of the favorite themes, the chord that was played the most, was the alleged extravagance of the Democratic Party. It was stated that as soon as the Republican Party came into power bureaus and Federal agencies would be abolished and the number of officeholders reduced. It was claimed that 40,000 officeholders in Washington would be immediately discharged, and that hundreds of thousands of Federal employees would be separated from the service.

Mr. President, the Republican Party, though it has been in power in the legislative branch of the Government for nearly three years, has not exhibited that spirit of economy which all lovers of this Government would desire, and now that they have all branches of the Government they have thrown to the wind all of their professions and pledges, and we find from day to day schemes and plans and policies proposed by the majority which call for additional offices and officeholders. New departments, bureaus, Federal agencies, and instrumentalities are being created and are to be created. These new creations will strengthen bureaucracy and provide places for tens of thousands of officeholders.

Mr. President, bureaucracy is so triumphant that scarcely any business, even in the remotest hamlets of the land, can be conducted without Federal surveillance, if not supervision, and agents or attorneys must be employed to protect the owners of such business from the deadening and destructive regulations so often promulgated by Federal officials at Washington. The paternalistic hand of the Federal Government extends to the humblest individual, and the omnipotent power of the Federal Government is laid upon business, stifling and deadening it. The Western States more than some others have felt the blighting effects of Federal bureaucracy. Tens of thousands of functionaries drawn from other parts of the land deluge the West and eat out the substance of the people. Unacquainted with the matters with which they are authorized to deal they act in a capricious and arbitrary manner, and interpose obstacles to the progress and development of the people.

Notwithstanding the promises of retrenchment we are now asked to increase the number of offices and officeholders. We have passed through the war, when we were collecting seven or eight billion dollars per annum, and when if additional districts were warranted it was at that time. The pending bill proposes to collect approximately $4,000,000,000 annually. We got through the war with 64 collection districts. Now it is proposed, when the war is over, when we are to reduce the taxes from the war peak by more than 100 per cent, to increase the number of collection districts from 64 to 74. What is the reason for it?

As I understand, it has been suggested that the Secretary of the Treasury has recommended it. That is no sufficient reason. Recommendations of Federal officials, whether Democrats or Republicans, in the departments, from the heads down to the humblest chief, for increased authority and more officeholders do not appeal very strongly to me. If there is a Federal agency that has not sought, and is not now seeking, the extension of its authority, its prerogatives, its power, and its jurisdiction I should be very glad to have it pointed out. Federal executives and Federal bureaus have a voracity which can not be described. The aim seems to be to secure more power, more authority, greater jurisdiction, even though it infringes upon the jurisdiction, the prerogatives, and, indeed, sovereignty of the States. The clamor is for new offices and more positions.

We have to-day upon the Federal rolls nearly 1,000,000 persons, and it is planned to add more to the list. A pension system has been provided, and in a few years there will be a civil pension list that will cost the taxpayers of the country millions of dollars annually. Republican administration comes high. We are building up a bureaucracy perhaps as powerful as exists in any country in the world, and many who are members of it are becoming arrogant and regard it as the right of the General Government to assume control over the States, over the lives and pursuits of the people. Local government is derided and flouted, and the States are regarded as mere political subdivisions of an inferior character in the sweep of the powerful Federal authority. There are sent out from Washington hundreds of thousands of Federal agents and employees and inspectors, functionaries, many of whom are wholly incompetent and who insult the States and interfere with the people. They are directed to take charge of the people's business and to assume jurisdiction over matters as to which they have but limited, if any, knowledge.

Coming back to this question, What is the reason for this increase? I suppose it will be argued that we have not yet brought down the income tax and excise-profits tax reports rendered in 1917, 1918, 1919, and 1920. It may be claimed that the revenue returns are not current date. Concede this to be true; that is no sufficient reason to increase the number of collection districts.

Mr. President, there has been but little, if any, limitation placed upon the Treasury Department as to the number of employees it might have, and it has increased the number, during the war, not by thousands but by tens of thousands. The cause of the delay in not keeping business current may be entirely excusable. I make no criticism because of the apparent delay. However, whatever help was asked for by the Treasury Department was granted by Congress. To increase the districts would only multiply the evils. It would provide good berths for thousands of hungry Republican office seekers. If additional employees are required, Congress will willingly make the appropriations in order to bring business down to date, but this is a scheme to create new collection districts and to fasten upon the country permanently these additional offices and officeholders.

It is not temporary; it is not limited to the period required to bring the reports down to date or to a rectification of existing evils, but it is proposed to permanently add thousands of Federal employees to the already swollen list.

We know that in some of the States there have been too many collection districts. In some States, such as Kentucky and North Carolina, where in the past revenue was obtained from the manufacture of alcoholic beverages, more collection districts were needed than are now required. I believe that in a number of States some of the collection districts could be abolished or united and transfers made to some other States where perhaps there might with propriety be created an additional district.

Mr. OVERMAN. Senator GLASS, when he was Secretary of the Treasury, went into this matter thoroughly, and he said on the floor of the Senate that he had reduced the collection districts because they were unnecessary. In Kentucky they had five where they did not need more than two. He found in North Carolina two districts, and abolished one, and they have been getting along just as well with one district as they did with two.

Mr. KING. I am glad to hear that, because soon after I came to the Senate I appealed to Secretary McAdoo to abolish a number of districts. In the West three or four States were combined into one district. The State of Utah was attached to Montana, and Idaho was a part of the Montana district. The headquarters of the district were in Helena, Mont., hundreds of miles distant from my State, and there was some inconvenience in the administration of the law. I appealed to Secretary McAdoo to abolish some of the districts in some of the States, and to have at least one district in every State, and later that policy was adopted.

Mr. President, I repeat that, having gone through the war with 64 districts, when the burden of taxation was much greater than at present, when the necessity for additional districts, if necessity existed, was greater than now, when the necessity for a greater number of officials was stronger than now, it does seem to me that there is now no reason for increasing the number of districts and multiplying the number of officeholders.

I appreciate the fact that there is an irresistible demand for additional offices from hungry Republican office seekers, who haunt the Capitol and the corridors of the hotels, and hound the President of the United States. This administration, if it pursues the course in the future which it has in the past two or three months, will bring down upon its head the condemnation of those who believe in honest Government and efficiency and who oppose a narrow, bitter, bigoted partisanship, which believes that Government exists only for the purpose of creating offices and positions for multitudes of adherents of the party in power.

This is a scheme to multiply offices for Republican office seekers. It is not in the interest of efficiency, it is not demanded by any policy of legitimate or rational reform. I protest against this further extension of bureaucratic control, this multiplication of offices, for the gratification of importunate Republican office seekers.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], if he had cared to, could have informed himself that this proposal originated in the Treasury, and was brought forward by the Secretary at the instance of the Treasury experts, because in their judgment the volume and complexity of business in many of the revenue districts is so great as to result in a loss of revenue to the Government. The Treasury determined that at the time when a special effort was put forth to rake and to comb the revenue districts for every dollar due under the internal-revenue act.

The Senator from Utah, who, in his usual vocations, is one of the most sanguine and optimistic of our friends, nevertheless when he contemplates the administration of the Federal Government always falls into a state of gloom and a condition of pessimism which would chill the stoutest of us did we not know that they were both to be dissipated the moment he took his seat, to radiate smiles upon the assembled Senators.

During the time I have been in this body no Senator has inveighed more often or more emphatically against extravagance than has the junior Senator from Utah. I do not even except the senior Senator from that State. No man has forecast the future perils of the Republic more often or in more depressing tones than the junior Senator from Utah. No one, not even the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], who sits beside the junior Senator from Utah, or the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] has forecast the certain and irrevocable ruin of the Republican Party in more certain terms than has the junior Senator from Utah. But society still exists, civilization survives, the Republic lives, the Republican Party contemplates with unashamed satisfaction its majorities of the past, and, with unblushing confidence, its majorities of the future.

Now, Mr. President, the facts—I am not indulging in prophecy, and the junior Senator from Utah can have the facts if he will—the facts are that the majority and the administration have curtailed expenditures. The written record is before any man to read that the current expenditures of the Government is four-sevenths of what it was two years ago. I do not wish to indulge in conjecture, but I ask my friend if he does not believe that the budget to be submitted under the law which he helped to frame will show a still further reduction in expenditures?

Mr. KING. I hope so.

Mr. McCORMICK. It may be that when we come to the elections of next November the sum of our service will not be deemed sufficient. It may be that the people will judge us harshly because we have not been able to undo that which was ill done before us, because we have not been able to cure the economic disorders wrought by war, because we have not been able to work miracles. But I say that on the score of economy of public revenues, of curtailing public expenditures, of abolishing useless offices, of refusing to create others in their places, there will be no ground for condemnation of the majority or the administration. The proposal of the Secretary of the Treasury involves an outlay unimportant compared with the sum which through collection of taxes would bring in. I have no doubt that on that score the junior Senator from Utah will ultimately agree with me.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I merely wish to recall to the mind of the Senator from Illinois, who has been so eloquently addressing us, the matter which I discussed to some extent on yesterday or the day before and one in which I know the Senator from Illinois is very greatly interested.

The Senator from Illinois was chairman of a special committee appointed by the Senate and House to prepare a budget bill. I was honored with membership upon that committee, and I know that the Senator from Illinois took great interest in that subject; that he felt that great benefits were to be derived from the passage of the budget bill; that through the budget system economies would be effected, the economies to which he has just referred.

I wish to inquire of the Senator whether he is satisfied to have the provisions of that bill ignored at this time? It seems to me that if there ever would be a time in the history of our country when we should enforce the provisions of the budget law this is the time. The country wants economies of all sorts and to the greatest extent possible. It wants the burden of revenue measured by the necessary expenditures. Under the budget law which the distinguished Senator from Illinois reported to the Senate and in the passage of which he was largely instrumental, it is provided that on the 1st day of December next the President must make a report, under his responsibility as President, of the necessary expenditures of the Government for the fiscal year beginning the 1st of next July. It is only that fiscal year which is seriously affected by the present revenue bill. We must then have, in pursuance of the budget law, an estimate, boiled down, presented to us by the President. After the Director of the Budget has used all of his influence and authority in boiling it down, then it is to be presented as the work of the President to the Congress and at the same time the President is to give us a detailed statement of the expenditures during the existing fiscal year, and an estimate for the succeeding fiscal year, and to tell us how those expenditures have balanced and will balance with the revenues. He is also to tell us how existing law affects the matter.

Now, by the passage of the revenue bill at this time are we not losing all of the benefit of the budget law in which the Senator from Illinois was so actively interested? It seems to me that at this time, or before we revise the revenue law, we should have more information in regard to the expenditures for the fiscal year 1923 than we now have. There has not been an estimate submitted to the Senate yet as to what the expenditures will be for the fiscal year 1923. We have only a guess. In fact, under the provisions of the budget law any official of the Government is prohibited from giving us any estimate as to those expenditures. The law specifically devolves that duty and responsibility upon the President and prohibits anybody from making any estimate except the President.

Now we are framing legislation which will affect every being in the country, and we are doing it upon a haphazard situation which no one understands. We devoted a good deal of time to the preparation and consideration of the budget law, and if it amounts to anything it seems to me that we ought to take advantage of its provisions.

Just recently the President of the United States, in a letter to the distinguished Senator from Illinois, doubtless realizing that the Senator from Illinois was interested in the budget law, referred to that law as one of the great achievements, one which would have stood out as the achievement of the whole Congress, and yet here we are considering the revenue bill, which affects materially only the revenues for the fiscal year 1923 beginning July 1 of next year, and we are framing the legislation without having any estimate from the President of the United States or any official suggestion from him as to what modifications should be made in the existing revenue law so as to conform to the requirements of the Treasury under the appropriations which he will recommend.

Is the Senator from Illinois satisfied for us to go ahead at this time in this haphazard way without awaiting any estimate or recommendation from the President of the United States?

The Senator does not answer.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I wish we could return to the bill now. There are quite a number of not very important amendments, but still amendments that will be offered, and I should like to get through as quickly as possible. I am hopeful that we may shorten our session a little this evening by hurrying on with these amendments. I desire to have the attention of the junior Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. The Senator has it. He always does when he speaks.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator desired some information concerning the necessity of an increase in the number of collection districts. That matter was before the committee, brought there by the request of the Secretary of the Treasury. It appeared from the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury that 10 years ago, for instance, there were about 600,000 taxpayers in the United States who paid revenue into the United States Treasury. That number has now been increased to more than 9,000,000 taxpayers, or fifteen times the previous number. In his estimate the Secretary also states:

> With monthly returns required of sales, taxpayers, and quarterly payments permitted to those filing income-tax returns, the 9,000,000 persons filing returns during 1920 had a total of more than 15,000,000 separate transactions with collectors of internal revenue during that year.
>
> Because of this marked increase in the number of people who come in contact with collectors of internal revenue, it appears imperative that internal-revenue collection district offices be located at such points as will afford the greatest possible convenience to taxpayers. The increase in volume of work in the larger collection district offices also presents serious accounting difficulties.
> The number of internal-revenue collection districts, now limited by law to a total of 64, is not sufficient to meet the increasing needs of the service. It is therefore recommended that the number permitted by law be increased to a maximum of 74.

That is practically all the Secretary of the Treasury states. The experts of the Treasury Department agree that it will facilitate the settlement of tax disputes, and so forth, and will greatly assist the Treasury Department if the number of districts can be increased so that they may be brought in more direct contact with the taxpayer, and that, in addition to that, in some of the larger districts the work is too heavy for a single district officer. It was upon that basis that the committee recommended the increase in the number. The bill has been reported favorably to the Senate and is on the calendar. It is simply a question whether we want to adopt the recommendation as a separate proposition upon the calendar or whether it is desirable that it shall be attached, for the purpose of facilitating it, to this particular measure.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I wish the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] would leave this matter to be passed upon as a separate proposition. I do not desire to take up the time to discuss it now, but we have a number of matters of similar import coming along. We have several other bills before the Senate creating a large number of offices; or, if those bills are not before the Senate, they are before committees, and are soon to come out of the committees. It seems to me that we ought to survey the situation pretty carefully before we begin to create so many offices, in view of the fact that we are striving as best we may to economize everywhere. To put this amendment in the bill is to put it where it does not necessarily belong. Simply because the offices have to do with the collection of taxes is no reason why we should create offices by adding an amendment to a tax bill. I sincerely hope that the Senator from New York will leave the matter for separate action.

I have myself not any doubt these matters could all be taken care of, instead of creating additional districts, by simply adding some additional clerks in the offices which we already have; and when the time comes I think there can be just reasons given why the bill should not pass at all; but we ought not to inject such a proposal upon the pending bill, if we are going to pass it before the session ends. We have got enough trouble ahead in connection with the bill now.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, it seems very fitting that this amendment should be offered to this bill. The bill deals with the collection of internal revenue; that is the only subject with which it does deal. I know that on making inquiry in reference to this subject early in the spring the internal-revenue officials told me that it was exceedingly important that additional districts should be created. It was pointed out that in the city of New York, where we formerly had two districts, when the last administration took one of those districts away it considerably interfered with the proper collection of the revenue. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue himself told me that it was possible to collect in the States and about greater New York at least $100,000,000 more revenue than was being collected if another internal-revenue district, with a collector and other necessary officials, were established.

I am moved in my action on this matter by what I believe to be to the best interest of the Government in connection with the collection of revenue in my State.

The Senator from Idaho has proposed that I withdraw the amendment now. I regret that I can not do so, because I believe that the amendment is in the interest of the Government and should be adopted.

Mr. BORAH. I have not any doubt the Senator is acting in perfect good faith about the matter, so far as that is concerned, but I think the creation of additional offices has really nothing to do with the tax provision. It ought not to be put in here. I think the Senator will find before he gets through with this tax bill that we have trouble enough ahead without undertaking that.

Mr. CALDER. If the Senator will permit me, if the department lays before the Committee on Finance the fact that the creation of more districts will mean the collection of more revenue, and also will convenience the people who have to transact business with the internal-revenue office, it seems to me that would be a very good reason for the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. BORAH. They have not laid any evidence before us. That is the trouble now. They have simply come in with their ipse dixit that they ought to have more additional districts. I can go to the head of any department in Washington and get that kind of a statement. They have not given us the details of it. When they do undertake to give us the details in regard to it, in my opinion, we shall find that the whole subject matter could be covered by providing a few additional assistants in the offices which we already have.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I simply desire to ask the Senator from Idaho if he was present when I read the Secretary's letter?

Mr. BORAH. I was, and I heard the letter read.

Mr. McCUMBER. I thought the Secretary went into the details, although, perhaps not, sufficiently to satisfy the Senator; but I did not want the statement to go unchallenged that there had been nothing stated except a request made.

Mr. BORAH. I do not regard the statement of the Secretary as detailed at all; I thought it was a very general generalization; but as to that there might be a difference of opinion.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I desire to express my approval of the position taken by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] that the consideration of this subject should be deferred. I do it for the reason that during the period of the World War—I can not give the exact dates but those who are in touch with the Treasury Department can find out—the then Secretary of the Treasury had a scheme afoot whereby he was not going to increase the number of collectors, but decrease them.

In the State of Ohio there are four collection districts with offices at Cleveland, Toledo, Columbus, and Cincinnati. The Secretary's scheme at that time was to create one district in the State of Ohio. He thought that it would be a matter of economy; he thought that it would result in better administration. At that time I did not agree with him for this reason: It was just after we had enacted new revenue legislation which was going very largely to increase the number of taxpayers. The offices were already organized, and I suggested that it would, perhaps, be more convenient for the taxpayers to have four offices in the State to which they could go and adjust their tax matters rather than to have only one district.

I do not know whether my position, then, was sound or not. The fact that the proposed plan would centralize these offices in some sense of the word appealed to me, but, clearly, if the Treasury Department then felt that it would be in the interest of efficiency to decrease the number of collectors I am at a loss to understand how there can be such a complete change of front by the Treasury Department, so that now they favor an increase in the number.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President——

Mr. POMERENE. I yield.

Mr. McCORMICK. The then head of the Treasury believed that efficiency could be increased in the railroad administration by consolidating the management.

Mr. POMERENE. Well, Mr. President, we are not discussing the railroads now; that is another subject, which I may discuss at some later date, and perhaps there is not very much difference between the views of the Senator and my own views on that subject.

Mr. McCORMICK. I am only suggesting that the then head of the Treasury Department held that consolidated, centralized management made for efficiency.

Mr. POMERENE. I realize that, but most of the advisers of the Treasury Department have been there for years. Whether it is some of the new advisers who want new positions I do not know, or whether some of the old advisers there want to change their views, rightly or wrongly, I do not know; but I am perfectly clear in one thought, that the final determination of this subject should be left to some other occasion.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, it seems to me this is just another step to add a few more officeholders and employees and agencies, thereby increasing instead of lessening the expenditures of the Government. A few years ago, as I remember, in 1909 or 1910, under President Taft the customs districts were consolidated. Various customs districts along the coast and throughout the country were all considered, and a number of districts were consolidated into one. That policy, with reference to the customs districts, it seems to me, might be a very excellent policy to pursue with reference to the internal-revenue districts; at any rate, if we provide for new districts we will have to have more collectors, many assistants, and numerous clerks and other help, another office to take care of, all of which is bound to result in a very great increase in the expenses. Where are we going to end if we keep on adding new offices and new positions? The proposition is made here now to create additional Federal judges—18, I believe, in number.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to suggest that during the Taft administration the movement was set on foot to consolidate the customs districts?

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes; and it was done.

Mr. POMERENE. In Ohio there were several customs districts; I do not remember the number now, but I think 4 or perhaps 5. They were all consolidated under one office, with headquarters in Cleveland, and that plan of organization has been continued ever since, and, I think, without lessening the efficiency of the service.

Mr. FLETCHER. Undoubtedly it has proven most satisfactory and has brought about a considerable saving in public expenditures. This simply means, I repeat, additional calls upon the Treasury of the Government to take care of additional officeholders, additional offices, and outlays which are not required. If we are going to begin to relieve of taxation the people of this country we must begin at the end where the money goes out—we must diminish expenditures—otherwise we can not reduce taxes. The demands upon the Treasury of the Government to-day, running into something like $4,000,000,000 per annum, are something enormous; we can scarcely comprehend what a billion dollars really means.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. McCUMBER. I was going to suggest to the Senator from Florida, as I know he would like to get along with the bill, that, as a friend of the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York, I am going to ask if he will not withdraw it at this time, as it is undoubtedly going to provoke considerable discussion, which I know he did not anticipate, inasmuch as the plan proposed has already been recommended by the committee. If the Senator from New York will kindly do that, it might relieve us of taking up the time of the Senate in discussing this matter at the present time.

Mr. FLETCHER. Of course, I do not care to discuss the matter if the Senator from New York intends to withdraw the amendment. I am not seeking merely to take up the time of the Senate.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I think the amendment offered by me is a very meritorious one and ought to be adopted; I believe it is in the interest of good administration of the Internal-Revenue Service; but it seems to have created a good deal of discussion, and, in the opinion of members of the committee, may delay the consideration of the bill. I should not care to delay unduly the consideration of the bill, and for that reason I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, before the Senator withdraws the amendment, if I may be permitted to say so, I have made some inquiries since the debate began, and I am satisfied that if there is any present need for an increase it ought not to be so great an increase as is proposed in the Senator's amendment. I am quite sure that if the Senator will talk to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue he will reach that conclusion. In view of the fact that we have just practically eliminated from this bill the excess-profits tax, I think the work of the office will be very considerably diminished. If the Senator decides later to press his amendment, I think it ought not to provide for quite so many additional collectors.

Mr. FLETCHER. Then, do I understand that the proposed amendment is withdrawn?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair desires to understand the situation. Does the Senator from New York desire to withdraw his amendment?

Mr. CALDER. I withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the amendment is withdrawn.

INVESTIGATION OF TREATMENT OF SOLDIERS.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, the Senator from North Dakota has kindly agreed to yield to me for the purpose of offering a resolution for reference to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. I send the resolution to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read the resolution.

The reading clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 165), as follows:

Resolved, That the special committee appointed by the Chair to invite the junior Senator from Georgia to appear before them and to investigate the charges made by him affecting the conduct of officers of the Army in inflicting punishment upon enlisted men of the Expeditionary Forces in the late war is hereby authorized, until it finishes said investigation and reports, to send for persons, books, and papers, to administer oaths and employ a stenographer, at a cost not to exceed $1.25 per printed page, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with the subject pending before said committee, the expenses thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate upon authorization of the chairman, and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate at any place.

During the reading of the resolution—

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, will the Secretary read more slowly?

After the reading of the resolution—

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, inasmuch as there was some conversation in the Chamber and it was difficult to hear the Secretary, I ask that the resolution be read again, so that all may understand it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will again read the resolution.

The resolution was read a second time.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I ask that the resolution, under the statute, may be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, because of the speech which I made on the floor of the Senate touching the treatment of our soldiers while they were in France I was, without notice and in the most insolent manner, attacked by the chairman of the Military Affairs Committee yesterday, and he wound up by saying that he demanded that I come before his committee. I replied to him, as any Senator of spirit would have done; I thought his manner and his whole bearing was supercilious, contemptuous, and intolerant, and I told him so. I told him I would fight it out with him here, face to face. That is what I am going to do. I am going to fight it out here with him, face to face. The whole country shall hear it. The whole country shall know it.

True, I afterwards said, during the impromptu remarks which I made then, as I am making them now, without a moment's notice from my friend the Senator from Connecticut—without one moment's notice—that I would go before any impartial committee, provided the ex-service men or the service men, in other words the witnesses, would be guaranteed immunity from persecution—just that kind of punishment which the General Staff, which met this morning in the room of the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], knows how to apply to anybody who belongs to the Army or has belonged to it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. With pleasure.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. In reference to the Senator's statement that he is speaking without a moment's notice from the Senator from Connecticut, I wish to say to him that this is merely a resolution to be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. I ask no action of the Senate.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I understand that thoroughly, Mr. President. I know where you go when you start down the slide.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I went to the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] and showed him the resolution which I have just offered, the Senator being a member of the committee with me, and asked him if it was in proper form, and requested him to notify the Senator from Georgia to be on the floor, because I intended to offer it. I consider that that was notice to the Senator, and before I offered it I looked around and saw the Senator on the floor; so I do not feel that I was discourteous to him. I do not intend to be discourteous to the Senator.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I am quite sure of that.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I thought I had shown him every proper consideration.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I am quite sure he thought so. The Senator has always been courteous to the junior Senator from Georgia. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] told me just a moment ago that the Senator from Connecticut would introduce such a resolution, and would give me notice. Of course I thought that would be something like a real notice, and that it would not be jumped on me just a minute afterwards.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, there is no question about jumping anything on the Senator. This is the formal resolution that every committee introduces when it is instructed by the Senate to investigate anything—merely authority to employ a stenographer to report the proceedings and to pay the expenses of the witnesses.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I am going to save the Senator from Connecticut some trouble and some time, if he will allow me.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I went to the Senator from North Carolina and said, "Will you notify the Senator from Georgia?" He said, "Why, he is right on the floor now." The only object of a notice was to get the Senator on the floor, and if he was here on the floor already I did not see the object of going and getting him on the floor and giving him further notice. If the Senator is in any way embarrassed or taken by surprise, or wants more time, I will willingly withdraw the resolution until he has time to consider the question.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I am not in the least embarrassed. I am not asking for time.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. My remarks are evoked simply by the Senator's remark that the Senator from Connecticut did this without any notice to him.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. To me. The Senator from North Carolina said the notice would be given to me, and it was not given to me.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have nothing more to say upon that question.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, I want to say that these charges were made here openly on the floor of the Senate, and I am going to meet them here as openly on the floor of the Senate. I am not going to be bottled up in any committee room and have the evidence entombed in some report that nobody will read. When I get through—and it will take me some days to gather my testimony—what I say in answer to the Senator from New York will be read by the millions of people of this country; the newspapers will have to carry it, because it will be good reading matter. I assure you it will. It will be good copy. You need not doubt that.

The charges I made here on the floor were made substantially by Senator Chamberlain here in December, 1918. Have Senators forgotten it? Did they appoint a committee to investigate him, and seek to bury him in somebody's committee room?

The Senator from New York said he could count on the fingers of one hand the American soldiers who had been executed by their officers in France. This morning's paper, the Post, gives a statement of the Secretary of War doubling the number of the Senator from New York. There is one authority directly conflicting with the other. Which one is correct? The Secretary of War or the chairman of the Military Affairs Committee? I gave the number as twice that much, and I gave the song as it was given to me. I took it in good faith, and I stated it here in good faith.

Mr. President, in the very long and able speech made by Senator Chamberlain, interrupted from time to time by Senators McCUMBER and LA FOLLETTE and KING, there was just one statement that he did not make. In that whole speech there is no internal evidence that the Senator who made it had the least idea that American soldiers were being swung up on gallows in France. I do not believe that any Senator knew it until I made the statement in the short speech that has been so bitterly arraigned here by the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], demanding that I appear before his committee. My commission commands me to appear here before you, Senators, and I am here. You will hear every word I have to say if you want to hear it, and the country will hear it, too.

I had no idea that the small kodak photograph of that gallows at Gievres, in France, could be produced until I could have time to send home to Thomson, Ga., and have my library searched; and there was nobody there who could have found it. I would have had to send my secretary there to find it; but it was handed to me here in the course of the debate, and now that picture will be in all the papers, and for the first time the American people, who suffered their heatless days and their wheatless days, and who were never given any Hooverless days, who had to buy Liberty bonds, mortgage their property to do it and borrow money to do it, and had the Government's faith broken with them after they had done it, will see that gallows, and they will ask, "By what authority did any American in France have to hang another?"

Will the War Department reveal their records? Will they furnish to me or to any Senator the names of the commanders at Gievres? Will they furnish the names of the workmen who built that gibbet, that gallows, for American soldiers?

This morning there came into my office a statement of another man as to another camp where hanging took place, and in that case the man who was strung up was a Negro soldier. The Pennsylvania ex-soldier wrote to me that he saw the hanging. By what authority was that black man put to death in that ignominious manner inside of the American lines in France? It is time our people knew the facts; it is time this military spirit is made to understand that by the supreme law of this country the military is subordinate to the civil power and not superior to it.

Mr. McCUMBER obtained the floor.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. REED. Before it is referred, I want to say something about it, and I was on my feet trying to get recognition by the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not debatable.

Mr. REED. The question of a Senator's right to take the floor, I think——

Mr. McCUMBER. I was recognized, though I do not know whether the Senator or myself was actually on his feet first; but I want to go on with the revenue bill.

Mr. REED. I ask the Senator to yield to me for a question.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Senator from North Dakota very kindly yielded to me to ask unanimous consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair recognized the Senator from North Dakota simply because he first heard that Senator address the Chair.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I want to make a suggestion to the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield, but I think it can be satisfactorily explained why we want to get through.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I am in no hurry about it. I simply asked unanimous consent, or, if I did not use the words "unanimous consent," I asked the Senate to allow me to introduce the resolution and have it referred to the committee. A single objection, of course, will thwart that, and if the Senator from Missouri objects to it, of course, I admit his right to do it; but I think that before the resolution is referred, any Senator who wants to ought to have the privilege of objecting.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would like to state his understanding of the parliamentary situation. The Senator from Connecticut asked unanimous consent to introduce the resolution. There was no objection, and it was made the duty of the Chair by law to refer the resolution to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I do not want to get into any kind of an argument with the Chair about the propriety of his ruling. The present occupant of the chair rules so fairly and so justly, and pleases me so well all the time, that even if I thought he was wrong I would not want to say so. But I beg to suggest that when a resolution is offered under unanimous consent the proposition is then for the first time before the body, and before it goes to any committee at all the Senate has the right to act upon it. We might refuse to let it be referred to any committee, or we might decide to refer it to some other committee than the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, and by vote we can do that.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. A statute controls the reference.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think probably the Senator from Missouri misapprehends the purpose of the resolution.

Mr. REED. I know its purpose.

Mr. McCUMBER. A committee has already been appointed.

Mr. REED. I understand that.

Mr. McCUMBER. This is simply asking authority to proceed and to employ a stenographer——

Mr. REED. I understand.

Mr. McCUMBER. Let me just finish the sentence. The Senator from Connecticut asked me to yield to him simply to have the resolution introduced and referred, and I suggested that I would do so if it would not evoke debate, but it evidently did evoke debate which the Senator from Connecticut did not expect. I am especially anxious to try to get rid of holding an evening session this evening if we can, and I thought if we could make pretty fair progress with the bill to-day it would be an excuse to do so. That is the reason why I desired to go on with the bill, if the Senator would allow us to do that.

Mr. REED. As the Senator from North Dakota knows, I have been trying to help get this bill through in the last day or two, as much as possible to shorten debate, and everything of that sort. I have been cooperating, I think he will agree. I want to say a few words about this matter. Of course, I could say them after the resolution was referred, but I preferred saying them before it was referred. I shall be very brief, but I want to make a suggestion or two to the Senate in regard to the matter.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. If the Senator will yield to me for a brief remark, I suggest to the Senator from North Dakota that we conclude this matter now, because we must take action. It probably will not take over 10 minutes. The committee is ready to go to work, and it can not go to work until the resolution is adopted. The adoption of the resolution is necessary to the carrying out of the order of the Senate, and it might as well be done this afternoon as to-morrow.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator says it will take only a short time, and I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator from Missouri will allow me, this is a matter of statute, not a matter of our rules. The resolution has to go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, under the law, after it has once been received. This resolution was received, and there was no objection made. The Chair has no course to follow except to refer it.

Mr. REED. I think I understand the situation.

Mr. LODGE. I have no doubt the Senator did, but he stated it in such a way that I thought he did not.

Mr. REED. The Senator will understand me in a moment. I am much obliged for the suggestion.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator said it could be referred or disposed of in some other way.

Mr. REED. I still think so. It can be laid on the table. The statute provides that before expenses shall be incurred in certain matters, which would cover this matter, the resolutions shall be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, but it does not say that such resolutions shall be referred to the committee; they are only to be referred to the committee in case the Senate sees fit. However, we can not expend the money until the committee has acted.

Mr. LODGE. The language of the rule is that they shall be referred.

Mr. REED. Certainly, they shall be referred to that committee, provided we want to refer them anywhere.

Mr. LODGE. That condition does not appear in the rule.

Mr. REED. Does anybody pretend to say that the Senate can not now refuse to consider this proposition, or to do anything with it? But, Mr. President, I care nothing about that. That is not what I rose to speak on, and Senators have taken more time now in trying to instruct me than it would have taken me to say what I want to say.

I have no desire to criticize the Army or the Navy of the United States, and I want what I am about to say to be understood in the light of that statement; but I am of the opinion that the whole proceeding, in which this is a necessary step if the proceeding is to continue, is a very grave mistake.

The privileges of the Senate are of a very high character. A Senator comes to this body as the representative of a great sovereign State, sovereign in every respect except as it has yielded some of its rights to the Federal Government by becoming a part of the Federal Union. The responsibility of a Senator is to the people of his State, and any limitation upon that authority and that responsibility is something which never should be undertaken, and which I think lies entirely outside the power of the Senate, except a Senator has so demeaned himself that some Member of the Senate sees fit to file a charge against him for conduct unworthy a Senator, and bring him to the bar of the Senate for trial.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. I will yield for a question.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. That is all. Does the Senator think that we have no right to investigate a charge made against the Army simply because it was made by a Senator?

Mr. REED. Oh, I have not said that.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. That is what I understood the Senator to say.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Let me answer in a minute. There has been a persistent effort here to put me in a false position. I have not attacked the Army, and I stated so. I attacked certain officers in a certain place. I did not attack the Army.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Certain officers?

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. You can not indict a whole people, and you can not indict an army of 4,000,000 men. I did not undertake to do so, and I said so here on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. The Senator has not attacked certain officers, but uncertain officers.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I am trying to get their names now. I have written to the War Department for them.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Be that as it may, does the Senator from Georgia hold that when he made a charge against officers of the Army, certain or uncertain, the Senate has no right to investigate his charges simply because those charges were made by a Senator?

Mr. REED. That is not the case here.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I understood that to be precisely the statement made by the Senator from Missouri. If I am wrong——

Mr. REED. I do not want to have a quarrel with my friend from Indiana about my phraseology. I did not say that.

Mr. LODGE. Something equivalent to it.

Mr. REED. No; I did not say something equivalent to it. The RECORD will show exactly what I said. I said that a Senator's responsibility is to the people of his State, and that in my opinion the Senate has no right to put him upon his trial unless there is a charge made against him of a character which will warrant the Senate in disciplining him. That is the substance of what I said.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Will my friend yield to me?

Mr. REED. I promised to get through quickly, and I can not yield to have a statement chopped in pieces before I get through making it. Perhaps the Senator will agree with me if he will let me take a moment. But I will yield.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I just want to ask this question: The Senator says he does not believe that a Senator can be placed on his trial. Is there any effort here to try the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. REED. If the Senator will listen a moment I think I can make myself plain, and I am appealing on this question to the Senate on grounds that are absolutely impersonal; that have nothing to do with the particular charge or with the Senator who made it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri yield?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. As chairman of the committee which the Chair appointed, pursuant to a vote of the Senate, I want to disavow any purpose, on my part at least, of putting the Senator from Georgia on trial. The Senator from Georgia earnestly believes, I have no doubt, that the charges he made against the administration of justice or the punishment of alleged offenses in the expeditionary forces were true. I am sure he would not have made them on the floor and reiterated them the next day unless he was thoroughly convinced that they were true. Thereupon the Senate instructed a committee to find out whether the charges are true, whether the alleged facts are true. That is no imputation against the Senator from Georgia. The Senator from Georgia may have been mistakenly informed. His witnesses may be deceiving him. I do not know. It is the purpose of the committee to find out whether the words printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, as uttered by the Senator from Georgia, involving alleged grave offenses by Army officers, are true. That is all there is to it. It is merely an investigation of a question of fact.

Mr. REED. I understand the Senator's position.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. If the charges are true, as stated by the Senator from Georgia, the Army officers who committed the deeds that he stated are murderers and they themselves ought to be hanged.

Mr. REED. If I were going to be subjected to an inquisition or inquiry in any case, there is no man in the world I would rather have sit as president of the court than the Senator from Connecticut. I say that meaning it. But I have not been allowed to state my position, and I am stating it with great seriousness, because I think it involves a great matter.

Now, if I may be permitted to resume, a Senator elected to this body by his State is responsible to the people of his State. I hold that he can, upon the floor of the Senate, make any statement he desires to make and that he is answerable to nobody anywhere for it, provided he has not violated some rule of the Senate or violated the common rules of decency. If he has violated the rules of the Senate or violated the rules of decency, then he must be put directly on his trial by a charge which somebody sees fit to father, and he must be permitted his day in court and his defense. But outside of that he speaks here in his responsibility as a Senator, answerable to his constituents for what he may say.

It is a new custom, if it is to become a custom, that when a Senator makes a statement of fact on the floor immediately some one proposes to have an inquisition as to the truthfulness of his statement. This is not a resolution offered by a Senator to investigate a particular state of facts. It is a resolution which in its very language is to investigate the truth of a statement made by a Senator on this floor in open debate. Here is the resolution:

> Resolved, That a special committee be appointed by the Chair to invite the junior Senator from Georgia to appear before them and to investigate the charges made by him affecting the conduct of the officers of the Army in inflicting punishment upon enlisted men—

And so forth.

A Senator has made a speech. Another Senator rises and proposes to appoint a committee to call that Senator before the committee and to have the committee try and determine whether the statements that he made upon the floor can be substantiated or not. In other words, if this is to become the precedent which we are to follow, then every time a Senator makes a statement upon the floor, instead of being subjected to no other punishment than that which follows the making of a statement which can not be substantiated or that the public do not believe or that the Senate does not believe, although it may be true in every case, we will proceed to have a committee investigate to find out and make a report whether what he said was in fact true.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. Pardon me, just a moment——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. In the Senate of the United States, when a Senator rises in his place on the floor and on his responsibility as a Senator charges that Army officers of the United States have hung men without any authority of law or without any court-martial or any trial, does not the Senator think that it is our duty to find out whether our Army officers are doing such things or not?

Mr. REED. If that is the desire of the Senate, then let the resolution be offered to investigate the conduct of the Army, and not to investigate the speech of the Senator, which is exactly what this resolution in form and manner proposes to do.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. If the Senator will kindly yield to me again, I think it is important at this place to put in the RECORD the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT].

Mr. REED. Oh, I have the resolution.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Senator has the resolution which I offered—to pay the expenses of the committee. I read from the proceedings of the Senate the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin, which appears in the RECORD:

> Mr. LENROOT. * * * So, Mr. President, I move that the Chair appoint a special committee of five Senators to invite the Senator from Georgia to appear before them and to investigate the charges which he has made.

Mr. REED. Exactly.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Senator from Missouri can not claim that when the Senate directs a committee to investigate charges made by a Senator against Army officers they are investigating the Senator or attempting to call him to account.

Mr. REED. I do not think that argument is quite up to the level of the logic that my friend usually employs. A Senator makes a statement on the floor of the Senate and a resolution or motion is offered to invite that Senator before a committee and to investigate the charges made by him. If charges were to be made which a Senator desired to have investigated, he would offer a resolution reciting the facts and demanding an investigation. That is the way charges are made.

Twist this thing as you see fit to twist it, make all the refinements that you want to make, and this is what we are doing: We are establishing the precedent that if a Senator takes the floor and makes a statement of fact, then any Senator is fully warranted in rising immediately and making a motion to investigate the charges made by that Senator and to demand that that Senator shall come before a committee and produce his evidence.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Now, if the Senator will permit me right there, that is the way every investigation that the Senate ever undertook was made. A Senator stands up here and says he is informed in the public prints that there are riots in the Mingo coal district and he asks for an investigation of the matter.

Mr. REED. Exactly; he asks for it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Certainly.

Mr. REED. The difference is that in this case, if a Senator made a speech about the coal mines down there and said something that some other Senator did not like, we would immediately proceed to investigate that Senator's speech.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. A Senator stands up here and alleges on information and belief, or that he has read in the public prints, that the Chicago beef packers are a criminal trust, and he introduces a resolution to investigate and see if they are violating the Sherman law. The Senate adopts it. They do it upon the suggestion of the Senator.

Mr. REED. Certainly. The Senator stands up and makes a charge, and then he asks the Senate——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Or any other Senator may.

Mr. LODGE and Mr. MOSES addressed the Chair.

Mr. REED. Please wait until I get through. He asks the Senate to investigate the charge which he makes. That is one case. The other is where a Senator stands up and makes a speech, and in the speech he makes some statement that is displeasing to some other Member of the Senate, whereupon that other Member of the Senate proposes to investigate that speech. There are two very different propositions.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Senator can not maintain himself, it seems to me, in the position that where a Senator charges that officers of the Army are hanging men without authority of law, that is simply displeasing to a Senator. If that is true, it is the most infamous scandal that has even been whispered upon the honor of the country and the Army which we support for the defense of the country. It is not the question of a speech of a Senator. It is an insult to the flag and the Constitution, if it is not true, and if it is true, the rascals ought to be hunted down and punished.

Mr. REED. The Senator gets away from the point at issue and talks about what he calls the merits of the case. I will come to that point in a moment.

There are two classes of cases, and they are as distinct as two propositions can be. The Senator from Connecticut can rise in his place and say that a certain condition of facts exists in reference to the stock markets of New York City and he can demand an investigation. In that case he makes the charge and he demands an investigation. He is acting within his own right. No one is interfering with that right. But suppose the Senator from Connecticut were to rise and make that charge and I instantly rose and moved that a committee be appointed to investigate the charge and to summon the Senator from Connecticut before a committee to make good his charge, then every Senator who speaks hereafter will know that a majority in the body may at any time summon him before a committee, compel him to go before it and answer to the committee as to the charges he has made. His answer that he has had to make in the past is to the country, to his constituency, and to nobody else.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. I think the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] was on his feet first. I will yield to him and then I shall be glad to yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. LODGE. I only wanted to say that there are a good many precedents for Senators being summoned before committees of the Senate and that there is a power elsewhere than the power of a Senator's State. When I was early in the Senate there was an investigation as to the interests of Senators in sugar stocks in the markets, and every Senator in the body was summoned before a committee of the Senate and obliged to state whether he had been speculating in sugar stocks.

Mr. REED. I remember it.

Mr. LODGE. Very much more recently the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] was chairman of a committee investigating lobbying, and every Senator was summoned before that committee to make a statement as to his own personal interest in property and what personal interest he had. I think the Senate committee had a perfect right to do that, even if it was an implied reflection upon everyone; but the Senate has grown more sensitive, evidently.

Mr. REED. What has that to do with this case?

Mr. LODGE. It seems to be the idea that a Senator can not be invited to come before a Senate committee; that there is something improper and undignified in his going before a committee of the body of which he is a Member.

Mr. REED. That is not the question at all.

Mr. LODGE. That is one of the questions the Senator has raised.

Mr. REED. No; it is not a question I have raised at all.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. Just wait until I get through with this point and then I will yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

The question I raised is not that you call a Senator before a committee to inquire generally of all Senators as to any particular interest he has in particular lobbying influences that may or may not be distasteful to the Senators. The question I raised is the privilege of debate, the penalizing of a man and putting a man upon his trial for a statement he makes in this forum of discussion. That is what you are doing here. You may do it in this instance because the Army is involved. I shall say a word about that in a moment; but that is the point. It is the one point I make, and I say that it is a serious question and one that, no matter how the passions of the moment may be inflamed, should be considered entirely with reference to the effect that it may have in the future, as well, of course, as the merits of the particular matter.

I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. MOSES. I wish to call the Senator's attention to a still more recent precedent, which seems to me almost exactly on all fours with the case the Senator is discussing.

Some few months ago I made a speech in the course of debate here in which I made certain statements with reference to a lobby engaged actively and aggressively here in an effort to continue the embargo upon dyestuffs. Immediately following my remarks the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] took the floor and referred to what I had said as being more or less scandalous in its import; and he followed that statement by introducing a resolution providing for an investigation of the things of which I had spoken in my speech.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I say to the Senator from New Hampshire frankly that it looks in that instance as though the Senate had once before taken this sort of action.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Missouri; I think the Senate has taken such action several times before; but I want to put the question to the Senator in all fairness and with candor: When a Senator thinks he has the evidence which authorizes him to make this kind of charges and the Senate appoints a committee to investigate the charges, does not the Senator think it is proper for the Senate and the committee to invite the Senator to give the information which he has?

Mr. REED. O Mr. President, that depends upon the character of the invitation—the spirit of it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The invitation is contained in the vote of the Senate itself. The committee is simply carrying out what the Senate instructs it to do. We were instructed to invite the Senator from Georgia; and, therefore, I expect when we organize the committee to send him a polite letter extending him the invitation which the Senate commanded us to give him. If I had made a charge involving anybody or anything, and a committee had been appointed to investigate the truth of the charge, I would, of course, expect to go before the committee and give it all the evidence I had.

Mr. REED. Yes, Mr. President, but the point I make is that when a Senator makes a statement on this floor and then a committee is raised for the purpose of finding out whether or not he stated the truth, and haling him before the committee to answer it with his witnesses, that is an entirely new departure. Even the case cited by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES], while in form the same thing, was certainly not inspired by the same motive.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not think the Senator from Missouri ought to put it in that way. This is not an investigation to prove whether or not the Senator from Georgia told the truth. It is an investigation to find the facts, whether the impression that he labors under is a truth or not; not whether the Senator from Georgia is a willful prevaricator, but he may be mistaken. This investigation is to find out what these Army officers did over there. The Senator from Georgia is amply able to take care of himself, I have no doubt.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia and Mr. McCUMBER addressed the Chair.

Mr. REED. I merely wish I might be permitted to finish what I have to say.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri has the floor.

Mr. HEFLIN. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. REED. I can not decline to yield to a Senator, but I wish I might be permitted to finish what I have to say. I have been kept on my feet here for a long time.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, the Senator from Massachusetts cited an instance where Senators were summoned to testify as to whether or not they had speculated in sugar stock. I want to remind the Senator that there is now a case pending before the Senate where a United States Senator is charged with having purchased his seat in this body. A Senate committee has investigated the charge, but has never required that man to appear before the committee to testify as to whether or not he had obtained his seat by such means.

The minority members of that committee sought to have the accused Senator come before the committee and testify, but the majority members refused to have him do so.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I do not want to get into that question.

Mr. McCUMBER. Will the Senator yield to me for just one little suggestion?

Mr. REED. I shall never get through.

Mr. McCUMBER. I know we are both trying to hurry along, and I shall only detain the Senator from Missouri for a moment.

Mr. REED. Very well.

Mr. McCUMBER. I agree with the Senator from Missouri that the motion would have been more proper had it simply been a motion to investigate the facts charged and let the matter end there without specifying what witnesses should be called before the committee and leave the committee to call the witnesses. Of course in this instance probably the first witness who would be summoned would be the Senator who makes the charge. However, is not that something which has already passed? The motion was agreed to without the amendment as suggested. After all it is but an investigation of the facts in the case. Whatever way the committee finds the question will be whether or not the officers have committed the offense charged. We can not now change the motion which has been made. The resolution now offered simply confers authority to call witnesses, to pay them, and to pay the stenographers' fees.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I understand that is the situation. I also understand that the Senate has full authority to discharge the committee and to end this matter, and before we get through with it I think it will be determined that that is the wise course to pursue.

There has been something said about these grave charges against the Army.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the Senator yield there?

Mr. REED. Yes; I will yield. I can not refuse to yield, but I have not been permitted to speak one minute consecutively.

Mr. LENROOT. I know that, but I should like to inquire if it is the Senator's view and his opinion that a charge of this kind when made by a Senator upon his own responsibility should not be investigated by the Senate?

Mr. REED. It is absolutely my opinion that if a Senator makes such a charge upon the floor he makes it upon his own responsibility; that the Senate has no business investigating that Senator for making it unless somebody is prepared to make a charge against the Senator and put him on his trial.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Does the Senator think that Army officers, without being named, the charge simply being made against "Army officers," should be subjected to this charge without any way being provided of determining whether it is well founded or not?

Mr. REED. If the Senator will permit me to proceed for a moment——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I will not interrupt the Senator again.

Mr. REED. I will answer the interrogatory. I am not objecting to interruptions, except that I never can get a statement finished. If any Member of the Senate, on his own motion, saw fit at any time to introduce a resolution to investigate the conduct of the Army, he has the right to do so. The point that I am making is that this is, in substance and effect, in form and in manner, an investigation of the truth of a speech made on the floor of the Senate, and that if we adopt such a course in this instance we may adopt it as to every Senator who makes a statement on this floor.

This matter is not beyond the control of the Senate. I think it very unfortunate that this controversy has arisen at all. A good many things happened during the World War that I do not believe it would do any good to the Army or to the country to rake over. In saying that I am myself not making charges concerning anything; but in the conduct of a great conflict such as we went through, if the veil were to be lifted as to everything that happened, I am afraid in many instances reputations would be sacrificed and a tarnish put upon those who conducted our military affairs. That is, perhaps, inseparable from the conduct of any great war; and I do not want to be misconstrued in what I am saying. I know, for instance, that certain things transpired that it is just as well not to have mentioned, and I have not mentioned them. They have no relation to cruelty, they have no relation to the charges which have now been made, but I know of telegrams that passed between headquarters and other places that I do not think ought to be blazoned to the world to-day. When one of these investigations is started it is very likely to bring out a lot of matter that will do the Army no good.

You had better think about it a little before you enter upon it, and think about it especially in the light I have suggested. Are we going to establish the precedent that if the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON], whom I very much esteem, were to make a charge, for instance, in a speech here that the Democratic Party had done something in some State, immediately, if the Democrats were in the majority, they would pass a resolution to investigate and to call the Senator before that committee and require him to make good his charges?

I have heard the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] make charges in regard to trusts and combinations and monopolies, which he believed to be true, and which probably were true, but it would have taken six months or a year and the whole Department of Justice to have brought forward the evidence. So if we are going to establish this as a precedent, let us all understand hereafter that when we make a charge, instead of making it on our own responsibility and our responsibility to our own States and our own communities and our own people, we are making it with the understanding that we have got to go to trial right away on the truth of the statement we have made.

I simply offer the suggestion, and I would have made it in a few minutes but for the interruptions which have ensued. I also offer the suggestion, and I do so in all sincerity, whether it is wise now to start an investigation of this kind. I would not want a subpœna served on me to bring some telegrams that I have in my possession. I think it is better the country knows nothing about some matters, and all Senators, I think, will be of the same opinion if they will turn this matter over in their minds. I thank the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia will state his question of personal privilege.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, the senior Senator from Massachusetts——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. If the Senator from Georgia will permit me to ask a parliamentary question, I should like to know whether the resolution is open to amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia has risen to a question of personal privilege and has been recognized.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], without intending to do so, I am sure, put me in the same category as those who are accused of taking bribes here on the floor of the Senate to influence their votes. That is the kind of Senators that have been investigated in this body. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES] did not mend the matter when he made mention of the lobby operating in behalf of the dyestuff industry. In that case the essence of the charge, Mr. President, was that those lobbyists were corrupting Senators on the floor, and were, therefore, adopting criminal methods. If they were in fact corrupting Senators here and gaining votes by money, the Senators so influenced deserved expulsion, and I would have been one of the Senators who upon proper testimony would have voted to expel them. But, Mr. President, every one of the charges I made was made on the floor of the Senate in December, 1918, a month or so after the armistice. They were made by Senator Chamberlain, and they were based partly upon the official reports of Surg. Gen. Gorgas. They were based partly upon letters of President Wilson. They were based upon reports that came to him from the War Department and from France that a court-martial was no court-martial at all, but that the officer directed the court-martial what to do, and the court-martial had a man shot if the officer wanted him shot, and in this case they had him hanged if the officer wanted him hanged.

Why did they build the gallows if not to use it? Why hide it away if they did not have something to hide?

Mr. President, I hope Senators will allow me the justice to say that during the few short hours that have passed since this charge was flung at me and this demand made on me by the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] I have received from Tampa, Fla., from Philadelphia, and from New York confirmation of the very charges which he denied, and which Senator Chamberlain made; and I am told that photographs of similar gallows, erected elsewhere, are in the mails now, on their way to me here in Washington. They probably will be in my possession to-morrow. Necessarily, it will take me a few days, possibly a week or two, to get in the signed statements and affidavits of these ex-service men, and some who are still in the service. I will deal fairly and squarely with the Senate. I will not shirk a single issue. I will not deal in anything that is unmanly or unfair; but my honor is at stake, and I hold that higher than I hold my life.

As I said before, this charge was brought against me here openly on the floor of the Senate, in the hearing of the whole country, and I am going to fight it out with the Senator from New York right here on the floor of the Senate, in the hearing of the whole country.

Mr. NEW, Mr. HEFLIN, and Mr. CALDER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In response to the inquiry of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], the Chair desires to say that the resolution is not open to amendment at this time. It has been referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. When it is returned to the Senate the Senate can make any disposition of it that it sees fit, either by way of amendment, or adoption, or rejection, or reference to any committee to which it may desire to refer it.

TAX REVISION.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8245) to reduce and equalize taxation, to amend and simplify the revenue act of 1918, and for other purposes.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and open to amendment.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I have two amendments that I desire to offer.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President——

Mr. CALDER. Will the Senator yield to me to report back the resolution just introduced by the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. ASHURST. I call for the regular order.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I have just yielded for something that it was said would require no debate, and it has taken two hours.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Dakota has the floor.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I have a couple of small amendments which I desire to offer. One is on page 178, line 18. After the semicolon insert:

> Except that upon any finished sirups intended to be used in the manufacture of carbonated beverages sold by the manufacturer or producer in bottles or other closed containers there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid on each gallon of sirup manufactured and so used a tax of 5 cents per gallon.

Under the amendment as adopted by the Senate there is a charge of 7½ cents per gallon upon fountain sirups of all kinds. These fountain sirups are used in two ways. One way is to serve them from the soda fountains in our drug stores. The sirup passes directly from the manufacturer to the soda fountain, where it is sold in drinks, mixed with carbonated waters. The other way is to sell the sirup to the bottlers who make the pink and yellow pop, and so forth. They make their decoction, put it in bottles, then the bottles are sold to the dealer, and the dealer sells it to the consumer.

We regard this tax of 7½ cents upon the bottlers at least as being extremely heavy; so I have provided that where the sirup is sold for this bottling purpose—and, as the Senators know, in all cases these bottles are sold for 5 cents apiece, whereas the soda fountain receives from 5 to 10 cents without having to go through the secondary process—the tax shall be reduced to 5 cents, so that it will be 5 cents per gallon if sold to the bottler, where it has to be made and resold to the dealer and resold again by the dealer, and in the other instance the tax of 7½ cents per gallon will be retained.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I am very glad that the Senator in charge of the bill has proposed this amendment, and I hope it may be adopted. I have had a great many letters about this matter. The bottlers complain very greatly about the tax of 7½ cents. I think the reduction is not more than should be made; in fact, I think it is hardly as much as should be made.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator whether that reaches the case of Coca-Cola and what might be denominated, perhaps improperly, synthetic or chemically prepared compounds used for beverage purposes?

Mr. McCUMBER. No; it does not. It simply covers the ordinary sirups used in the soda fountains and used for flavoring, and so forth, by the pop manufacturers and the manufacturers of different bottled goods that are sold to the consumer for a nickel a bottle.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have an amendment which I have not with me—I have sent for it—and I am not sure whether it relates to this section or not. If the Senator's amendment shall be adopted, I will ask the Senator to consent to reopening the section for the purpose of permitting me to present an amendment to it.

Mr. McCUMBER. It can be presented anyway, even without the reopening.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER], who is at present in charge of the bill on the floor of the Senate for the Finance Committee, for some information with regard to the amendment he has just offered.

On pages 177 and 178 of the bill I observe the provisions about the sale of bottled soda water and the sale of soda water from fountains, as the bill came from the House, and I observe that the Senate committee recommended some small changes on page 177—for instance, in line 8, changing the tax there provided from 4 cents to 2 cents per gallon. I understand that that amendment has been adopted, as well as the amendment recommended by the Senate committee on page 178.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes.

Mr. MYERS. What is it that the Senator proposes to do now? I should like to get a clear understanding of his proposal.

Mr. McCUMBER. On the next page, page 178, subdivision (e) reads:

> Upon all finished or fountain sirups of the kinds used in manufacturing, compounding, or mixing drinks commonly known as soft drinks, sold by the manufacturer, producer, or importer, a tax of 7½ cents per gallon; except that where any person manufacturing carbonated beverages or conducting a soda fountain, ice cream parlor, or other similar place of business manufactures any sirups of the kinds described in this subdivision, there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid on each gallon manufactured and used in the preparation of soft drinks a tax of 7½ cents per gallon.

Then I insert here:

> Except that upon any finished sirups intended to be used in the manufacture of carbonated beverages sold by the manufacturer or producer in bottles or other closed containers there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid on each gallon of sirup manufactured and so used a tax of 5 cents per gallon.

In other words, it is intended to cover those cases where there are one or two intermediate sales between the manufacture of the sirup and its sale for consumption, rather than a single sale where it is sold for consumption at the soda fountains.

Mr. MYERS. As I understood, those portions of the bill embodied on pages 177, 178, and 179, as they came to the Senate from the committee, the intention was to equalize the tax on the manufacturers of bottled soda water and the tax on dealers in soda water from soda fountains. That was the intention, was it not, to put them about on an equal footing?

Mr. McCUMBER. There was an attempt to place all on as nearly an equal footing as the committee at that time thought they could place them.

Mr. MYERS. The Senate has adopted the committee amendments in these particulars. I am right in that statement, am I not?

Mr. McCUMBER. In those particulars; yes.

Mr. MYERS. But the Senator is submitting a further amendment.

Mr. McCUMBER. A further amendment; yes.

Mr. MYERS. Does the Senator think that would further tend to equalize the manufacturers and the fountain dealers in soda water, and put them more nearly on an equal footing?

Mr. McCUMBER. I think it would. I think it is a matter of justice to them.

Mr. MYERS. The Senator thinks it would do justice to all alike?

Mr. McCUMBER. I think so. The Senator knows that these bottled goods, like the pops and the different kinds of soft drinks sold in bottles, are sold, as a rule, for 5 cents a bottle, and are manufactured to sell for that price. The manufacturers of these carbonated articles which are sold as I have suggested must first purchase their sirups; then they are converted into the goods which are bottled or put in containers; then they are sold to the dealer, and the dealer sells to the consumer; where at the soda fountains they are purchased directly from the manufacturer of the sirup, and do not have to pass through these hands, and the soda-fountain proprietor generally receives 10 cents instead of 5 cents; but in either event he has had considerable of an advantage over the bottler.

It may be possible that in conference we may have to decide to balance or equalize something else, but I think this will make the tax operate more fairly than under the committee amendment.

Mr. MYERS. The Senator's idea, then, is to equalize the taxation on these two classes of people, is it? That is the object of his amendment?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; and to make it possible for these bottlers to continue in business; and, of course, in order to continue in business they must be able to produce a drink that they can sell for 5 cents a bottle, and that will not cost them so much that they can not compete with the drug stores.

Mr. MYERS. There has been a good deal of apprehension amongst the manufacturers of bottled soda water in the country lest Congress put upon them such a burden that they could not compete with those who retail soda water out of fountains. I am interested in seeing the manufacturers of bottled soft drinks have an equal show with the retailers who sell out of fountains. There should be no discrimination against them. Many manufacturers of bottled soft drinks have thousands of dollars invested in their business and it would be very unfair to discriminate against them. In some cases it would be confiscation of their property. I want to see them have an equal show and a fair deal. That is all I ask. That is all they ask. I have followed this closely, and I believe the committee wants to give the manufacturers a fair deal. There should be no discrimination between the manufacturer and the dealer who sells from the fountain. The Senator's idea is to avoid anything of that kind, is it?

Mr. McCUMBER. It is.

Mr. MYERS. I am glad to know it. I accept his assurance that his amendment would carry out that idea. That being the case, I am for it.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is one of the purposes of the amendment.

Mr. MYERS. I thank the Senator for the information.

Mr. BROUSSARD. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Would the amendment have the effect of doubling the tax on the sirup?

Mr. McCUMBER. No; it reduces it.

Mr. BROUSSARD. There is no duplication of taxes, then?

Mr. McCUMBER. No; it simply reduces it. Now it is all 7½ cents per gallon. This provides that if it is used for the purpose of making these bottled goods the tax shall be only 5 cents instead of 7½.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I have only one more amendment, which is very short. It is found on pages 178 and 179.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from North Dakota send the amendment to the desk, so that it can be read?

Mr. KING. May I interrupt the Senator for a moment?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. KING. While we are discussing pages 177 and 178, dealing with beverages, I would like to suggest an amendment I have dealing with the same paragraph.

Mr. McCUMBER. I have one also, and I think I can dispose of this in just a few minutes.

Mr. KING. I was wondering if, while we were considering these sections, I could offer my amendment.

Mr. McCUMBER. This is an amendment to the same section. My amendment is to strike out the figure "5," on line 2, page 179, and insert in lieu thereof the figure "3." The bill as it came from the House placed a duty of 5 cents per pound upon carbonic acid gas sold by the manufacturer, producer, or importer to a manufacturer of any carbonated beverages, and so forth. That carbonic acid gas is sold in the market at from 8 to 10 cents per pound, and this places a duty upon it, therefore, of from 50 to 60 per cent of its value. I think that is rather heavy, and in order to bring it into conference, in order that we may have a reconsideration of it in conference, and make any further adjustment that may be necessary, I am asking to reduce it to 3 cents, cutting off 2 cents per pound.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if I may have the attention of the Senator from North Dakota, I have had printed several amendments relating to this subject, and if the Senator from North Dakota will give me his attention I should be very glad to have his views regarding them. I will say very frankly that I am not sufficiently advised as to the effect of these amendments as to determine whether they should be adopted. Much has been said to me in favor of them, and there have been some objections.

The amendments which I offer are for the purpose of correcting what I conceive to be a discrimination, in that the bill permits Coca-Cola and chemically prepared sirups and essences to have the same advantages, to be subject to the same taxes, as unfermented juices and cereal beverages, and the amendments which I offer are for the purpose of imposing upon Coca-Cola and upon chemically prepared essences and sirups a higher tax.

Not being a member of the Finance Committee I have not had the advantage of the information conveyed to the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator send his proposed amendment to the desk, so that it may be read by the Secretary and a record kept?

Mr. KING. I offer the following amendment, and I shall be glad to have the views of the Senator from North Dakota upon it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 177, line 14, after the word "sugar," insert: "a tax of 2 cents per gallon," and strike out the words "and upon" and insert the word "Upon."

Page 177, line 20, strike out the words "2 cents" and in place thereof insert "6 cents."

Page 178, line 11, after the word "gallon," insert the following: "but if manufactured, compounded, or mixed by the use of concentrate, essence, extract, or imitation fruit juice, the tax shall be 22½ cents per gallon."

Page 178, line 18, after the word "gallon," insert "or 22½ cents per gallon, respectively."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the purpose of the amendment is to differentiate between unfermented fruit juices and cereal beverages, and Coca-Cola and chemically prepared sirups and essences. It occurred to me, when the matter was first up for consideration, particularly in view of the enormous profits on Coca-Cola and some of these chemically prepared sirups and essences, that there ought to be a distinction in the taxes imposed, that the unfermented juices and the cereal beverages, concededly harmless and perhaps beneficial, ought not to pay the same tax as Coca-Cola and chemically prepared beverages.

I made some inquiry of Mr. McCoy, and he suggested, I will say very frankly, that these distinctions, if any distinctions at all are made, would perhaps be fair. So I have offered these amendments, the effect of which would be to provide that upon all imitations of any such fruit juices and upon all carbonated beverages, commonly known as soft drinks, which are imitations, except those described in subdivision (a), manufactured, compounded, or mixed by the use of concentrate, essence, or extract, instead of fountain sirup sold by the manufacturer, producer, or importer, a tax of 6 cents per gallon.

The first amendment of 2 cents a gallon merely carries up to line 14 the 2 cents per gallon found in line 20, then applies 6 cents a gallon to these imitations, which would reach Coca-Cola and chemically prepared beverages.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I can not see why there should be any difference made in the matter of taxes between Coca-Cola and some of these other beverages. When it comes to the cereal beverages, that raises an entirely different question. The committee investigated the matter and found that the expense of producing the cereal beverages was enormously greater than the expense of producing these other beverages, and therefore they provided a lower tax upon those beverages which cost the most to put upon the market, and which, of course, were sold in competition.

Let us take, for instance, what we call near beer. I am informed that it is more expensive to make that than actual beer, because it is made in the same way; then, in addition to that, it has to go through a process of having the alcohol extracted from it, so that it will comply with the prohibition law. But it is sold, and sold in competition with ginger ale, sarsaparilla, and pops of many colors and flavors, which cost nothing like as much to manufacture. That was the reason the Senate committee tried to get this as nearly correct as it could.

Mr. KING. I think the Senator is under a misapprehension as to the effect of my amendment. It is not attacking in any way the cereal beverages, including near beer, and I am not seeking to change the figures recommended by the committee, and which have been agreed upon. I am attacking only those provisions of the bill which relate to Coca-Cola and chemically prepared essences, not cereal beverages.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is the reason I was asking the Senator why he differentiated between Coca-Cola and sarsaparilla, or any of the other beverages which are sold from the same fountain as Coca-Cola. Coca-Cola has nothing poisonous in it. The foundation is the extract from tea dust. I suppose that that is supposed to have some medicinal qualities, at least it is advertised as having them. I do not know whether it does have them or not, but I have heard no testimony that would justify the committee in making any difference between the tax on a glass of Coca-Cola and the tax on a glass of sarsaparilla.

Mr. KING. I regret that the junior Senator from Georgia is not here. The Senator from North Dakota will recall the statements which he made relative to the deleterious effects flowing from the habitual use of Coca-Cola. I do know that a number of years ago coca leaves were employed in the preparation of Coca-Cola, and that there was a narcotic in the leaf, and that some one representing the Government placed Coca-Cola, at least temporarily, upon the black list; but later, I am advised, the narcotic, whatever it was, was eliminated; but they still use some form of coca leaves, as well as tea leaves, in the preparation of Coca-Cola.

Mr. McKELLAR. I wish to call the Senator's attention to the fact that this matter has gone through all of the courts, and that the Supreme Court of the United States has decided that question against the contention suggested by the Senator from Utah. It has been judicially determined, in so far as Coca-Cola is concerned.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will pardon me, I do not think the Supreme Court has decided against my contention. I am merely stating that years ago it was found that there was cocaine or some other very deleterious drug in Coca-Cola.

Later the Coca-Cola Co., in order to meet the requirements of the Bureau of Chemistry, which has to do with the enforcement of the pure food and drugs law, made modifications in the formula and eliminated the drug which had been found to be deleterious; but it is known that the present formula contains caffeine and tea leaves, and coca leaves are still employed in the manufacture of Coca-Cola. The Senator from Georgia stated upon the floor of the Senate that the use of Coca-Cola in its present form was deleterious.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, all I can say is that not only was the charge made by the Government that there were in Coca-Cola narcotics of some sort or drugs of some sort that were deleterious to the health of the people who drank it, but they brought a suit, and a large amount of evidence was taken, and the matter as thoroughly examined into as it is possible to examine into such a matter by the courts of the country, and, so far as I know, after a fair and impartial trial, it went to the Supreme Court of the United States finally, and it was determined by that court that the Government's contentions were unfounded. That is all I know about it.

Mr. KING. I believe that Coca-Cola ought to be differentiated from harmless cereal beverages and unfermented juices. I would impose a heavier tax upon it and upon other essences of a kindred character than I would upon cereal beverages or unfermented juices.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the amendment offered by the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, may I have the attention of the Senators in charge of the bill to a matter which has been brought to my attention, and which is found on page 225, beginning at line 13? It has to do with the tax on narcotics.

It seems under the existing law, which I understand is not to be changed, or if a change be made the change does not affect the matter which I wish to touch upon, that a tax of 1 cent an ounce is levied upon opium, coca leaves, any compound, salt, derivative, or preparation thereof, produced in or imported into the United States. The existence of that tax is, of course, well known, and to a considerable degree it is meant to be regulatory, but, of course, being a revenue measure, it is contained in the revenue law.

This state of affairs has been brought to my attention. The Treasury Department, according to my information, has ruled that on account of the inclusion of the word "preparation" in line 15, and this is the wording of the existing law, any medicine which contains as one of its component parts opium or coca leaves or any compound or salt or derivative thereof is taxed at the rate of 1 cent per ounce for the entire preparation.

Mr. KING. Does that include paregoric?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I can not say what happens in the case of paregoric. I do not know.

The result is that the pure opium or coca leaves, if manufactured and sold in their original state, pay 16 cents a pound or 1 cent an ounce. Of course in that form they are most desired by addicts, but when they are contained in a legitimate medicine prescribed by a physician the price of that medicine is immensely enhanced, because, according to the ruling of the Treasury Department, so my information runs, the entire medicine is taxed at the rate of 1 cent an ounce because it contains a fractional part of one of these drugs.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I think that the Senator's argument is similar to that which was made against a preparation containing vinous liquors.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is exactly the same situation.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I think the Senator is correct so far as that is concerned.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not assert my observation here to be conclusive, and I know that this is a part of the statute which we should very carefully consider before we amend it; but as part of my observation on this point I merely wish to lay before the Senate these facts which have been presented to me by a person particularly expert in the administering of drugs and medicines.

Under the existing state of affairs there is a tax of 16 cents on 1 pound of crystals, the form in which the drug is commonly sold by the manufacturer and wholesale dealer. That is thoroughly understood. Assuming that the crystal was the element which goes to make up morphine sulphate, on 1 pound of crystals when prepared as a sirup or elixir or as an added ingredient of a medicinal fluid, each teaspoonful of which contains one average dose as customarily prescribed by physicians for the sick, there is a tax of $70. The entire medicine is taxed, although there is but a tiny ingredient of the drug, which in its pure form is taxed 16 cents a pound.

On codine sulphate I am informed the tax upon the crystals will be 16 cents and for the medicine which contains it in small part $17.50.

On morphine the tax would be 16 cents per pound for the original crystals and $155 on the medicine containing the crystals.

The spread in cost due to the tax, of course, is immense, and is has been contended to me that the tax as at present interpreted by the Treasury Department bears with an exceedingly heavy hand upon the sick man to whom is prescribed a medicine which contains a tiny portion of one of these drugs, and, of course, many of the most valuable and entirely legitimate medicines do contain them.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator whether this tax upon the concentrated form, upon coca leaves or the primary product before it is manufactured into these various forms in which it is used, is sufficiently heavy?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not know. I have never studied that question at all.

Mr. KING. It seems to me that the Senator's argument must lead to an emendation. The only question I had in mind was whether the primary product was sufficiently taxed.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I merely wish to lay this suggestion before the Senate. I was going to suggest an amendment which, on line 15, page 225, would strike out the words "or preparations" and place the word "or" immediately after the word "salt" so that it would read "any compound, salt or derivitative thereof"; and then lower down, at the end of line 18, after the word "ounce," insert the words "of opium, coca leaves, or any salt or derivative thereof"; and on line 19, after the word "ounce," insert the words "of the aforesaid drugs."

It would then read as follows:

That there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid upon opium, coca leaves, any compound, salt or derivative thereof, produced in or imported into the United States and sold, or removed for consumption or sale, an internal-revenue tax at the rate of 1 cent per ounce of opium, coca leaves, or any salt or derivative thereof, and any fraction of an ounce of the aforesaid drug in a package shall be taxed as an ounce—

And so forth.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator whether he is right in his construction? Is the word "derivative" the antecedent of the word "thereof"? It seems to me the antecedent of "thereof" is "preparation." I am not sure whether there may be a derivative thereof.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Oh, yes; I imagine chemically there can be a derivative of any one of these salts.

Mr. KING. It seems to me the word "thereof" is attached to the word "preparation."

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. NELSON. I wish to give the Senator a little information as to what this Coca-Cola really is. We had a case in the Supreme Court of the United States in 1915 where the decision of Justice Hughes stated rather in detail what Coca-Cola really is, as follows:

> In the present case, the article belongs to a familiar group; it is a sirup. It was originally called "Coca-Cola sirup and extract." It is produced by melting sugar, the analysis showing that 52.64 per cent of the product is sugar and 42.63 per cent is water. Into the sirup thus formed by boiling the sugar there are introduced coloring, flavoring, and other ingredients in order to give the sirup a distinctive character. The caffeine, as has been said, is introduced in the second or third "melting." We see no escape from the conclusion that it is an "added" ingredient within the meaning of the statute.

It is principally sugar and water, with a little flavor of coca leaves.

Mr. KING. And caffeine.

Mr. NELSON. Yes; and a little caffeine. I believe lately they have changed the name. This decision was adverse to the company, and the case was sent back for a new trial. In other words, Justice Hughes, who wrote the opinion, held that there was evidence to go to a jury as to whether it was not adulterated; whether they had not made some unwholesome addition to it. What the result of the second trial has been I do not know, but this is what it is—sugar and water and a little coca and some caffeine.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I believe the Senator from Pennsylvania has a suggestion to make.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, this is rather a complicated matter. I have no doubt there is much weight in the thought which prompts the Senator from New York. In the opinion of the committee which carefully considered the subject it was thought that this provision was regulatory and for the purpose of giving jurisdiction to the Department of Internal Revenue over these drugs. I suggest that the Senator from New York withhold his amendment for a short time until I can submit some information for his more careful scrutiny than is possible in open debate.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am willing to withdraw it for a short time. May I offer a comment upon another section of the bill while I am on my feet?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment offered by the Senator from New York is withdrawn.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I wish to ask the chairman of the committee concerning an amendment which appears near the bottom of page 247 and which has to do with the tax to be imposed upon marine insurance.

I can not boast of knowing all about the marine-insurance problem, but as I understand the present law imposes a tax of 1 per cent upon marine insurance placed with American companies and a tax of 3 per cent upon marine insurance placed with foreign companies. I further understand that the bill eliminates the tax of 1 per cent to be imposed upon insurance placed with domestic companies and leaves a tax of 3 per cent upon marine insurance placed with foreign companies. There are certain aspects of a subsidy about that situation. I was wondering upon what theory we were proceeding in a tax bill to discriminate in the matter of marine-insurance policies in such a way as to compel the owners of American vessels and of American cargoes to pay a higher rate for their marine insurance, which is certainly the effect of this provision.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator from New York that all domestic companies are now taxed under this bill on their incomes, and the change that was made was made to equalize all insurance companies as nearly as possible. The foreign company does not pay any tax upon its income at all, and there would be a discrimination against the domestic companies unless we made this change.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the foreign company pay no tax of any kind in this country?

Mr. SMOOT. On its income it does not.

Mr. WADSWORTH. What will be the effect of this on marine insurance rates? Will it not be to raise them?

Mr. SMOOT. I think it will raise the rates just the same as the rates of domestic companies are now raised because of their being compelled to pay the tax upon income rather than upon their premiums.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am a devotee of the protective tariff, but I did not expect to find an element of the protective tariff in a revenue bill. However, I may be wrong. This occurs to me to be a method which is devised to compel American shipowners and cargo owners to insure with American marine insurance companies.

Mr. SMOOT. There is a little of that element in it, I will say to the Senator, but at least it prevents the discrimination that is in the existing law, for as the law stands to-day the foreign company has an advantage over the domestic company.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I do not know that I can command the terms to express the operations of marine insurance or any other kind of insurance, but is it not a fact that a marine insurance company can place a policy upon a vessel or a cargo to a very large amount, and then, as it were, farm out some of it to another company or reinsure it?

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that that is the usual practice.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes. The matter has been called to my attention on that line.

Mr. SMOOT. That same principle is followed by all fire insurance companies, and frequently by life insurance companies in the United States, and, indeed, all over the world; in other words, a fire insurance company will take a risk upon the buildings in a certain district of a certain city, but that fire insurance company is certainly not going to carry all of that risk. It divides the risk so that in case a great conflagration ever occurs in any one district, its liabilities will be limited. All of the insurance companies are pursuing the same policy, thus virtually spreading the insurance over all sections of the country so that if there is a great fire in any section all of the companies in the United States bear their proportion of the loss.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am not criticizing that policy, of course.

Mr. SMOOT. It is the same with the marine insurance companies.

Mr. WADSWORTH. This state of affairs has been submitted to me, and I thought I would ask the Senators on the Finance Committee what they thought about it:

> As the bill does not include reinsurance premiums, you will readily see it would permit of American underwriters writing insurance on vessels for larger amounts than they would ordinarily retain, and at higher rates, owing to the foreign discrimination, and reinsuring the excess over what they would retain with foreign underwriters, as they could do so without paying the tax.

Mr. SMOOT. I think there is one mistake in the statement which the Senator from New York has just read, though the remainder of it is, perhaps, correct. I refer to the statement as to higher rates being charged. I do not see how the proposed legislation could have that effect.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It will enable them to write at higher rates. The American companies do write at higher rates; and that is the purpose of this tax.

Mr. SMOOT. But the American companies pay a higher tax; they are assessed at a higher rate; and they, therefore, ought to get a higher rate; at least enough to put them on a footing of equality with the foreign companies.

Mr. WADSWORTH. But it is not proposed to tax reinsurance?

Mr. SMOOT. No; it is not proposed to tax reinsurance.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That, I think, is what causes the trouble.

Mr. SMOOT. If we taxed reinsurance, we might as well retain the existing law.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is a very grave question whether or not we want to increase the cost of operating the American merchant marine. That is the point.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say to the Senator that before the stamp tax was imposed, we never got a cent out of these companies; they did not pay one single, solitary penny of tax into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator yield to me for just a moment in connection with this question?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I think the statement of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] relative to the fact that foreign insurance companies have an advantage over our insurance companies is entirely true. We had a hearing before the Committee on Commerce in reference to a bill allowing insurance companies to incorporate under a general law here in the District of Columbia. Many of the representatives of American companies appeared before the committee, and they universally complained that they were at a disadvantage, so far as taxation is concerned, in comparison with the foreign companies. They claimed they were subject to more taxation and had less privileges than had the foreign companies. The committee endeavored to help that situation in the bill which was then before them and which, I think, is now on the calendar.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It may be that the foreign insurance companies in the United States do not pay taxes which are equal to those paid by domestic concerns; but is it a fact that the total taxation imposed upon foreign companies by their home Governments in Europe or elsewhere is less than the taxation paid by American companies?

Mr. SMOOT. In some cases it may be less and in others not; but the only companies that are affected by this will be companies which have no agent in the United States. The United States can not touch them in any way, because of the fact that they have no agent here. If this provision is not put into the law, of course, those companies will go scot-free of taxation.

Mr. WADSWORTH. In other words, the American shipowner is to pay this tax in order that the American marine insurance companies shall be able to compete against the foreign companies?

Mr. SMOOT. That is one object of the amendment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is it. Now, the question is which is the more to be considered—the American merchant marine or the American marine insurance companies? We are struggling pretty hard, may I say to the Senator, to enable our ships to carry cargoes throughout the world, and if we are going to enact revenue laws here which compel American ships to pay higher insurance rates, I think we had better know what we are doing.

Mr. SMOOT. I am going to ask the Senate to reconsider the vote by which, on page 36, there was stricken out paragraph 8, which had reference to the tax on foreign shipping. I have a communication here from the State Department transferring to me the protests of foreign countries and indicating that if the action proposed is taken there will be retaliatory legislation passed by other countries at once.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I am very much tempted to move to strike out paragraph 15 on page 247.

Mr. SMOOT. I hope the Senator will not do that.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not want to do anything that would be destructive of any legitimate interest, but, for one, I am not quite satisfied with the explanation of the purpose of this paragraph. Of course, I can well understand why American marine insurance companies like this proposal, which puts a tax of 3 per cent on all their competitors, but the American merchant vessel owner and cargo owner will have to pay it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will suggest that there is no question pending before the Senate.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I move to strike out the paragraph to which I have referred.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion of the Senator from New York is not in order. It will first be necessary to reconsider the vote by which the amendment proposed by the committee has been adopted. Then the question will be upon agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I have suggested the absence of a quorum, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The principal legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Harreld	McKinley	Simmons
Brandegee	Harris	McLean	Smoot
Broussard	Heflin	McNary	Spencer
Cameron	Johnson	Moses	Stanfield
Capper	Jones, N. Mex.	Myers	Stanley
Caraway	Jones, Wash.	Nelson	Sterling
Cummins	Kendrick	New	Sutherland
Curtis	Kenyon	Newberry	Swanson
Dial	Keyes	Norbeck	Townsend
Ernst	King	Oddie	Trammell
Fernald	La Follette	Overman	Wadsworth
Fletcher	Lenroot	Penrose	Watson, Ga.
Gerry	Lodge	Poindexter	Watson, Ind.
Gooding	McCumber	Reed	Willis
Hale	McKellar	Sheppard

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty-nine Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, was my amendment out of order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment offered by the Senator from New York was out of order.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which that paragraph was adopted as a committee amendment be reconsidered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York asks unanimous consent that the vote by which paragraph 15 on page 247 was agreed to shall be reconsidered. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the vote is reconsidered. The Senator from New York now offers an amendment which will be stated.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I ask the Senate to disagree to the committee amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment proposed by the committee.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, perhaps I had better call the attention of the Senate to the history of this legislation.

In the former law there was imposed upon all American marine insurance a tax on the premium paid. The American companies complained bitterly that they were discriminated against, and they were discriminated against. They asked for some protection against this class of marine company: They have a man in London or in Paris or in Berlin, and the insurance is obtained by writing letters from the headquarters of these companies in London, Paris, or Berlin. They do not send an agent to the United States to look after the business in the United States, with an office in the United States. If they did that they would be taxed under the provisions of the law, but they never come here, as I say, and open an office. Therefore, they can not be taxed here in any way. This amendment is partially to protect the American company—and I think it does—as against foreigners doing business just as I have stated.

It is true that we have changed that form of taxation in this bill, and instead of imposing the tax upon the premiums paid we now impose the tax upon the net gains of the company. If the experts are correct in their estimates, we will collect a little more money from this form of taxation than we did when we imposed the tax upon the premiums, and to that extent there is a little advantage to the American companies; but if we strike out paragraph 15 or disagree to it, as requested by the Senator from New York, I want to say now that the companies in America will have competition that is liable to drive them out of business, and if we drive them out of business we will not only lose the tax that they would pay but we will interfere also with our shipping industry in the United States.

Therefore, Mr. President, I hope that the Senate will again agree to the committee amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I offer the amendment, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 49, in line 10, it is proposed to strike out "18" and in lieu thereof to insert "20."

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, this amendment is similar to one previously offered by me to-day to this paragraph, except that this amendment fixes the age limit upon which the exemption may be made up to 20 years, while the previous amendment that I offered provided that it should be up to 21 years.

The bill in this particular provides that an exemption of $400 shall be made on account of dependent children under the age of 18 years. I have been unable to determine, and no one has explained, why the arbitrary age of 18 was selected. It is not in keeping with the conditions and the reason upon which the exemption should be made. To say that parents should have this exemption only for children up to the time that they reach their eighteenth birthday means, of course, that it is the purpose and the object of Congress to assist the family to that extent as long as the responsibility of the care and education of the child devolves upon the parents; but we all know that, as a matter of fact, the average boy and girl up to the eighteenth birthday—because the provision says "under 18 years of age"—is no greater responsibility upon the parents than between the ages of 17 and 20 or 21, especially if the children are to be given anything more than a very ordinary public-school education. It is very seldom that any boy or girl enters upon collegiate work prior to the eighteenth birthday, yet under this provision parents are not allowed any exemption whatever for their children after the eighteenth birthday.

As stated in remarks previously made to-day upon this subject, it is especially in the interest of the citizen who can scarcely afford to give his children a collegiate education that I offer this amendment. As far as the rich are concerned, those who are amply able to send their children to college, it makes no particular difference to them one way or the other whether you make this exemption; but in the case of the struggling man or woman trying to give their boys or their girls an education further than an ordinary public-school or high-school education, the tax imposed upon them when they place them in college after they have reached their eighteenth birthday is an imposition which I think Congress should not make.

We have afforded all kinds of relief in this bill to those who are far more able to pay their taxes than many of the parents of this country who are struggling to educate their children. I think that in fairness and in justice, in the interest of education, this age limit should be raised at least to 20 years, and that the exemption should apply up to 20 years. For that reason I have offered this amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 37, line 3, it is proposed to reconsider and disagree to the amendment already adopted, and on page 37, after line 10, to insert the following new paragraph:

(9) The receipts of shipowners' mutual protection and indemnity associations, not organized for profit, and no part of the net earnings of which inures to the benefit of any private stockholder or member, but such corporations shall be subject as other persons to the tax upon their net income from interest, dividends, and rents.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, prior to 1917 it was necessary for American shipowners to go to foreign indemnity associations to obtain the class of insurance that is now furnished by the class of companies covered by this amendment. Ninety per cent of American shipping is included in one association, called the American Steamship Owners' Mutual Protection & Indemnity Association (Inc.). Seventy per cent of the vessels of that association are covered by the United States Shipping Corporation. Assessments are paid by all the companies whose vessels are included and by the United States Shipping Corporation, in proportion to tonnage, to indemnify them against certain losses which are not covered by the ordinary classes of marine insurance.

For instance, this indemnity or insurance covers personal injury to or loss of life of any person, whether on board the vessel or not; second, illness of passengers or crew; damage to other vessels, otherwise than by collision, damage by collision being covered by the ordinary marine insurance; damage to docks or any other property, excepting damage to other vessels by collision; damage to cargo or shortage of cargo; extraordinary quarantine expenses; customs and immigration fines and penalties arising from neglect of officers; the repatriation of any members of the crew where they are left stranded in foreign ports; and several other items.

These various companies contribute in proportion to their tonnage to a fund which is used to cover all of this class of losses. There is no profit derived from the business whatever, it being purely mutual, the payments being made by assessment; yet if there is an excess over the losses for any one year, possibly on account of the fact that certain losses have not been adjudicated, those funds are invested or deposited and draw interest.

It is not proposed, as Senators will see by this amendment, to prevent the paying of taxes upon those invested funds, but the amounts paid by these companies are in no sense profits, and could not be considered as profits; yet under the decision of the Treasury, which is being contested and which the Treasury experts who have been assisting the committee say is erroneous, they have been considered as income, and therefore taxable. This amendment simply makes clear what is very doubtful now, and declares that these assessments paid by these companies into this common fund for their mutual protection and not for profit are not income, and are therefore not taxable. The committee has considered this provision to some extent and, I believe, is perfectly willing to have it adopted.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I can not say that I have looked thoroughly into the proposition of the Senator from West Virginia, who is a member of the committee, but I have had it very carefully explained to me by some of the gentlemen concerned, who are all very reputable business men, and I am entirely willing to accept the amendment in order to get it to conference, anyhow, where we can have an opportunity to consider it further.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from West Virginia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the vote by which the amendment in line 3, page 37, was agreed to is reconsidered, and the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I desire to offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The READING CLERK. On page 16, paragraph (b), section 204, strike out lines 10 to 20, inclusive, and in lieu thereof insert the following:

(b) If for any taxable year beginning after January 1, 1920, it appears upon the production of evidence satisfactory to the commissioner that any taxpayer has sustained a net loss, the amount of such net loss shall, under regulations prescribed by the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, be deducted from the net income of the taxpayer for the preceding taxable year; and the taxes imposed by this act or by Title III of the revenue act of 1918 for such preceding taxable year shall be redetermined accordingly. Any amount found to be due to the taxpayer upon the basis of such redetermination shall be credited or refunded to the taxpayer in accordance with the provisions of section 252 of the revenue act of 1918. If such net loss is in excess of the net income for such preceding taxable year the amount of such excess shall, under regulations prescribed by the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, be allowed as a deduction in computing the net income for the succeeding taxable year: Provided, however, That the provisions of this relief shall not be accorded more than once to the same taxpayer.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, this amendment is intended to afford the same relief to the unfortunate business man, farmer, or stockman of 1920 that the law already gives to the taxpayer of 1919, and which is also provided for in this bill for the taxpayer of 1921. The demand comes from a great many business men, farmers, and stockmen of the Middle West. They have asked me to present to the Senate this appeal for relief made by the Associated Industries of Kansas, which is the leading business organization of our State. It is a very short appeal, and I shall ask the privilege of presenting it to the Senate. It reads:

ASSOCIATED INDUSTRIES OF KANSAS,
OFFICE OF SECRETARY,
Topeka, October 7, 1921.

DEAR MR. ———: We want to call your attention to a matter of very great interest to the business interests of the whole Middle West. The business men of the country have suffered great losses in the readjustment, now in progress, following war conditions. In the readjustment the business losses occurred first along the Atlantic seaboard, and about a year later throughout the Middle West, and still another year later along the Pacific coast.

In the revenue act of 1918 a relief provision was inserted which authorized any taxpayer who made a net loss during any taxable year beginning October 31, 1918, and ending before January 1, 1920, to have a redetermination of his income taxes for the preceding year, and to offset his net losses against his income for that year. And, further, if upon such redetermination there was a balance due the taxpayer he could have the amount refunded from the Treasury or credited to his income for the subsequent year.

The proposed revenue act for 1921 contains a relief provision which authorizes a taxpayer who makes a net loss for any taxable year beginning after December 31, 1920, to offset such net loss against his income for the subsequent year, and if there is a balance to his credit it may be carried on to another subsequent year. You will note that business losses occurring between January 1, 1920, and December 31 of the same year are not relieved against. It chances that the bulk of business losses for the period for which no relief is given, to wit, from January 1 to December 31, 1920, occurred in the Middle West, so that by the action of the two revenue measures a gross discrimination is made against the business men of the Middle West. We are asking to have the revenue measure of 1921, which is still under consideration in the Senate, amended so as to do away with this discrimination. It means a great deal to the business men of our section. It is no more than equitable and just that our business men should be given the same relief as those in other sections of the country.

Very truly, yours,

HARRY SHARP, Secretary.

Mr. President, as the law now stands, it skips over the year 1920. We ask that the taxpayers for the year 1920 have the same credit that is accorded those who lost in the years 1919 and 1921. It seems to me it is a fair and reasonable request these people make.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I do not know just how the losses which occurred during the latter months of 1920 could be apportioned among the several sections of the United States. I do know that in the latter part of 1920 we had a great many delegations, mostly from the East rather than from the West, asking that the 1919 provision should be applied to the 1920 losses and that the 1920 losses might be deducted from any gains made in 1921. The committee made an investigation of that subject, and they could not deny that from the ordinary standpoint there could be no just reason for making the difference between 1919 and 1920, and 1921 and 1922. Under the proposed law, if there is a loss in 1921, it may be deducted, as the Senator has stated, from the gains of 1922.

But there is another very serious feature. I just asked the experts from the Treasury Department what this would mean, and asked them if it would go into $40,000,000 or $50,000,000. The reply was that it would be hundreds of millions. I asked then if it would be $100,000,000. They said that hundreds of millions of dollars would be affected by this change.

We have been struggling pretty hard for the last month in order to save a half a million here and half a million there, and although it is hard on a person who made a loss in 1920 that he can not deduct that loss from a gain made in 1921, it does mean over $100,000,000 loss to the Treasury of the United States, and notwithstanding the fact that otherwise it would seem to be just, I can not see where we would get that $100,000,000 or $150,000,000 or $200,000,000 back into the Treasury.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I would like to ask the acting chairman of the committee what provisions we have in the bill regarding losses. Do we make that provision retroactive? Do we just restrict it to the particular year, the tax year?

Mr. McCUMBER. Under the proposed provision of the law, as I recall it, although I do not have it exactly in mind, the losses for one year may be deducted from the gains of a future year; but that is prospective only. It does not go back and change the past law, so as to allow a loss that was made in 1920 to be deducted from a gain made in 1921.

Mr. TRAMMELL. The bill as it stands at present does not permit deductions which may be retroactive; for amortization, for instance?

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not quite understand the proposition made by the Senator.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Under the bill as it now stands, it does not permit, I have just gathered from the statement, that you may take a loss that is retroactive, but it does permit a taxpayer to go back and charge off for amortization?

Mr. SMOOT. Only for the existing year.

Mr. McCUMBER. It charges that off each year for the losses of that particular year. I do not understand a man can go back and charge off against 1921 gains a loss by amortization in 1920. That 1920 amortization will have been deducted already from the 1920 gains.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I got the impression that it did permit that, because I think it permits a man to revise his request. I am under that impression, but I am probably mistaken.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator will remember there was an amendment agreed to the other day that limited the amortization to claims for 1918 and 1919. Any claim after that, by the acceptation of the amendment offered by the junior Senator from Utah, is barred entirely.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I was not aware of that amendment. I did not happen to notice at the time it was adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. Amend the committee amendment on page 226 by adding after the word "drugs," in line 6, the following proviso:

Provided, That the provisions of this section shall not be construed as requiring an importer of coca leaves who is also a manufacturer of any compound, salt, derivative, or preparation thereof, to pay any internal-revenue tax on such coca leaves heretofore or hereafter imported and removed exclusively for manufacturing purposes by such importer and manufacturer, but nothing herein contained shall relieve such importer and manufacturer from the payment of any import duty on such coca leaves or internal-revenue tax on any compound, salt, derivative, or preparation thereof.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would suggest to the Senator from Missouri that the first step must be to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the committee was agreed to.

Mr. SPENCER. If the Chair will permit me, my amendment can be framed as a new section by the change of a word eliminating the word "Provided" at the beginning of the amendment and striking out the words "this section," and inserting the words "section 1004." That will obviate the necessity of a reconsideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri as modified.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, this is about the same proposition as that advanced by the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] under a different guise. It was very carefully considered by the committee and can not be entertained by the committee. The whole subject belongs to the regulation of the tariff bill and should be brought up when that measure comes before the Senate or is considered in the committee. If the Senator from Missouri has any views upon the subject when the tariff measure is taken up by the committee, which will be on Thursday, the committee will give them very careful consideration.

Mr. SPENCER. The difficulty of the position of the Senator from Pennsylvania, as I see it, is that this bill is dealing with the question. Whether the tariff bill ever will or not is a problem of the future.

Mr. PENROSE. The committee and everyone conversant with the subject entirely disagree with the Senator from Missouri and hold the view that this proposition is very improperly in the revenue revision bill.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, I would like to present for the judgment of the Senate one or two simple facts in connection with the amendment. I defer to the better judgment of the Senator from Pennsylvania certainly on matters of finance and tariff, and yet what does this provision of the bill do?

Cocaine is made from coca leaves. All coca leaves are imported. We have none in this country. This bill, not the tariff bill but this bill, says to the American manufacturer, "We will charge you 1 cent an ounce on all coca leaves that you bring into the country, even though you bring them here not for the purpose of sale but for the purpose of manufacture or transformation into cocaine, and then we will tax the cocaine after you have made it."

I do not believe the bill ever intended to tax coca leaves when they were brought here merely for the purpose of transformation into cocaine, but that is the way the bill reads and that is the way the department has construed it. What follows? It follows that when the American manufacturers import coca leaves it takes 10 pounds of coca leaves to make 1 ounce of cocaine, and they are charged 1 cent an ounce on their coca leaves. The mathematics are simple. There are 160 ounces in the 10 pounds, so they are charged $1.60 on the coca leaves which they are to transform into cocaine. Then they are charged in addition 10 cents a pound on the coca leaves, which is the tariff. That is $1 more. Then they are charged 1 cent for the ounce of cocaine which they make. Add them together. The American manufacturer before he has put an ounce of work on it is charged under the provisions of this bill $1.60 for his coca leaves, 10 cents a pound tariff, or $1, making $2.60, and then 1 cent for the ounce of cocaine that he produces, a total of $2.61.

What does he come in competition with? When the foreign manufacturer makes cocaine and brings the completed manufactured article over here and sells the cocaine what is he charged? He is charged $2 an ounce on his cocaine and 1 cent excise duty besides, making a total of $2.01, as against the $2.61 which the American manufacturer is charged.

Now, what would be the effect of my amendment? All that the amendment does is to provide that when coca leaves are brought into this country, not for the purpose of consumption nor of use but merely for the purpose of manufacturing or transformation into the finished product, the finished product shall be taxed, but that the raw material, the coca leaf, shall not be taxed. That is fundamental in tariff as I have learned it from the Senator from Pennsylvania. The proposition of putting this tax on the coca leaves as they come into this country as raw material has no foundation in the logical principles of tariff legislation.

The amendment I propose does nothing more than to relieve the manufacturer of cocaine in the United States from a tax upon the coca leaves which he receives and transforms into cocaine and puts the tax on cocaine when the transformation is complete. He ought not to be subject to the tax upon the raw material. How that is alone a question of tariff with that provision in the pending bill is difficult for me to understand.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I presented in committee exactly the same amendment that the Senator from Missouri now offers to the bill. It was considered. It deals only with the matter of imported coca leaves. Of course, as the Senator has said, they are all imported, but it is a matter of importations and tariff. It appeared to me and I think I was satisfied that there was an injustice that ought to be corrected. I think the committee were satisfied with that, but they agreed and I was compelled to agree with them that it belonged to the domain of tariff legislation and that it was a modification of the tariff laws, and there is where the real remedy would lie. The committee considered it improper at that time, even though I attempted, as the Senator is now attempting at this time, to engraft it upon this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. As the Chair understands the Senator from Missouri has modified his amendment so as to introduce it as a separate paragraph. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in behalf of the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG], I offer the following amendment to the committee amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 98, after line 14, add a new subdivision to read as follows:

(e) For the purposes of this section a domestic corporation which owns a majority of the voting stock of a foreign corporation from which it receives dividends (not deductible under section 234) in any taxable year shall be deemed to have paid the same proportion of any income, war-profits, or excess-profits taxes paid by such foreign corporation to any foreign country or to any possession of the United States, upon or with respect to the accumulated profits of such foreign corporation from which such dividends were paid, which the amount of such dividends bears to the amount of such accumulated profits: Provided, That the credit allowed to any domestic corporation under this subdivision shall in no case exceed the same proportion of the taxes against which it is credited, which the amount of such dividends bears to the amount of the entire net income of the domestic corporation in which such dividends are included. The term "accumulated profits" when used in this subdivision in reference to a foreign corporation means the amount of its gains, profits, or income in excess of the income, war-profits, and excess-profits taxes imposed upon or with respect to such profits or income; and the commissioner with the approval of the Secretary shall have full power to determine from the accumulated profits of what year or years such dividends were paid; treating dividends paid in the first 60 days of any year as having been paid from the accumulated profits of the preceding year or years (unless to his satisfaction shown otherwise), and in other respects treating dividends as having been paid from the most recently accumulated gains, profits, or earnings. In the case of a foreign corporation, the income, war-profits, and excess-profits taxes of which are determined on the basis of an accounting period of less than one year, the word "year" as used in this subdivision shall be construed to mean such accounting period.

On page 98, line 15, strike out "(e)" and insert "(f)."

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, my attention has been called to this amendment, and I know it has been very carefully drawn. I am entirely willing to accept it.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, some Senator representing the majority who is familiar with the amendment should explain to the Senate what it is for. It is difficult just from hearing it read at the Clerk's desk to catch the full meaning.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator desires, I will read a brief statement explaining just what the amendment is, or if the Senator prefers merely a brief statement——

Mr. SIMMONS. Read the explanation.

Mr. SMOOT. This is the explanation of the amendment.

This amendment extends the credit for foreign income and profits taxes paid, to a domestic corporation which owns a majority of the voting stock of a foreign subsidiary, from which subsidiary the domestic corporation receives taxable dividends.

In such a case a foreign subsidiary is much like a foreign branch of an American corporation. If the American corporation owned a foreign branch, it would include the earnings or profits of such branch in its total income, but it would also be entitled to deduct from the tax based upon such income any income or profits taxes paid to foreign countries by the branch in question. Without special legislation, however, no credit can be obtained where the branch is incorporated under foreign laws.

Since the foreign subsidiary may not send back to the American parent company all of its profits or earnings, it follows that the American parent company should not obtain a credit for all the income and profits taxes paid to foreign countries by the European subsidiary. The amendment in question grants only a partial or prorated credit.

I will say in passing, that is all the change there is in the existing law.

Mr. POMERENE. That is, that it allows credit for the moneys actually received here in the country by the parent company?

Mr. SMOOT. By the parent company, and does not give them credit for all that they may make in a foreign country upon their business, but only that portion of it which they send to this country.

Mr. POMERENE. To put it in another way, certain of its profits could be passed to surplus over there, and if not distributed in dividends, then the parent company would not receive credit for that part which went to surplus.

Mr. SMOOT. That is the case in a nutshell. As I have said, the only change in the existing law is as to the prorating of gains which may be made by the foreign subsidiary. The explanation of the amendment continues:

Assume that the foreign corporation accumulated a surplus of $200,000 upon which it has paid income and profits taxes of $80,000, leaving $120,000 of disposable or distributable surplus. Assume further that it actually pays dividends to the American parent company of $50,000, i. e., of five-twelfths of its disposable surplus. Then the American parent company may take credit for five-twelfths of the $80,000 taxes which the foreign subsidiary paid, i. e., it may take a credit for $33,333.33.

In order to protect the American tax, a further limitation is established. It is provided that the credit allowed to the American parent company shall in no case exceed the same proportion of the American tax which the amount of dividends (from the foreign subsidiary) bears to the entire net income of the American parent company. Suppose the total income of the American company is $400,000 and the total American tax is $60,000. Of this total income, $50,000, or one-eighth, consists of dividends from the foreign company. Obviously the foreign credit should not be permitted to wipe out or cancel a tax based upon purely American income. In order to prevent abuse, therefore, the entire credit in question is further limited so that it can not exceed one-eighth of the American tax; i. e., in this particular illustration, can not exceed one-eighth of $60,000, or $7,500.

A provision of this kind, giving the credit to a domestic corporation which owns a majority of the voting stock of a foreign corporation, is contained in section 240(c) of the revenue act of 1918. The amendment here under discussion merely reincorporates this credit in the proposed revenue act of 1921, with safeguards designed to protect the American tax as above described. In short, the amendment in question is merely an improved version of an existing provision of law.

Mr. SIMMONS. With that statement of the purpose and effect of the amendment, I shall have no objection to it. I think it is entirely fair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] on behalf of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 81, after the word "title" in line 25, it is proposed to insert:

or corporations organized exclusively for cooperative home ownership, and which require that all occupants of any part of the buildings owned shall be pro rata owners of its entire issue of shares.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, this amendment is to that part of the bill which provides a tax on corporations. There are certain exemptions from taxation in the case of corporations, such as mutual saving banks, cooperative building and loan associations, and the profits of other corporations that are purely mutual. This amendment exempts from the corporation tax the profits on homes that are owned and occupied by two or more families.

In my section of the country there are a great many buildings which are constructed for three, four, five, six, or eight families. Those buildings in some cases are too expensive for one person to buy, but a half dozen families purchase them. The amendment provides that the building must be occupied exclusively by the owners; it would not apply if the building were occupied, for instance, by four of the owners and two apartments were rented to others. Where the amendment applies the profits of the building are exempt from the corporation tax.

What may the profits be? I know of a number of buildings which have been sold in the way I have indicated. Each family is charged so much a month per room and the fund so accumulated goes into the general treasury of the corporation. Then, at the end of the year, after the interest and taxes have been paid, the surplus that may remain is distributed among the stockholders. They could avoid the tax, Mr. President, by each one at the end of the year contributing his pro rata share toward the expense of carrying the property, but it has become the practice for them to pay monthly. Then, at the end of the year there is returned to them as a dividend the amount which is collected over and above the expenses incurred in carrying and maintaining the property. The amendment, if adopted, it seems to me, will encourage the cooperative ownership of dwellings, and promote home ownership, which I think is a very laudable object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair desires to state that the amendment offered by the Senator from New York is not in order until the vote by which the committee amendment was adopted shall have been reconsidered.

Mr. CALDER. I ask unanimous consent that that may be done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York asks unanimous consent that the vote by which the committee amendment was adopted may be reconsidered. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The question now is upon the amendment offered by the Senator from New York to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question. Suppose a building is projected, is completed, and occupied by three families, and the residue of the building is leased, from which lease profits are derived?

Mr. CALDER. That is distinctly forbidden under the terms of the amendment, I will say to the Senator. In order to secure the benefit of the amendment the building must be occupied entirely by its owners.

Mr. KING. It seems to me we are loading this bill up with exemptions and exceptions until finally there will be no taxes to be obtained.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, a corporation owning a building of this character could avoid paying any taxes if they refrained from contributing a monthly rental, as it were, or making a monthly contribution toward the payment of the expenses. What they do is this: They pay a certain sum each month into a general treasury, out of which the expenses of maintaining the property are paid, and then at the end of the year there are paid back as dividends such amounts as appear to be in excess of the actual expenses. It would seem to me, Mr. President, that the adoption of such an amendment would be in the direction of encouraging home ownership.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CALDER. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. My attention has been called to this amendment heretofore; but I should like to ask the Senator, where an excess amount is paid and that amount is invested—and it may be invested in real estate mortgages or it may be deposited in a bank and draw interest, and the fund thereby produces an income—why should not that income be taxed?

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I would be very glad to put every safeguard around the amendment to prevent that very thing being done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I had before me a copy of the amendment which the Senator from New York advises me is not the amendment he has now offered. He informs me that the amendment has been modified. I should like to see it in modified form.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I ask to have the section read as it would be if amended by the addition of the amendment of the Senator from New York.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read as requested.

The READING CLERK. On page 81, after line 19, it is proposed to insert:

(12) Corporations organized for the exclusive purpose of holding title to property, collecting income therefrom, and turning over the entire amount thereof, less expenses, to an organization which itself is exempt from the tax imposed by this title;

Then follows the amendment of the Senator from New York—

or corporations organized exclusively for cooperative home ownership, and which require that all occupants of any part of the buildings owned shall be pro rata owners of its entire issue of shares.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I wish the Senator would explain again exactly who he is attempting to relieve from taxation. Is it intended to relieve the individual who makes the sale or is it intended to relieve others?

Mr. CALDER. A great many buildings in and about New York City constructed for two or more families are purchased by a group of families. If the building, for instance, is erected for six families six families buy the property; they pay for it and occupy it. My amendment provides that relief shall only be afforded if those who actually own the building—and it must be a dwelling house; business properties are not included—shall occupy it themselves.

Mr. McCUMBER. What is the relief afforded?

Mr. CALDER. The relief is this: In most of these houses each occupant, the owner of a share of the house, is required to pay into a general fund so much each month per room during the year; they are assessed that much. At the end of the year the expense of carrying the property is paid, including taxes; interest on the mortgage, if any; water taxes; insurance premiums; and then whatever is left as an apparent profit is turned back to the owners in proportion to the amount they have paid in. They could relieve themselves from having that excess amount taxed if during the year they paid only enough in to the general treasury to meet the expenses of the property; but in order to assure every item of expense being properly taken care of, they often pay a little more. In order to relieve them from taxation on the surplus which they may contribute and which is returned to them, I offer the amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will state to the Senator that as modified his amendment is very much worse than the original amendment, because the original amendment provided "whereof the entire capital stock shall be held by the stockholders in proportion to the number of rooms occupied or to be occupied by them in the apartment building."

The provision in regard to the ownership of the capital stock has been entirely eliminated, and there is now in the amendment no requirement of that kind. If this amendment is adopted, what will the result be? Suppose an apartment house contains eight apartments and that an assessment of $500 is made each year for maintenance and other expenses of the entire building?

Mr. CALDER. Five hundred dollars upon each family?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; upon each family, or, we will say, a thousand dollars, for it makes no difference, the principle being the same. If the amount paid in by each one of the families were a thousand dollars, that would make a total of $8,000. Suppose it only costs $2,000 for expenses and to maintain the building, then the owners of the property would have $6,000 which they could put out at interest, and the interest collected from that investment would not pay a tax in any form. I can not see any object in allowing such an exemption as that.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, that is the reason why I asked the Senator to let me know definitely who would secure relief from taxation, and in this instance it seems to me to be the seller of the property, if he owns a stock interest in it.

Mr. CALDER. Oh, no, Mr. President; no one would secure any relief except the occupants of the house in proportion to the number of rooms occupied by them. I am perfectly willing if it will satisfy Senators to ask that there be added to the amendment I have offered the words—but such corporations shall be subject as other persons to be taxed upon their net incomes from interest, dividends, and rents.

So that if they have money invested or if rent is collected from others than the owners of the property they will be subject to a tax upon the income so derived.

Mr. McCUMBER. Let me ask the Senator if he would not be willing to offer his first amendment?

Mr. CALDER. That would be perfectly agreeable to me.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator offers his first amendment I should certainly want the modification he has suggested added to it.

Mr. LENROOT. The first amendment plus the modification.

Mr. CALDER. That would be perfectly agreeable to me.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator will offer his original amendment and then add the proviso as a part of the amendment I shall have no objection at all.

Mr. CALDER. I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment submitted a moment ago, and in lieu thereof I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SPENCER in the chair). Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. POMERENE. Let me ask the Senator a question or two. Do I understand that the people who occupy these apartments are the stockholders of the corporation?

Mr. CALDER. Yes, sir; they are the stockholders.

Mr. POMERENE. How many cases of that kind are there?

Mr. CALDER. I know of several hundred houses in and around New York City which have been sold in that way.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Let me say, if I may, that there are a great many apartment buildings in this city handled in the same way. Apartments are being sold in various apartment houses, and offices are even being sold in office buildings. For instance, in the Southern Building, on the corner of Fifteenth and H Streets, all of the rooms are being sold out in the same way so that the occupants of the building will be the owners of the building.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I may say that is a constantly growing practice and very desirable one.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, under the amendment as now submitted, the owner of the stock will be exempt from any taxation. I am not objecting particularly to that at this time, although we do not know how far the plan upon which we are entering is going to go. As long as houses are so scarce in this country, however, if any inducement can be given to people to build them, I am perfectly willing to give it for a few years.

Without the latter part of the amendment, the owner of the house could have made the interest upon the difference and taken that and been exempt from all forms of taxation.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I have no desire to "put anything over" on the Senate. I am very glad the suggestion was made that in case there are any profits, and they are invested in outside properties, they shall be taxed, or that in case any part of the building in question is rented, that income shall be taxed.

I think the amendment is perfectly clear now, and I hope it will be agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. After the word "title," it is proposed to insert:

Or corporations organized exclusively for the purpose of cooperative home ownership whereof the entire capital stock shall be held by the stockholders in proportion to the number of rooms occupied or to be occupied by them in the apartment building owned by the corporation, and in which building all apartments or flats have been leased to stockholders of the corporation; but such corporations shall be subject as other persons to the tax upon their net income from interest, dividends, and rents.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I am willing to support this amendment for the time being. I can not, however, agree that the plan of buying individual apartments is very desirable, even though it may be for the purpose of securing homes under present conditions.

What the Senator says is true, that the owners of many apartment houses and office buildings are disposing of the several apartments in each building, so that a family may buy an apartment. They are disposing of them at the present high cost of construction. They are disposing of them in good time, before the crash comes which will immensely lower rents and costs of building in this city as elsewhere, and the individuals are paying mighty high prices to-day for their interests in these buildings.

That, however, is not the worst feature of it. Personally, I do not like apartments very well. I admit it. I still believe in the old-fashioned American home, where there is room enough to stray around. In buying these apartments you buy an apartment of two or three or four or five rooms. Somebody else buys the apartment next to you. You can not get away from your neighbor. It does not make any difference how thin the walls may be, or how long you can hear him snore during the night, you are elected to remain there the rest of your life. No matter how disagreeable your neighbors are you are caught in that trap and you must make the best of it.

I disagree with those Senators who say it is a healthy condition. It certainly is not a healthy condition for the fellow who has to hear the snoring during the night in the adjoining room for the rest of his life.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield.

Mr. CALDER. It is a healthy thing to encourage home-owning and home-building, is it not?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; homes, little homes, I do not care how small they are provided each individual owns his own real home, and it is a home and not a mere stall to live in.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, if I may make a suggestion, I have been advised that this condition prevails here in the District of Columbia to some extent, but it has also been suggested to me that it is one of the methods that are adopted to defeat the rent commission law here in the District.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I think myself this is rather dangerous legislation. I think this is an amendment that will lead to evasion; and while I do not wish to discuss it, I hope it will not prevail.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon the amendment of the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] to the amendment of the committee.

On a division, the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the committee amendment as it was before this amendment was proposed will be agreed to. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, as in Committee of the Whole, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I desire to offer the manufacturers' sales tax while the bill is in the Committee of the Whole; but I am compelled to take one of the bills to-night and mark out all of the provisions that the sales tax will eliminate, and I shall also have to take notice of every amendment that has been made, and it is impossible for me to do that until after the amendments have been agreed to. I have had the amendment printed, and since it was printed I have had to make three changes already. Therefore it does seem to me that I had better have it correct before I offer it; and I am going to ask the Senator in charge of the bill, if there are no other amendments to be offered to the bill as in Committee of the Whole——

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. Mr. President, as I am advised, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] intends to offer his amendment on the bonus question while the bill is in Committee of the Whole. I have just been told by Col. Halsey that, not anticipating that it would be reached this evening, he has gone home.

Mr. McCUMBER. If the Senator will allow me, I think it was understood that the Senator from Missouri does not desire to offer that amendment until to-morrow.

Mr. MOSES. In the Senate?

Mr. McCUMBER. No; in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. KING. The Senate knows that the Senator from Missouri has been quite occupied for some time, and I think he has perhaps taxed himself rather severely.

Mr. McCUMBER. I appreciate that, and do not desire to press the matter; but I understand that there are a number of other little amendments that I should like to dispose of this evening before we recess.

Mr. KING. To be sure. I simply wanted to protect the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. McCUMBER. He will be protected.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President, I have an amendment which has been printed, and which was argued at some length when the bill was first brought into the Senate. It proposes to strike out the provision which requires the husband in the community-property States to include in his income that of his wife.

Some of the Senators whose constituencies are interested in this matter happen to be away. There are eight States involved. The Senators from those States did not expect the amendment to come up this evening. If the Senator in charge of the bill will consent that the amendment may be offered to-morrow as in Committee of the Whole I shall appreciate it very much, because some of the Senators who were here all day left here just a few minutes ago, not thinking that the matter would be reached.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair informs the Senator from Louisiana that amendments can be offered when the bill is before the Senate, irrespective of whether they have been offered as in Committee of the Whole or not.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Yes; I understand that, Mr. President, but I desire to offer this amendment as in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of discussion; and then we may have another opportunity, if we decide to do so, to offer it in the Senate itself in open session. We do not care to waive the opportunity of discussion, because this is a subject which we think the Senators from the common-law States do not fully understand. We should like to discuss it so that our position may be known, and I make the request that this amendment may be permitted to come up to-morrow as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. McCUMBER. Of course, I shall not press it if the Senator is not ready, nor shall I ask to press it this evening; but I hope that among these amendments there may be some to which there will be no objection and on which there will be no long discussion and that those may be disposed of this evening.

REPORT OF SOUTH CAROLINA BOLL WEEVIL COMMISSION.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent, out of order, to report favorably from the Committee on Printing Senate resolution 158. I further ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I have no objection to the report being presented. I think it is very proper, but I object to the present consideration of the resolution.

Mr. MOSES. I hope the Senator will not press that objection until there may be some explanation.

Mr. ASHURST. I shall be very glad to withhold it.

Mr. MOSES. This is a resolution for reprinting, with several additions, a Senate document which was printed some years ago, but which is now out of print. Under ordinary circumstances I could, in my capacity as chairman of the Joint Committee on Printing, issue an order for its reprinting; but it so happens that it deals with a subject of considerable importance to a wide section of the country, namely, the ravages of the cotton boll weevil, and there happen to have been discovered, in the interim since the first printing of the report and the present time, certain things——

Mr. ASHURST. The explanation is very satisfactory, and I withdraw the objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The objection is withdrawn. The report will be received.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, just a word. It will be observed, of course, that I am peculiar in that I always want to know what the Senate is doing before I give consent.

Mr. MOSES. May I add, that with the Senator's newly discovered passion for agriculture, he, of course, is interested.

Mr. ASHURST. I belong to the agricultural bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution.

The resolution was considered by the Senate and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the manuscript entitled "Report of the South Carolina Boll Weevil Commission, Bulletin No. 20, of Clemson Agricultural College, of South Carolina," be printed with accompanying illustrations and corrections to date as a Senate document.

TAX REVISION.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8245) to reduce and equalize taxation, to amend and simplify the revenue act of 1918, and for other purposes.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, there is some confusion as to the method of procedure. I was advised an hour ago that we should all remain here; that we would not adjourn until 11 o'clock. With that I heartily concurred, and congratulated the chairman of the Committee on Finance, who conveyed that information; and I, in turn, advised a number of Senators who have gone home to return, as we would work here until 11 o'clock. If it is now proposed that we shall adjourn, there are a large number of amendments——

Mr. LENROOT. Let us go on.

Mr. ASHURST. I was just going to say that I wanted to know something about what the procedure is going to be. If the Senate wants to adjourn, I have no disposition to tire it with the discussion of amendments; but in view of the fact that I told a number of Senators that I had been assured by the chairman of the Committee on Finance that we would work until 11 o'clock, and they will come back here and find the Senate adjourned, if it does adjourn, I would be in a position which I would not particularly care to occupy. If no Senator has an amendment at this particular time, I should like to propose an amendment, if it is in order at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I move to amend the bill by adding, at the appropriate place in the bill, a new section, in the words which I send to the desk. I will ask to have the Secretary state the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the proposed amendment.

The READING CLERK. It is proposed to add, at the proper place in the bill, the following as a new section:

That the Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau is hereby authorized to provide additional hospital and out-patient dispensary facilities for persons who served in the World War and are patients of the United States Veterans' Bureau, by construction on sites now owned by the Government or on sites to be acquired by purchase, condemnation, gift, or otherwise, such hospitals and out-patient dispensary facilities to include the necessary buildings and auxiliary structures, mechanical equipment, approach work, roads, and trackage facilities leading thereto, vehicles, live stock, furniture, equipment, and accessories, and also to provide accommodations for officers, nurses, and attending personnel, and the Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau is authorized to accept gifts or donations for any of the purposes named therein. Such hospital plants shall be of fireproof construction, and the location and nature thereof, whether for the treatment of tuberculous, neuropsychiatric, or general medical and surgical cases, shall be in the discretion of the Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau.

That for carrying into effect the preceding paragraph relating to additional hospital facilities there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $16,000,000, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended.

That the Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau is hereby authorized and directed to turn over from the money authorized to be appropriated in the preceding paragraph a sum not to exceed $500,000 to the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall use such moneys for extending the facilities of United States Public Health Service Hospital No. 32, Washington, D. C., by constructing such additional buildings as are necessary to make the same an equipped 400-bed hospital, such additional construction to include one ward building and quarters for necessary personnel, and such miscellaneous work, including improvement of the grounds, as may be necessary, and to acquire such additional land adjoining the hospital as may be necessary for this development: Provided, however, That not to exceed $50,000 of the said $500,000 shall be used in the acquisition of such additional land.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I am prompted to bring this subject to the attention of the Senate because of its seriousness. I have received a telegram from the governor of Arizona which I will ask the Secretary to read at the desk; and before the Secretary reads I will say that the governor of Arizona is a gentleman of excellent judgment and he knows the facts in this case.

The reading clerk read as follows:

PHOENIX, ARIZ., October 17, 1921.

Senator HENRY F. ASHURST,
Washington, D. C.:

Director Forbes of Veterans' Bureau has submitted report to President strongly urging immediate action to meet present emergency arising from needs of hundreds of disabled former service men who, with approach of winter, are pouring into Arizona, where facilities for their care are very inadequate. He recommends immediate completion of Whipple building program through letting of contracts, it being obvious that under system now in effect winter will be well over before any of the buildings now under construction will be ready for occupancy. Maj. Louis T. Grant, manager Veterans' Bureau, twelfth district, is now in Washington, and I therefore urge that Arizona congressional delegation take prompt action, conferring with Maj. Grant and Director Forbes and calling on the President, bringing strongly to his attention the desperate situation in which these men find themselves and pointing out necessity for immediate action along following lines: Speeding up of construction program at Whipple, establishment of vocational-training center at Prescott, acquirement of additional hospital facilities at Phoenix, and construction of cottages at Tucson to accommodate approximately 300 more patients. The need is very real, and I urgently bespeak your hearty cooperation.

THOMAS E. CAMPBELL,
Governor.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, upon receiving this telegram from Gov. Campbell I interviewed Director Forbes, of the United States Veterans' Bureau, and he advised me that the governor had not overstated nor misstated the emergency which exists in Arizona; that he and Maj. Grant had just returned from a personal investigation, and had found all that Gov. Campbell had stated in that telegram to be true, and Col. Forbes urged me to lay the entire matter before the President. I called upon the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, Col. Clifford, and laid the entire subject before him, and I ask that his letter be included in the RECORD at this juncture.

There being no objection, the letter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

(In re Whipple Barracks, Ariz., United States Public Health Service Hospital.)

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, October 20, 1921.

Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Reference is made to the conference on the 19th instant at this department in regard to telegram of the 17th addressed to you from Gov. Campbell, of Arizona, in which he refers to a report submitted by Director Forbes, of the United States Veterans' Bureau, to the President, and requests the speeding up of the construction program at the United States Public Health Service Hospital, Whipple Barracks, Ariz., the establishment of a vocational training center at Prescott (Whipple Barracks), the acquirement of additional hospital facilities at Phoenix, and the construction of patients' cottages at Tucson.

With one exception the specific work requested falls under the jurisdiction of the Veterans' Bureau, but this department will render assistance to Director Forbes to the extent possible.

In regard to the criticism of the building operations at Whipple Barracks, and especially the following paragraph quoted from the governor's telegram, "He (Director Forbes) recommends immediate completion of Whipple building program through letting of contracts, it being obvious that under system now in effect winter will be well over before any of the buildings now under construction will be ready for occupancy," it appears necessary to go somewhat into detail to make the situation clear.

The Office of the Supervising Architect, this department, is in charge of all hospital construction work, and Whipple Barracks is one of 11 large projects so far authorized. Like the majority of the projects, Whipple Barracks involves the remodeling of existing buildings and the construction of new buildings. The method adopted for all this hospital construction is to immediately, after release of the project by the consultants on hospitalization, gather from the Public Health Service such drawings and reports of existing facilities and proposed improvements as may be in its possession. As Whipple Barracks was an Army post, prints of existing buildings were also obtained from the War Department. Immediately after the collection of these data studies of the problem were made and the preliminary scheme developed in collaboration with the consultants and the Public Health Service. It is evident that the information thus obtained must be supplemented by a local survey, and for this purpose an architect and an engineer, as well as a superintendent of construction, were sent to Whipple Barracks, and as it is no light task to obtain all information necessary, and as the distance from Washington is great, a considerable time was necessarily consumed. This, however, does not mean that nothing was done in the interim. On the contrary, the preparation of drawings proceeded to the point possible without local data and, in fact, drawings for some buildings were placed in the hands of the superintendent before the survey of the station was entirely completed, with instructions to take off quantities and obtain bids for materials and start construction under the purchase and hire method.

Obviously, this is the only way by which the construction could be expedited, and it is difficult to understand why so much criticism has been directed against this method under which satisfactory results have been obtained, as will be noted by the inclosed photographs.

At Whipple Barracks the program is to carry out under the purchase and hire method the construction of three ambulant buildings, the enlargement of the laundry, new mess hall, converting present post exchange into neuropsychiatric ward, installation of additional fire protection, remodeling nurses' quarters, enlarging boiler house, construction of steam tunnels, and extension of the sewerage system, at an estimated cost of $211,500. This work is now 43 per cent completed.

The work to be let by contract is the following: Two semiambulant buildings, six double quarters for officers, two double quarters for personnel, large dormitory for male attendants, new boilers, heating mains to new buildings, and extension of electric and telephone services, at an estimated cost of $370,500. This work was placed on the market September 29.

It should be evident to any unprejudiced person that if the purchase-and-hire method had not been employed the work would not have advanced as far as it is, and, in fact, if it had been decided to let all work by contract the probabilities are that the construction would not as yet have been started or at most would have just commenced.

To make a contract for an entire project, especially one involving a great amount of remodeling work, it is necessary to prepare drawings in great detail and describe the work so accurately and minutely in the specification as will enable bidders to prepare intelligent estimates, for which from two to three months' time is a short allowance. The work must then be advertised for at least four weeks in order to give bidders, especially those on the Pacific coast, time to check up quantities, obtain subbids, and send in proposals, and then the execution of the contract and bond will consume another 10 days or 2 weeks. Altogether at least 4 months would have been consumed from the time of the development of the scheme until the award of contract could be made, and it would appear that this department would be subject to just criticism if this interval had not been utilized to advance the work under the purchase-and-hire method.

I hope you will transmit these explanations to the governor of Arizona, so that he may have a different view of the manner of handling hospital projects, and especially the one at Whipple Barracks.

The telegram from Gov. Campbell is returned herewith.

Very truly, yours,

EDWARD CLIFFORD,
Assistant Secretary.

Mr. ASHURST. An amendment will be proposed to-morrow for the relief of ex-service men that will include the fivefold option plan of the veterans' adjusted compensation bill. I shall vote for it. I think it should be passed. But let us not forget that there are thousands of soldiers still requiring hospitalization, and who are pleading for vocational training.

Mr. President, only yesterday there was placed upon the desks of Senators Senate Report No. 233 of this Congress, signed by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SUTHERLAND], as chairman, the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WELLER], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE]. These able Senators have made a voluminous report, and undoubtedly every Senator will read it. Yet it is disappointing. In the Southwest are some of the great neuropsychiatric and tubercular hospitals; but the committee have not gone to the Southwest. I have personally visited these Senators, urged them, invited them, pleaded with them to come down and see these hospitals in the Southwest and let the ex-soldiers talk to them. I am glad that I can truthfully say that these Senators have done a good work, but I hope they will not be weary of well doing, and, after submitting this report, sit down and conclude that they have done fairly well, and stop.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the chairman of the committee for a question.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I wish to inform the Senator as to what the committee is doing along the line he is suggesting. We are calling upon the committee in charge of hospitals to tell us exactly what is being done, and what is proposed to be done in the immediate future, with reference to the $18,000,000 which Congress appropriated last spring, and then we are going to take that up with reference to a recommendaton which we have already made for additional hospitalization. We are taking that up with them in detail, and will see that ample hospital facilities are provided for those men.

Mr. ASHURST. The appropriation made by Congress for hospitalization last March was generous and proper, and my friend from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] and other Senators, as well, rendered yeoman service in assisting to secure that large appropriation for the hospitalization of ex-service men. We appropriated the sum of $18,600,000 for the hospitalization of soldiers and that sum has been spent or allocated to be spent on hospitalization.

The amendment I have introduced is a companion to the bill introduced by Mr. LANGLEY, of the House, and I will say that Col. Forbes approves the bill. No bill that could be before the Congress is of more importance than this particular one at this time. While I am enthusiastic about the bonus, and the land options and the farmsteads, and shall take pleasure, if I have an opportunity, in voting for the bonus bill, I must say that the proper hospitilization of ex-service men and the proper vocational training of the men appeal to me also.

The opportunity to learn how to earn a living, the opportunity to learn a trade, the opportunity to recover their health appeal much to me.

So I rose this evening to call this matter to the attention of the Senate. I am not now going to scold the authorities for this or that. The hospitalization work that has been done has been well done, and it has been, within some limitations, ample; but we must not forget that it was a large Army we called to the colors. The finger of duty reached out and touched four and a half million men, a large number, and we must not think just because we have five or six hospitals and there are a few vacant beds here and there that we have done enough.

I will ask for a vote upon this amendment. It appropriates $16,000,000, as requested by Director Forbes, in order that he may have at his command sufficient funds, not only for further hospitalization, the acquisition of further buildings, and the erection of additional buildings, but for the establishment of vocational training centers. If Senators prefer to have it voted upon to-morrow, after they have had an opportunity to investigate it and confer with the Treasury Department and confer with Director Forbes, I shall not ask for a vote to-night.

I have received a letter from a person in Arizona which suggests that I have been inert in this matter. Inert? I have vexed the ears of Senators for months on this very subject of proper hospitalization for ex-soldiers, of vocational training, and on this particular line. I will ask the Senate to listen while the Secretary reads a letter from the governor of Arizona on this very subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The reading clerk read as follows:

EXECUTIVE OFFICE, STATE HOUSE,
Phoenix, Ariz., October 27, 1921.

Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: This is to acknowledge and thank you for your letter of the 22d instant, transmitting letter from Col. Edward Clifford, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, in charge of public health, addressed to yourself, together with photographs of buildings now under construction at Fort Whipple. You know that your prompt action in behalf of vocational training and hospitalization in Arizona is appreciated by me far more than I can tell you in a letter of this sort.

For your information I am inclosing herewith copy of my letter to Col. Clifford concerning this matter.

With kind personal regards, and sincerely thanking you for your interest in this important work, I am,

Sincerely, yours,

THOMAS E. CAMPBELL.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, those who know the facts, as does the governor, who has telegraphed me and whose telegram I have had read, pointing out the necessity for hospitalization and vocational-training centers, can certify that I have not been idle. The Senator from Maryland, my distinguished friend [Mr. FRANCE], can testify that upon every occasion, in season and some say out of season, I have spoken and urged proper appropriations for soldiers and proper vocational-training centers. So my equanimity was not very much disturbed by the statement that I had been inert in respect to proper hospitalization for soldiers.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, the members of the committee who are investigating agencies having to do with rehabilitation of soldiers can testify that the Senator was not inert, but almost a pest in his insistence on our committee going down to Arizona.

Mr. ASHURST. That is the very expression that I would expect from a frank, upstanding member of the committee, as they all are.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator really does not expect that this amendment will go on the bill?

Mr. ASHURST. It is the only chance I have to secure its passage.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I move that the amendment be postponed indefinitely.

Mr. ASHURST. I hope the Senator will not do that. This amendment can not be waved aside in that manner.

Mr. PENROSE. Well, it can not go on the bill. It does not belong to the bill, and it will not go on the bill.

Mr. ASHURST. I will ask that it be passed over until to-morrow for a vote.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator withdraw the amendment?

Mr. ASHURST. No; I do not withdraw it. Let it be voted on to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona asks unanimous consent that the vote on his amendment be postponed until the calendar day of to-morrow.

Mr. ASHURST. Upon the day when the other amendments to this pending bill are voted upon.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, the request is highly irregular, but owing to my great admiration for the Senator's forensic ability and statesmanship attainments, I can not find it in my heart to resist or decline the request. Let it go over until to-morrow by unanimous consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the vote on the amendment offered by the Senator from Arizona will be passed over until the calendar day of to-morrow.

Mr. ASHURST. Let me understand the meaning of the phrase "calendar day of to-morrow."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senate takes a recess to-night, to-morrow will be the calendar day of to-morrow, but the legislative day of to-day will continue to-morrow.

Mr. PENROSE. I expect to ask the Senate to take a recess.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Calendar day is the proper designation. The bill is as in Committee of the Whole, and open to amendment.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I have some amendments on the desk which I would like to have presented.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada will be reported.

The READING CLERK. On page 239 strike out lines 20 to 25, inclusive; on page 240 strike out lines 1 to 7, inclusive; and insert in lieu thereof the following:

3. Capital stock, issued: On each original issue, whether on organization or reorganization, of certificates of stock, or of profits, or of interest in property or accumulations, by any corporation, on each $100 of face value or fraction thereof, 5 cents: Provided, That where a certificate is issued without face value and the actual value is over $100 per share, the tax shall be 5 cents on each $100 of actual value or fraction thereof, and in case the actual value is less than $100 per share, then the tax shall be proportionately reduced. The stamps representing the tax imposed by this subdivision shall be attached to the stock books and not to the certificates issued.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Nevada is an amendment to the committee amendment which has already been adopted. It will therefore be necessary to reconsider the vote by which the committee amendment was adopted.

Mr. PITTMAN. I did not understand the parliamentary situation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection the vote by which the committee amendment was adopted is reconsidered and the amendment of the Senator from Nevada is in order as an amendment to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I hardly think the provision of the amendment could be carried out. I think the Senator will have to change the amendment. It would be impossible of administration. This is a stamp tax, and we certainly could not have it included in the proportion which the value of the stock bears to $100. It might be seven-eighths of 1 cent, for instance, and we have no stamp of that denomination.

Mr. PITTMAN. In that case, the obligation being upon the issue of the stock to pay the full amount, I assume that he would have to pay the excess so as to obtain the stamp of the proper denomination.

Mr. SMOOT. That is not what the amendment provides. If it were attempted to be carried out, as I understand the reading of it, it would be impossible to administer it.

Mr. PITTMAN. What I am getting at is this: I propose to change the section very little. For nonpar value stocks it is assumed that they have a value of $100 a share. As a matter of fact there are a great many of these companies whose stock has a value of only $1 a share, with the result that under the provisions of the bill a great many of these small corporations with no par value stock are required to pay a stamp tax of one hundred times what it was the intention probably of Congress to cause it to pay.

Mr. SMOOT. But the Senator can plainly see that we could not have a stamp tax of one one-hundredth of 5 cents. If it was 33⅓, it would be one-third of 5 cents. We could not administer it, I will say to the Senator, under the wording of the amendment.

Mr. PITTMAN. There is very rarely a case in which one share of stock of a dollar par value is issued, but we could provide in the amendment, if the Senator desires—and I brought this up for the purpose of showing the injustice of the law—that in no case should it be less than 5 cents.

Mr. SMOOT. The same thing would apply if it was 100 shares and it was only one-third of the amount or one-third of 100 shares. If the tax was $5 it would be one-third of $5, which would be $1.66⅔.

Mr. PITTMAN. But as I said before, the obligation being upon the issue of stock to pay the full amount of tax, if it was a case where he could not split it he would have to pay the excess so as to obtain the stamps.

I have correspondence here, but I do not wish to take up the time of the Senate reading it. As the Senator from Utah knows, it is a very oppressive matter. There are a great many companies now being organized with nonpar value shares. It is the fairest and most honest way, in my opinion, to issue stock. When you issue stock as of a par value of $100 it is simply a fiction. There is probably not one in a thousand shares of stock that are issued with the fictitious value of $100 that are really worth $100. It is a deception on the face of it.

The face value of stock is of no importance whatever except possibly to deceive the purchaser. Therefore the system that is being adopted now in the organization of companies for the development of land schemes and colonization schemes is to have the shares of the corporation divided into a certain number without designating the value and then allowing the value to be assessed by the purchaser and allowing the value to increase as the property itself increases in value.

There has been a suggestion by the Senator from Utah with regard to the administrative features of the amendment, and very probably there is considerable in what he states in connection with that feature. Therefore I ask unanimous consent that this go over so I may confer with Senators and with the chairman of the committee or the experts with regard to that phase of it before again submitting it.

Mr. PENROSE. I shall not object; but it is an amendment that never can be admitted on this bill with the consent of the committee. However, it is the Senator's amendment, and if he does not wish to press it now, let it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment of the Senator from Nevada will go over.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I do not know that there are any further amendments Senators have to submit, which means the amendments contemplated to be offered by individual Senators after consideration of the committee propositions have all been offered. There only remain to be considered, so far as I know, the so-called sales-tax proposition of the senior Senator from Utah and the soldiers' bonus amendment offered by the senior Senator from Missouri. I therefore feel that nothing would be gained by going on with the revenue bill for the rest of the evening. I had expected to continue until 11 or 12 o'clock, and so informed Senators.

As practically nothing can be accomplished under the circumstances, therefore I intend to move an executive session; but before doing that I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate resumes its legislative session at the expiration of the executive session, which I shall move, it take a recess to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. PENROSE. I move the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 10 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

CHARLES RIVER BRIDGES, MASSACHUSETTS.

Mr. CALDER. I report back favorably, without amendment, from the Committee on Commerce the bill (H. R. 6152) to authorize the construction of drawless bridges across a certain portion of the Charles River, in the State of Massachusetts, and I submit a report (No. 308) thereon. I ask for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the metropolitan park commission, or any town or city, or any other public body authorized by the State of Massachusetts, all or any of them, be, and they hereby are, authorized to construct, at any time hereafter, drawless bridges across the Charles River in the State of Massachusetts connecting Massachusetts Avenue in Cambridge and Massachusetts Avenue in Boston, and at any other points upon said river at, near, or above said Massachusetts Avenue: Provided, That said bridges shall be at least 12 feet above the ordinary level of the water in the basin over the main ship channel, and the piers and other obstructions to the flow of the river shall be constructed in such form and in such places as the Secretary of War shall approve: Provided further, That before the construction of said bridges or any of them is begun, the State of Massachusetts shall, by legislative enactment, provide for adequate compensation for the owner, owners, lessee, or lessees of property abutting on said river above any of the said bridges for damages, if any, caused to said property or leasehold interests therein by reason of interference with the access by water to said property, due to the construction of bridges without draws: And provided further, That the said legislative enactment shall provide for the appointment of three commissioners to hear the parties in interest and assess the damages to said property; their decision as to the amount of damages and questions of fact to be final; said commissioners to be appointed by the Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts. Except as inconsistent herewith, this act shall be subject to the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHOCTAWHATCHEE RIVER BRIDGE, FLA.

Mr. CALDER. I also report back favorably, without amendment, from the Committee on Commerce, the bill (H. R. 8477) to extend the time for the construction of a bridge across the Choctawhatchee River, near Caryville, Fla., and I submit a report (No. 309) thereon.

There being no objection, the Senate as in Committee of the Whole proceeded to consider the bill, and it was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge and approaches thereto authorized by the act of Congress approved November 19, 1919, to be constructed by the State Road Department of the State of Florida, across the Choctawhatchee River, near Caryville, Fla., are hereby extended one and three years, respectively, from the date of approval hereof.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RECESS.

Mr. McCUMBER. I move that the Senate take a recess until to-morrow at 11 o'clock a. m.

The motion was agreed to, and (at 7 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Thursday, November 3, 1921, at 11 o'clock a. m.

NOMINATIONS.
